Some time previous to Rebekah's arrival in this country, on March 11, 1903, Mrs. Sweet was standing at the west window of our home, again looking at the sun setting, when to her great amazement a most wonderful phenomenon met her gaze. For a short time she stood transfixed; then, as she desired that I, too, should witness the beautiful sight, she called to me from the garden and I went in at once, when in her excitement she took me by the arm and led me up to the window and asked me if I could see anything unusual between us and the sun? I looked and in astonishment at what I saw, told her, "Yes, I see a lot of blue balls or orbs about eight inches in diameter," and in looking longer some of orbs assumed colors of red, pink, orange and green. Some were of different shapes and at times six or eight of the orbs would form in a cluster, seemingly attached together, moving or sailing, sometimes in one direction, then in another. None of them stood still long at a time.

What I saw was the same as Mrs. Sweet had seen them, except that before calling to me she saw several of the orbs (we called them blue moons) formed in the shape of a person and settled on the roof af a house standing one hundred feet to the west from our home. Sometimes these orbs would come close to us, and the whole western sky seemed filled with them.

As Mrs. Sweet and her sister were one day talking upon spiritual subjects, Rebekah being very skeptical about spirits, Mrs. S. said, "Rebekah, to-morrow evening you shall see a most wonderful and beautiful sunset." The next evening Mrs. S. had forgotten her promise to Rebekah, but she reminded Mrs. S. of it. They then went together to the west window and as they looked toward the sun, Mrs. Sweet said, "Love and harmony must prevail," and after embracing and kissing each other, the harmony came, and Mrs. S. said, "Do you see them?"

"Yes, Ellen, isn't it beautiful!"

Rebekah stood wringing her hands and could only exclaim, "Beautiful, beautiful, beautiful!"

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

To Be Held in Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

The thirteenth annual convention of the National Spiritualists' Association will be held in the First Unitarian Church, Eighth street and Mary Place, Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

Among those invited and expected to participate in the exercises are Rev. Dr. Austin, Will J. Erwood, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Oscar Edgerly, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Mesdames. H. P. Ressegue, R. S. Lillie, Laura G. Fixen, Eva McCoy, Margaret Gaule Ridinger, and a galaxy of others.

Come one and all to the greatest Spiritual convention ever held.

Special railway rates on the certificate plan can be secured over all lines. Ask your railroad agent for certificate tickets to the National Spiritualists' convention at Minneapolis; the round fare will be one and one-third of a fare. Delegates and visitors desiring to receive the benefits of this special rate must have their tickets vised by our railroad agent at convention the last day, October 20, and pay 25 cents each for such vising.

Hotel Nicollet, a first-class hotel on the European plan, will be headquarters of the convention. Special rates for good rooms, one dollar per day each person. Write and secure your rooms from Shattuck & Wood, proprietors of the Nicollet Hotel, Minneapolis, Minn.

The annual reception to delegates and visitors will be held at the First Unitarian Church, Monday, October 16, at 8 p. m.

All are cordially invited. Admission free to all meetings.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
Secretary.

HARRISON D. BARRETT,
President.

FROM THE EDITOR-AT-LARGE

The International Reform Bureau.

We have taken several occasions to give warning of the menace of the so-called Reform party, at whose head is Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts. He is rightly named, for a more insiduous foe to free thought and liberty of speech has never lived. He has drawn large funds from his deluded followers, with which to establish a special lobby, housed as he boasts magnificently under the shadow of the National Capitol, and exerting such influence over legislation that it is called the "Third House." The "Reformers" stand for a change in the Constitution whereby God and Christ shall be recognized and the Bible made the corner stone of legislation. Crafts believes in circulating literature, by which is meant tracts, leaflets and books calculated to proselyte to his views. As head and active manager of "The International Reform Bureau," he boasts of having presented to Congress more "reform measures" than any other man dead or living. These measures relate to changes in the Constitution, Sunday laws, Bible reading in the public schools, etc. Thanks to the good sense of members of the House and Senate, most of them have died in committee, but a few have reached a reading and been honored by speeches for and against.

Now this crafty Crafts has compiled all these rejected attempts to throttle liberty of action and speech, into a book of 800 pages, and as the matter has all been reported in the Congressional Record he claims the right to send it through the mails free under the franking privilege. The postal authorities it appears are obliged under the law to burden the mails with the book, according to the rules. But Crafts does not propose to send out the book for nothing. If those who receive it do not wish to pay 35 cents for it, they are directed on the wrapper to return it—also at the government's expense.

It is a cunningly devised scheme to sow the plans and ideas of the "God-in-the-Constitution" party among the people. The expectation is that the readers will give the matter more attention than it received at the hands of legislators, and that they will petition and write letters to Congressmen thus bringing a pressure to bear on them.

In this propagation of a scheme of the most bigoted of religious denominations, the government is forced to take a hand, furnishing mail facilities at an annual cost of thousands of dollars. The most saddening and hopeless aspect of this infamous scheme is that the press of this country in abject fear, dare not mention it even as news. The fear of losing subscribers makes it a slave, or a tool in the hands of bigotry.

The International Reform Bureau; A Menace to Free Thought. The Sunflower.

In this work I have mapped out I have had many local helpers who seeing the necessities of the occasions, have availed themselves of the opportunities furnished by their local papers. Among these I now only mention "Quaker," editor of a republican paper of wide influence who for reasons withholds his name, and Hon. R. A. Dague, of Alameda, Cal. The latter is brave, and his trenchant pen always writes with interest. He has been invaluable on the picket line on the Pacific side. I wish there were means to maintain a bureau of a score or more such writers.

If the private letters received, indicate the value of the work done, the column furnished Public Opinion awakened more interest in the cause than anything else I have written during the quarter now ended. What is more, these inquiries came from an audience which had formed adverse opinions and show how erroneous had been their conceptions, and eagerness to know the truth. I am respectfully,

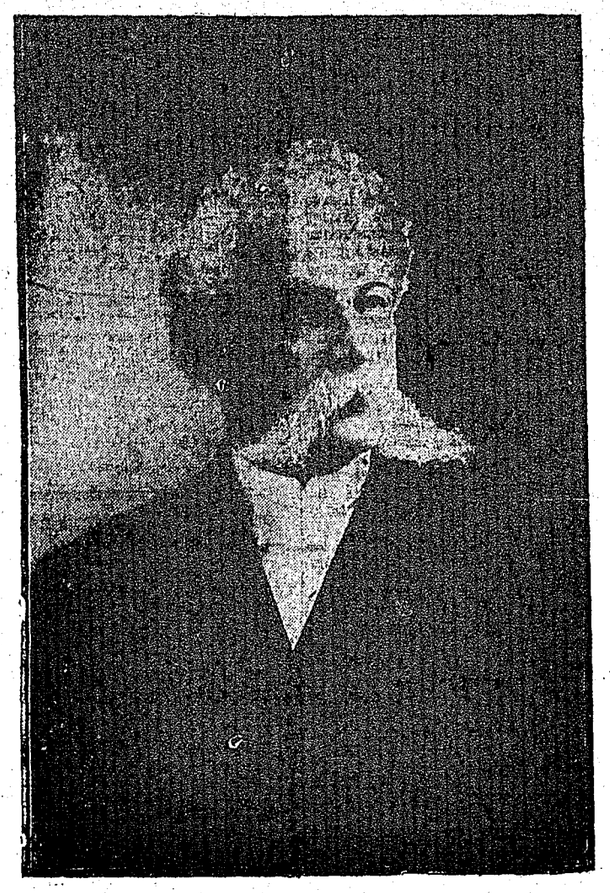
A SONG OF AUTUMN.

When the wild wind closes summer's story,
When in burst of splendor ends the glory,
And the woods and fields deserted of their royal verdure stand;—
When before we see the winter's sadness,
When behind, alas!—we look for gladness,—
What the thought to lead us like an angel through the land?



'Tis the thought of thankfulness as duty;
'Tis a blest remembrance of the beauty—
And the fullness of the year in its happy golden prime;
And of all the passionate completeness—
Of the summer's paradisal sweetness,—
That like silver bells at eve the fondest melodies shall chime!

And the beauty shall abide within us,
And to like return of richness win us,
In the glad awaking of the spring the mind of hope can see;
So our hearts within us laughing, leaping,
Will not chide the summer's silent sleeping,—
For again she'll come to us and our true companion be!

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Campmeetings and Other Spiritualistic Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

Massachusetts Awake to All That Is of Interest to Spiritualism.

ALEX CAIRD, M. D,

A SYMPOSIUM.

Suggested by Dr. Alex. Caird, of Lynn, Mass.

Massachusetts steps to the front and demands a hearing. Alex. Caird, M. D., an influential Spiritualist, suggests a Symposium on an exceedingly important subject. It will be inaugurated in his special honor as a leading and highly respected Spiritualist of the Old Bay State, one who is constantly working for the spread of the Truth as manifested in Spirit Return. It will prove especially interesting, suggestive and valuable to every reflective mind.

The Important Question.

What Does Spiritualism Teach That Spiritualists Believe in Common?

After fifteen years of investigation and study, and listening to all kinds of speakers, East and West, I find myself asking, WHAT DOES SPIRITUALISM TEACH THAT SPIRITUALISTS BELIEVE IN COMMON?

It seems to me that the different beliefs are about as numerous as the believers.

One can hardly find two professed Spiritualists that agree on all the different points of their belief. Some found their belief on the Bible, and find in Christianity nearly, if not all, that they can find in Spiritualism; Bible Spiritualists, they call themselves.

Others denounce all Bibles, and all the different creeds, and forms of worship, and all that have grown out from them.

Some believe in organization; that no great or lasting work has ever accomplished without organized and united effort.

Others believe in a sort of a go-as-you-please order of affairs, claiming that every individual is sufficient unto himself.

Some teach Spiritualism as a grand philosophy, looking upon all phenomena as crude and on a low plane, being of no real value to the cause; while others think the philosophy is something in the nature of a dream, and confine their Spiritualism exclusively to the phenomena and getting messages from their spirit friends.

Other teachers would have their hearers believe with them in re-embodiment, and all the tenets of Theosophy; and still others think Spiritualism can never be demonstrated except by the aid of science.

The only points on which Spiritualists seem to agree is that we are spiritual entities in this life, that we shall continue to be the same after the change called death, and that after that change we can communicate with those still in earth life.

What is Spiritualism? and what are its teachings? There must be something for us to believe; there ought to be something that IS ACCEPTED BY ALL WELL-INFORMED SPIRITUALISTS AS THE CORNER-STONE OF THEIR FAITH. Has Spiritualism come to us solely to prepare us for another life? Is it not worth while to try and find out what it has to help us live this life as we should? for certainly this is all the life we ever shall live. We can only live on day at a time; now is all we have or ever will have through the longest eternity.

Our claim is that the fundamental teachings of Spiritualism are for man to live as near as is possible in a state of righteousness. My understanding of righteousness is right living. I believe that hygiene and physical culture should go hand in hand with soul culture; that proper care of the physical body, a kind and cheerful disposition, a clean moral life, are all adjuncts of Spiritualism, and should come under the head of spiritual teaching. I think if our lecturers would emphasize the principles set forth above, a more practical work would be accomplished than much that has resulted from their work in the past. To devote time to rhapsodies on the sweet summerland, and useless sophistries in the name of philosophy, is to my mind impracticable and a waste of energy.

Spiritualism should teach that the human mind is incapable of grasping the immensity of creation, much less the Creator; that natural laws must be followed for our physical well being; moral laws for our mental contentment. We are all creatures of emotions and desires, differing in degree and should be so understood.

Let us have our energies concentrated in an effort to solve some of the great problems that must be solved before Spiritualism can take its proper place among men.

The writer of this article has had more experience with the practical aspects of Spiritualism than with the ethical, and it appears that the result of ALL THESE DIVERSIFIED BELIEFS AND TEACHINGS can be found in the manner in which meetings, supposed to be in the interests of Spiritulism, are conducted. Meetings are carried on in different parts of the country, at which almost every conceivable method of procedure is the rule. Some, we are glad to say, are carried on in a seemly manner, the philosophy and teachings of Spiritualism presented in a manner to command respect, while the managers of many others seem to think they are not carrying on a spiritual meeting unless the mediums indulge in baby talk, and so-called Indian language, a lingo that no sane Indian ever talked; this practice is dying out in the East, and we hope in the West.

Some managers will have nothing whatever of a religious nature in their meetings; they object to invocation, ordination, or any of the forms that the church has ever practiced. Others try to imitate the church in every portion of their service.

At some societies a specialty is made of healing, and treating cases of obsession, and it is a common thing for three or four healers to be practicing their art in different parts of the room at the same time.

If Spiritualism is ever to become a world-wide religion, or ever to take its place with other religions, or as a successful movement, this condition must be overcome; and we believe that it can be by rightly directed effort. We believe that the majority of Spiritualists are ready for, and willing to work for a different method of affairs.

One of the first steps toward that end is, in my opinion, in the line of organization, and that organization should begin with the local societies. We fully realize and wish to emphasize the importance of having intelligent speakers to address our audiences, speakers that can handle all up-to-date subjects in an intelligent manner.

Some people are possessed of a high degree of ideality, some of great veneration, and many are plain, matter of fact materialists.

We would like speakers that can adapt themselves to, and present the truth in a manner that will appeal to all these different intellects, but we also realize, and it is a fact to be deplored, that there are many speakers in the country at the present time that are unable to secure employment, speakers that are in every way competent to meet all requirements. Educating speakers seems to me like building the roof before we have laid the foundation. There are very few societies in New England that hire speakers or mediums, and those that do, pay from $2 to $10 per Sunday. It would seem to me much wiser to give all our efforts to building up societies and so creating a demand for speakers, that could be supplied from the various colleges, that are turning out graduates by the thousands every year, many of them children of Spiritualists.

There are comparatively few organized societies in Massachusetts, and I presume it is the same all over the country; there are plenty of meetings conducted by individuals, for confirmation of this, note the announcements in The Progressive Thinker and Banner of Light.

If I am rightly informed, there are but two regularly organized societies, employing speakers, in Boston, and the same number in Chicago. Those that are organized are not associated in any way. Such attempts as have been made at organization have been made the wrong way. It is another case of building the roof first, and trying to build down instead of following the natural course of laying a strong foundation and building upon it. We should have strong local societies; the president of each society should be a director in the state association, with as many delegates per capita as they are entitled to. The president of each state association should be a director in the National Association, also delegates per capita. Each state should do its own missionary work, sending enthusiastic workers to locate in a place until the society was self-supporting, instead of the present methods employed by the N. S. A. of sending missionaries for a day or a few days, taking collections for themselves and leaving the society worse off than before their visit.

The writer has had a little experience in raising funds for missionary work, and has demonstrated the willingness of the people to do something, if the leaders will start. Meetings have been held in Lynn and Haverhill, Mass., with such success that Newburyport, Mass., made application for one to be held with them, which will be held as soon as some plans can be arranged to carry out the ideas for which the fund was raised, as stated above. In that way societies could be established in every town and city, all speakers and mediums could get engagements, and Spiritualism take its place where it belongs, at the head.

The N. S. A. should have a publishing house, and flood the country with Spiritual literature, and act as an advisory board for the states, and do such other work as would properly come to them.

A co-operative building association could be formed to help societies that were in position to do so, to erect buildings, where enough could be rented to bring in an income that in fifty years would make the Spiritualists the wealthiest religious body in the country.

A mediums' protective union should be established where all mediums recognized by the state association should be enrolled, so that a society in need of a speaker or medium, could make an engagement, knowing they would secure a proper person. Mediums and speakers should refuse to work for any but a legally organized society, or to help establish one that would secure a charter as soon as able.

As long as we do not engage permanent speakers, circuits should be formed, in order to enable speakers and mediums to make season engagements with the least possible cost for traveling, giving a full season's work to each society, instead of locally as under the present method; this could be done through the state associations.

If the spiritual press should report legally organized societies under one head, referring to individual gatherings as "other meetings," strangers would know where to attend, and speakers and mediums where to apply for engagements.

Members in good standing in any society should be furnished visiting cards that should make them honored visitors in any other society; also withdrawal cards admitting them to membership in other societies. To meet the demands of the public, societies must furnish entertainment as well as instruction. Specialties can frequently be introduced in the way of musical and literary exercises that will add greatly to the interest of our meetings, and also be a source of inspiration to the speaker.

These suggestions are not offered in a spirit of criticism, but with the sincere desire that they may draw out helpful thoughts from others of our workers, and result in practical good to our cause. ALEX. CAIRD, M. D.

THE HAUNTED PALACE.

In the greenest of our valleys,
By good angels tenanted,
Once a fair and stately palace—
Radiant palace—reared its head.
In the monarch Thought's dominion—
It stood there!
Never seraph spread a pinion
Over fabric half so fair!

Banners yellow, glorious, golden,
On its roof did float and flow,
(This—all this—was in the olden
Time long ago),
And every gentle air that dallied,
In that sweet day,
Along the ramparts plumed and pallid,
A winged odor went away.

Wanderers in that happy valley,
Through two luminous windows, saw
Spirits moving musically,
To a lute's well-tuned law,
Round about a throne where, sitting (Porphyrogene!)
In state his glory well befitting,
The ruler of the realm was seen.

And all with pearl and ruby glowing
Was the fair palace door,
Through which came flowing, flowing, flowing,
And sparkling ever more,
A troop of Echoes, whose sweet duty
Was but to sing,
In voices of surpassing beauty,
The wit and wisdom of their king.

But evil things, in robes of sorrow,
Assailed the monarch's high estate,
(Ah, let us mourn!—for never morrow Shall dawn upon him desolate!)
And round about his home the glory
That blushed and bloomed,
Is but a dim-remembered story
Of the old time entombed.

And travelers, now, within that valley,
Through the red-litten windows see
Vast forms, that move fantastically
To a discordant melody,
While, like a ghastly rapid river,
Through the pale door
A hideous throng rush out forever
And laugh—but smile no more.

AUDITORIUM.

Lynn Spiritualist Association.

The Lynn Spiritual Society, Dr. Alex Caird, President, leads in all things pertaining to Spiritualism. The services in various forms, continue all day Sunday, including a supper, at which often as many as 200 partake. No other Spiritualist society on earth today equals it in comprehensive efficiency.

Psychic Circle

Every Friday Evening, From 9 to 10, Local Time—That is, by the time of the place in which you live—Dr. Alexander Caird and Wife, and Lynn Spiritualists Association Center.

Morning Prayer, by Robt. L. Stevenson.

The day returns and brings us the petty round of irritating concerns and duties. Help us to play the man; help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces; let cheerfulness abound with industry. Give us to go blithely on our business all this day; bring us to our resting beds weary and content and undishonored, and grant us in the end the gift of sleep.

Will You Join It?

Through the suggestions of the spirit guides of Dr. and Mrs. Alexander Caird, and in gratitude for the inestimable benefit these resourceful workers have been to the L. S. A. and a desire that others may be brought under the same helpful influences, this circle has been formed.

Objects of Circle.

Soul study and the development of your psychic sense and of your highest and best natures.

Please sit in silence as far as it is possible for at least twenty minutes within the specified hour. If unable to sit alone concentrate your mind and thoughts on the objects and work of the circle.

Rules for Circle.

First—send a loving and heartfelt greeting to all members of the circle.

Second—Search your souls to learn if you have lived your very highest since the last circle. Have I been kind, patient and helpful to all with whom I have come in contact?

Third—Ask your spirit friends and the circle guides to draw near and assist you in the development of your highest soul powers and your mediumistic gifts.

Fourth—Send out a helpful thought to all speakers, mediums and workers; and to the press, that the divine plan may be more generally applied.

THE SUGGESTIONS AND DIRECTIONS FOR THIS CIRCLE CAME FROM WISE AND CLEAR-SIGHTED MINDS ON THE SPIRIT SIDE OF LIFE. THE GREAT POSSIBILITIES OF A CIRCLE, IN WHICH THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE AT THE SAME TIME, CONCENTRATE THEIR MINDS ON THE SAME OBJECTS, MUST BE OBVIOUS TO ALL.

If we believe in the potency of thought, we can but believe that such a thought wave permeating the psychic lives of so many in different parts of the world must be productive of spiritual good.

The object or this movement is not for the advancement of the cause in any one place, or with any particular people, nor solely for the good of the members alone, but for the workers, the press, the spirit friends, and the upbuilding of the cause in general. We believe that much good will be accomplished; that those possessing the gift of mediumship will receive help and spiritual strength by placing themselves in the psychic wave engendered by this means. We hope every reader of this will send their name and those of their friends, no matter whether you are a Spiritualist or not, join us, add the power of your thought to ours and receive a blessing with us.

Please remember that this circle is absolutely free to everyone, and we are glad to welcome you as a member without conditions, but there are necessarily some expenses (as printing and answering the many letters of inquiry received) and if any one feels to contribute a small sum toward the same, it will be very welcome.

Brother Francis has kindly offered the use of the columns of The Progressive Thinker for the advancement of this object, and articles will appear from time to time concerning its progress. We hope all members that can do so, will become subscribers to this grand publication, and so keep in touch with the work of the circle.

We also hope that all members will try and induce others to join; we wish to have 5,000 members before the close of the year.

You are cordially invited to join this circle.

All matter pertaining to the circle will be published in The Progressive Thinker.

Send your name and address and be enrolled on the circle book free of cost. The cost of a postal card will make you a life member.

Please pass this card to some friend; make it an endless chain. Send name to

A. A. AVERILL.

Explanatory Letter From Dr. Alex. Caird.

To the Members of the Psychic Circle:—I would like to correct a misunderstanding in regard to the Psychic Circle. Many of our correspondents seem to think that no one can become a member unless they are a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker. We certainly wish that every member might (for their own good) receive the benefit to be derived from reading the grandest spiritual paper published, and so keep in touch with the spiritual happenings, and learn the views and opinions of the different writers on the large variety of subjects treated, but we realize that there are many who would like to become members of the circle who are not able to subscribe for the paper, much as they might like to. Such are just as welcome; there are no conditions. We wish Brother Francis could read some of the many letters we have received extolling his paper; he would certainly feel that his efforts for the world's betterment were appreciated.

A word as regards the difference in time. As our circle extends, not only all over our own country, but to Africa, India, Europe, Australia and New Zealand, one can readily see that if we tried to sit at nine o'clock by one time, some part of our circle would be observing the rules every hour in the twenty-four. If we all sit at nine o'clock, local time, the thought wave will start at the Atlantic, extend across the continent and around the world.

If any member wishes the circle to concentrate their wishes on any subject of general interest, will they kindly send the request to The Progressive Thinker? We have no way to inform the large circle, but everybody reads The Progressive Thinker. We would also request the circle members to repeat the following prayer, by Robert L. Stevenson, upon arising in the morning. "The day returns and brings us the petty round of irritating concerns and duties. Help us to play the man; help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces; let cheerfulness abound with industry. Give us to go blithely on our business all this day; bring us to our resting beds weary and content and undishonored, and grant us in the end the gift of sleep."

THE PSYCHIC CIRCLE.

Brothers and Sisters of the Psychic Circle:—Our circle is growing. It has already passed the one thousand mark, and new names being added every day. Do you think, when the circle hour comes around, that one thousand friends are all sending out their best thoughts to you?—thoughts of kindly greeting, of healing, of harmony, of desire for spiritual help and blessings. It must help every member, both spiritually and physically. One sister while sending her name writes us that she sat with the circle before she joined, having read of it in The Progressive Thinker, and for the first time in her life felt the presence of spirits around her. I wish once more to ask you to send subjects for thought concentration to the editor of this paper, that all the members may know what you desire.

And will every one of our thousand members send us one or more names? If you will send us just one each, the power will be increased twofold. Will you try? Almost everybody will join if they are invited. We scarcely ever have anyone refuse. Ask your friends and send in their names. Address A. A. AVERILL.

42 Smith Street, Lynn, Mass.

Will you kindly ask the members of the Psychic Circle to send out their best thoughts in behalf of my dear son, that he may be led back to the paths of honor from which he is straying?

A SISTER IN CHICAGO.

I have been a healing medium for many years and have used my gifts freely for the benefit of others. Will the members of the circle assist me in regaining the powers that seem to have left me, that I may continue to relieve suffering? JAMES STONE.

Will the members of the circle please help an old man, an inmate of a soldiers' home, by asking the spirit friends to heal some of the physical ailments from which I am suffering? AN OLD SOLDIER.

I have the gift of healing the sick by the laying on of hands. Will the circle friends assist me in removing all obstacles toward full development? ANNIE JONES HAIGHT.

Napanee, Ont.

I have a beautiful daughter, the pride of my heart, who is threatened with consumption. Three loved children have been taken before her; pray for me, dear sisters and brothers, that she may be spared to comfort me in my declining years? MARTHA MOORES.

New York.

Will the members of the Psychic Circle kindly concentrate their minds on Mr. M. H. Baker of Florence, Colo., that he may obtain some relief from almost helplessness from the knees down? I am a member of the circle. MRS. A. J. BAKER.

Florence, Colo.

I am a member of the Psychic Circle advertised in your paper and want to express my thankfulness that it has been started. I have already received much spiritual help from it. Long may it continue.

IMPORTANT.

Relating to Organization in Massachusetts.

At a late meeting of delegates, sent by various societies in this state, at Unity Camp, the following committee was appointed to formulate some plan whereby all legally organized societies can be united in a State Association of Massachusetts: Alex Caird, M. D., of Lynn, chairman; Mr. S. S. Ham, Haverhill; Mr. Fuller, Newburyport; Mr. Hall, Brighton; Mr. Hastings, Brockton.

As this matter is to be brought before each society in October, we would like to place it before you as individuals, that you may be prepared to vote intelligently when the time comes.

We think Massachusetts is the most poorly organized state in the Union. It is true, we have a society that is named the "Massachusetts State Association," but it is such in name only; it is not in fact a state society at all, simply a society of individuals, similar to many others in all parts of the state. It may be said that societies can become connected with it if they so desire, but so they can with any society; very few prosperous societies exist to-day that do not have Ladies' Aids, Lyceums or some kind of auxiliaries, and would be glad to have more, but the so-called state association has no auxiliary society; no society cares to become affiliated with an association organized on the principles of this one.

The time has come when, if the Spiritualists of this state expect to do efficient service, to become respected and enjoy the rights accorded other religious bodies, they must follow the rules usually followed by these bodies in regard to organization.

Organization properly begins with the local society; if all the regularly organized societies in this state, will agree upon some plan of procedure, and organize a state association of societies, holding its yearly conventions, to which delegates, according to the per capita, were sent by each society, such delegates to elect the officers and transact other state business, then it would follow as a natural sequence, that the state association should be united with the national, and all societies would feel that they were represented at the meetings of that body.

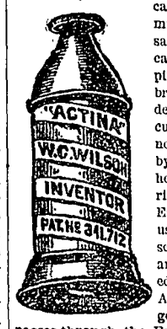
As it is now there is hardly a society in the state that can afford to send delegates to the N. S. A. conventions, held as they are, such long distances away; the same holds good with the western societies when the conventions are held this way. Consequently, no interest is felt in the doings of a body in which we have no representation, and the feeling naturally arises, that the money that is sent in as per capita, and in other ways, can be expended to better advantage in our own midst.

On the other hand, every society could send delegates once a year to Boston, such delegates receiving their instructions from their societies as to the business likely to come up; if the business affairs of the state were discussed in the business meetings of the locals, every individual would feel an interest, feel as though it was their business, as well as the business of a few officers chosen by the same individual votes year after year. Such an association should be as a father to the locals, looking after the best interests of the whole cause in connection with state work, and attending to many matters that is nobody's business under the present method.

One very important item of work would be arranging circuits. This is a plan that should certainly be put into operation. Too much money is wasted by our speakers in traveling expenses. No society can undertake to arrange for others, but a state body, having the welfare of all societies equally at heart, could arrange circuits for speakers and mediums, whereby some of our well known western speakers could visit the east, and be sure of continuous work the whole season in laboring with the different societies in rotation. This plan could be extended to include other states, in fact, the whole of New England. Speakers could send their list of open dates to the state secretary, and societies, by consulting the same, could receive suggestions and information that might be of much advantage in arranging their season's work.

Some say, "We do not want any state board to manage our affairs." We do not advocate any arbitrary management, but an intelligent co-operation as to what is best for each society. If, as has been suggested, the president of each society should be a director in the state, they could meet in some central place and plan out the season's work in a manner that would seem to be of the best advantage to the societies they represent, and to the speakers also; this could easily be done without interfering in the least with the rights of any one; if they could not agree on any particular point, each society could carry out its own plans just the same. We certainly would not be in favor of placing any arbitrary powers in the hands of any one in regard to such matters, only plan with the idea of mutual helpfulness.

There are many other reforms that could be attended to if the societies were properly organized, such as the adoption of a ritual to be used by all societies in the initiation of members; transfer cards, transfering members in good standing to another society, in case of a change of residence; and traveling cards, introducing members to the officers of societies where they may be visiting, and thus insuring them a welcome among those who would otherwise be strangers, instead of brothers and sisters.



There is no limit to the work of a properly organized state association, and we wish to urge the Spiritualists of this state to give this subject their most careful attention, and to make a strong effort, as they shall come together in their respective societies to resume the season's work, to effect an organization that shall be a credit to the cause, that Spiritualism in our state shall be brought up to a standard where it shall command the respect that is accorded all other religious denominations.

DEAFNESS AND CATARRH CURED

BY NO METHOD UNTIL "ACTINA" WAS DISCOVERED.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Out of the Depths Into the Light.

By Samuel Bowles; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. This is a very interesting little book, and will be appreciated from start to finish by all who wish to gain spiritual information. Price, 25 cents.

DEATH ITS MEANING and Results.

By J K Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting narrative relating a series of wonderful psychic manifestations occurring in the writer's experience. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

The Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake This fascinating Book by the well-known Author and Scholar, HON. A. B. RICHMOND, Should be in the hands of every Spiritualist in the land. It is based on a historical fact, but through the narrative is woven a psychic line of thought in the style so natural to the great criminal lawyer that one can feel the author's very presence during its perusal. It is certainly interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

J. J. Morse is now in England. His address will be 97 Renshaw street, Liverpool.

E. J. Bowtell desires lecture engagements for season of 1905-6. Address him at No. 37 Washington street, New London, Ct.

A Burlington (Vt.) paper speaks as follows of Mrs. L. A. Hutchins, a devout Spiritualist, now 88 years of age: "Among her finest pieces of work with the pen is the writing of the Lord's prayer in the space of a one-cent piece. One piece of art work was sent to the late President William McKinley, who in return highly complimented her work with the pen. Mrs. Hutchins has been away from Burlington for over forty years. Last fall, with her daughter, Miss A. Della, she came back to this city and is now residing on North avenue. Mrs. Hutchins is a vegetarian and in excellent health for a person of her age and of a very bright intellect."

The eastern part of Hillsboro, Ind., known as Fair View, is excited over the appearance of an alleged ghost. The specter is said to appear in a long black dress and wears a long and heavy veil. It seems to sail through the air and disappears as quickly as it comes. It has been named the "Mysterious Woman in Black."—News, Michigan City, Ind.

J. M. Humphrey writes from St. Louis, Mo.: "The First Spiritual Association of St. Louis, Mo., would like to notify the world that its next season's campaign of enlightenment begins on the first Sunday in September, with Bro. Thomas Grimshaw as its trance lecturer for the eighth consecutive year. He is too well known as one of the very best upon our modern rostrum to need any other advertisement, and we would like everybody to consider themselves as specially invited to come and hear him whenever within reach of our beautiful little Temple at 3015 Pine street, in the heart of this city, where no admission fee is charged, that 'Bete Noir' of our cause almost everywhere. We are expecting a banner year, and it would be a strange break in the regular annual series of successes, if this is not the record when next summer rolls around. A fine choir and organ will do their share toward helping a proper frame of mind for listening to Brother Grimshaw, and his unseen helpers will do the rest that cannot fail to make a visit to us profitable for anyone. I may add that we have had a very interesting and helpful open free conference meeting service running all through the Summer on Sunday afternoons, giving opportunity to skeptics and investigators, as well as Spiritualists. No one was barred the floor for a ten-minute talk and we can recommend this as a most useful way of working up an interest in things psychical. This is a very good use of the usually idle time between seasons that may help not only to keep up interest, but as a developing circle will assist the regular membership to a better understanding of what they are attempting to do as reformers. It brings out and assists to train latent ability and ought to be a regular thing in every Spiritualistic church and I refer to the dictionary for the definition of that word."

An honest investigator, Lewis T. Bell, writes from St. Joseph, Mo.: "I heartily approve your effort toward the elimination of fraud. I am not a Spiritualist, only an investigator, but your course as well as that of President Barrett is the only safe one. If true, the philosophy is bound to prevail; if false, all the power of darkness and combined ingenuity of the infernal regions will not sustain it. If there is anything in it at all, lift it to a high moral plane."

W. J. Elmo writes: "The Chicago Spiritual Alliance Church, which meets at 3514 Vincennes avenue, is holding some very nice meetings in its new home. Good short lectures and plenty of tests and messages by Mrs. May Elmo. In the afternoon meetings we invite all mediums to take part. Our services start at 3 and 8 p. m. sharp. Mrs. Elmo's home address is 3514 Vincennes avenue. Seances every Wednesday evening. Our social and dances start September 9. All are welcome."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Eugenia Rouble writes from Watertown, N. Y.: "The First Progressive Spiritual Society has engaged Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague for September, and Mrs. Amanda L. Coffman for October and November, to start the coming season's work. All three of these workers have been here a number of times before, and with the memory of their past work to encourage us, we have enough to warrant in anticipation a very successful season."

J. J. Rittenhouse writes from Royersford, Pa.: "Your last premium book, Letters From the Spirit World, arrived in good condition. I have read it through, and I think it is worth reading again. I think it is filled with truth. The Progressive Thinker comes regularly, and I find it filled with a feast of good reading. I have read each issue through since I have been a subscriber to it, and I will say it is the best spiritual paper, because it is broad and liberal, and stands for truth in mediumship, the same as in everything else, for truth is the pearl of greatest price."

Thos. C. Rose writes from Toronto, Canada.: "The article by H. D. Barrett is a gem. It shows that he is an earnest truth-seeker by admitting his position with regard to Mrs. Green and materialization in general. His statement will enable thousands of perplexed Spiritualists to arrive at a conclusion in regard to this important phase of physical phenomena. I sincerely believe the philosophy is far more satisfying, and that logically applied, will fill the enquiring mind with more light than the phenomena. It teaches the investigator how he may become possessed of the true interpretation of Spiritualism, by the practicing of self-conquest and the unfoldment of his own dormant faculties. Let us be up and doing and assist such noble workers as Brother Barrett and many other noble souls who are doing their best to untie the knots of spiritual confusion as at present existing in the ranks of Spiritualism, so that the ridicule which Spiritualism is at present surrounded with may be dispersed. Let all true workers do their best, and long may Harrison D. Barrett remain at the helm to guide the good ship Spiritualism through the rapids of reformation.

In The Progressive Thinker, pro and con, we see all sides of the question; then are allowed to use our own judgment. I consider The Progressive Thinker a psychic school in itself. Speaking personally I was like a ship without a rudder, buffeted about by every wave of doubt before I became a subscriber to this marvelous dollar's worth. You will always command success."

Frank T. Ripley has the following engagements: September, the First Society of Spiritualists at Indianapolis, Ind.; October, the First Temple Society at Muncie, Ind. He will accept engagements for November and December. Address all letters to Tipton, Ind., P. O. Box 543.

B. C. Taber, M. D., now nearly 93 years of age, writes from Dallas, Tex.: "If I am not the oldest Spiritualist in the land I must be near it. I commenced with the Banner of Light in its first year; then the Religio-Philosophical Journal during its stay in Illinois; then your paper of which I have been a constant reader. I have taken others for a time, then discarded them, HOLDING TO YOURS AS THE BEST OF ALL. I admire the course you take."

J. Marion Gale writes: "In The Progressive Thinker of August 13, appeared a short article from me. There was a mistake in the address. I live at Quilcene, Wash., at the foot of the grand old Olympic mountains. I still enjoy our 'faith of knowledge;' as for the last forty-eight years I have known rather than believed in the plain evidence of the immortal life. I still hope that I shall be able to give any friends in the flesh some valuable testimony thereof ere I quit this mortal frame, and perhaps, thereafter, if conditions permit."

Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox speaks as follows of Brain Building, in the Chicago American: "For years Elmer Gates has been asking men of science to give his assertions regarding brain building a thorough test. It is Dr. Gates' theory (based on proofs which he can give to all who are anxious to investigate) that the brain cells of children who inherit degenerate tendencies, or of children who are arrested mentally, can be developed by a scientific process and the little ones made moral and intellectual members of society. Instead of reformatories and prisons and houses of correction, Dr. Gates would have scientific colleges of brain building under the direction of skilled specialists, where all unfortunate children should be treated with loving care and patient skill. This desire Dr. Gates made known to me more than ten years ago. It has never ceased to be the ambition and purpose of his wonderful life. I am glad to know that another great man is filled with the same colossal ambition, and I wish the president of the United States would stop long enough in his search for truth in our political pond of falsehood to realize what these two great great Americans in our midst could do for the world were they properly supplemented by the interest and support of the government."

Mrs. Dixon, Secretary writes: "The people are returning from camp and their vacations and are seeking in large numbers the Spiritual Science Society at Arlington Hall, 31st street and Indiana avenue. Our music is under the direction of Madam Holton, who has no superior in that line of entertainment. She has organized a large choir of children, the Angels' Choir, which startles the audience with its solos and choruses. Children bring good conditions, and we are glad to have you bring them and join this choir. Dr. Beverly gives free demonstrations in healing after every lecture. This is truly a great work. The collections are sufficient to carry on the work, so we invite all to come and enjoy our meetings. We invite all workers to come and help. Prof. Hillis, Mrs. Hodge and Mrs. Dixon and daughter are always with us and many visiting mediums are returning from the camps and are always welcome."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

On account of Labor Day occurring on Monday, we are compelled to go to press earlier than usual, hence many important items are crowded out.

Amanda Horton seems to be a true prophet. She writes: "I believe the spirits of the founders of our government still control it. I have had evidence enough to convince me beyond a doubt that they do. It was revealed to me at the time that Harrison and Cleveland ran for president, and Harrison was elected, that Cleveland would be our next president."

The closing exercises of the fourth camp-meeting of the Western Wisconsin Spiritualists was held August 27. The attendance during the three weeks has been good. Next year's officers are as follows: President, Will J. Erwood, LaCrosse; first vice-president, C. S. Pratt, Baraboo; second vice-president, C. G. Porter, Wonewoc; secretary, Gertrude Spooner, Wonewoc; treasurer, M. M. Blish, Wonewoc; trustees, E. Hemenway, Sarter; Mrs. J. P. Whitwell, St. Paul; C. Spooner, Wonewoc.

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "A social given by Mrs. J. L. Fravel at her home, 2349 W. Huron street, Austin, on Saturday evening, August 26, for the benefit of the Rising Sun Temple Fund, eclipsed all previous affairs. Her beautiful home was opened to our guests, and the welcome extended was appreciated by all. The porches and lawn were beautifully decorated with flags and lanterns and the house decorated with the choicest of flowers, adding to the beauty of the occasion. Sister Fravel opened the social with a few remarks, which was followed by a hymn by all present. Piano and vocal solos by Sister Copeland's daughters were loudly applauded. Sister Ella Green's daughter Bessie outdid herself in her recitations. Spirit messages were given by Brother Thompson and Sister Kirchner, same being a revelation to a number of strangers present. While the entertainment was going on Sister Fravel was preparing a dainty dish for the inner man. It was quite a novelty, ice cream selved in half melons, with cake. Oh, how everybody did enjoy themselves! Our president being delayed by business did not arrive until late, but his cream and cake was awaiting him. The late cars carried a jolly crowd home, after all expressed their good wishes, and extended a vote of thanks to Brother and Sister Fravel and family."

Mrs. Lole Prior's mission in Wellington in connection with the Wellington Association of Spiritualists (Reg.) is finished, and she is now in Melbourne. No lady has been so much appreciated as Mrs. Prior in her particular line of work. Her addresses were plain and practical, and her messages from the spirit world were most convincing. She made a lasting impression.—The Message of Life, Levin, Manawatu, New Zealand.

The Goff will case is disturbing the Spiritualists of Michigan. A decision has been made against the state association as legatees. They have carried it to a higher court and desire funds to defend their interests. The N. S. A. has been asked to assist and it is a case that should be won by the Spiritualists. It is very unfortunate that such legacies must be greatly squandered in legal fights before the Spiritualists can receive the benefit conferred by a friend of their cause. It is necessary to create every possible precedent in our favor, hence the Michigan friends should have substantial help. The better way is to give liberally to our cause while here to do so and not trust our bequests to be faithfully fulfilled. Give now is a proper thing to do.—Banner of Light.

W. J. Elmo writes: "The Spiritual Alliance Society has one of the neatest assembly halls on the South Side, located at 3514 Vincennes avenue, near corner Cottage Grove avenue and 35th street. Church service every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m. Mrs. May Elmo, message medium. We have a number of new first-class speakers engaged for this fall and winter. Our socials begin September 9, and will continue every Saturday evening. All are welcome."

B. G. Sweet writes: "Your war on the fake mediums is just what is needed, and I hope the war that has given them such a black eye will be kept up until there shall be no place for them among those claiming to be Spiritualists. Any Spiritualist that will spend his dollars for The Progressive Thinker and other good spiritual literature will be immune from fakerism."

Henry Scharffetter writes from Baltimore, Md.: "The First Spiritual Church of this city has engaged the following speakers and mediums for the season of 1905 and 1906: September, Dr. J. M. Peebles of Battle Creek, Mich.; October, November and December, Mr. and Mrs. A. Scott Bledsoe of 507 Horne street, Topeka, Kansas, inspirational speakers and mediums; January and February, Mrs. Helen-Stuart-Richings of Seattle, Wash. She is an inspirational speaker and prophetic medium. March and April, Oscar A. Edgerly, trance speaker and clairvoyant medium. May and June, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley of 3148 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., inspirational speaker and message bearer."

Henrietta L. Lichtig, secretary, writes: "The ladies comprising the Illinois Sunflower Club, auxiliary to the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, are by no means idle. Quarters have been leased in the Fraternity Building, 70 East Adams street, for the second and fourth Tuesday of each month during the year, where they will have their regular meetings and hold entertainments. The next regular meeting is to be held in Lincoln Hall, Fraternity Building, 70 East Adams street, Tuesday, Sept. 12, at 2 p. m. A full attendance of all the members is desired, as business of importance is to be transacted."

Mrs. Barnes, the wife of Charles J. Barnes, the trumpet medium, writes from Warsaw, Ind.: "Charlie has arrived home from his summer work, and is resting. He says he had a very pleasant time at the various camps. We have been wondering why the secretaries of the different camps never mention the mediums; only the speakers are spoken of. No one likes a good inspirational speaker better than I do, but as the demonstration of spirit return is the basic principle of our philosophy, why not mention it, too; that is, when you know it is honest. I have watched the papers closely all summer, and have found but little or no mention of mediums for phenomenal phases. Why is it? Are we getting too proud, and conventional to acknowledge the source of our power? If that is the case the day of our doom is sealed. We enjoy The Progressive Thinker in the quiet of our little home. Charlie is now ready for fall and winter calls for trumpet work. His permanent address is 642 N. Lake street, Warsaw, Ind."

E. J. Schellhous writes: "Within the last few years Spiritualism has made great advance in Kansas City, Mo. There are a number of resident mediums here, who are doing good work. Without invidious distinction, I mention one medium, Mrs. Edward Connolly (for there are numerous phases of mediumship), whose most interesting phase is her musical mediumship. She is a finished performer on the piano, but has never taken a lesson from a mortal. Her most wonderful performance is her spirit vocalization. The principal control is the prima donna Yandall, a Danish singer. Yet others control her voice; among them is a fine tenor voice—all of which are very different from her natural voice. I have heard the wonderful musical medium, Jesse Shepherd, but the performance and the vocalization of Mrs. Connolly are equal to his."

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "The rain on Sunday evening, Aug. 27, did not deter the large crowd from attending the services of the Rising Sun Mission at the home of the president, to listen to the well delivered remarks uttered by Bro. Dr. L. Rowell, a former Methodist minister. He took for his subject, 'The Good Samaritan,' showing that Spiritualists could find a heaven on earth, and could draw the higher forces from spirit life by doing good to others here and not waiting till their friends had passed to the borderland. Following his remarks we were more than pleased to hear from our Sister Andrews who has recovered from a long siege of sickness. She gave some grand spirit demonstrations, as well as did Brother Thompson and Sister Kirchner. A number of strangers were the recipients of tests which were very convincing. Our full choir sang some beautiful selections which were very appropriate. Owing to the occupants of our temple holding a lease, we cannot as yet hold our meetings in our temple, but will hold meetings until further notice on Sunday afternoons at 3 and evenings at 8, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western avenue."

Mrs. E. R. Weter writes from Haslett Park Camp, Mich.: "This week closes our camp. Mr. and Mrs. Kates came last Friday and are still with us. Sunday we had a large crowd. Saturday night every sleeping place was filled. Mr. and Mrs. Kates are earnest in their work, and try to interest the people. We have had good meetings, though the camp is quiet this week, and many have left, yet we are encouraged. Our manager is making every effort for its interest, and we shall leave our camp thinking it is on the way to progress. We expect some cottages to be built this fall in the grove. We would like to see the people more interested in the cause, and ready to give a helping hand, and we, one and all, live more in touch with the better and higher influences and be ever ready to testify to the truth with which we live."

Sister Onfa of the Order of the Golden Rule, writes from San Francisco, Cal., No. 1110 Eddy street: "I enclose one of our little circulars, knowing full well that The Progressive Thinker is interested in every movement for the betterment of humanity. The little folder gives but a brief suggestion of the work of the sisterhood as it will unfold in the near future. Besides our Open Air Sanitarium and Retreat for those merely seeking rest, we hope soon to provide homes for old people, especially for men and women who have served in any field of progressive thought the cause of Truth. By homes for our dear elder brothers and sisters we do not mean an institutional establishment, but individual cottages with little garden plots all their own to be cultivated in any way their fancy might suggest. Also we will have real homes for the orphan children of parentage out of all orthodox creed. These children will be taught to live by the Golden Rule in order that they may become real humanitarian workers."

Mrs. DeWolf Kiser, slate-writing medium, is in the city for a few days, and is located at 851 West Harrison, St.

John W. Ring writes: "I had a lovely time in Lily Dale, and am here for about ten days, after which I shall visit Titusville, Pa.; then work my way west from there to Chicago, where I shall be October 1st., for several days, then off to the great Convention in Minneapolis."

Maggie Henry writes: "Spiritual Mission Chapel, at old 77, on August 27th, we had a very interesting meeting. Our speaker, Prof. F. M. Stoller, is a bible Spiritualist; always reads a portion of scripture, followed by a scientific explanation of the same. It is very interesting and instructive, especially to those investigating. We had a good sized audience, and enjoyed the services very much. The lecture was followed by a few psychometric readings by Mrs. Hope, followed by many readings by the Professor, who is a fine psychic as well as an inspirational speaker."

Sunday evening, August 27, the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society had for its speaker, Mr. Koehler, a very talented man, and a speaker that gave great satisfaction to the audience. The message bearers were, Mrs. Alice Sexsmith and Mrs. Nellie Kusserow, whose work was duly appreciated. The speaker for Sunday evening, Sept. 10, will be that well-known worker, formerly of Chicago, Mrs. DeWolf Kiser. Conference at 3 p. m., and lecture at 8 p. m., at O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina St., between Washington boul. and Park av. All are cordially invited; open doors.

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society was highly entertained on Mediums' Night by Mrs. Weaver and Mrs. Thompson from the West Side. This is the second time they were ever in this hall, and I hope it will not be the last as their messages were all recognized and appreciated very much. Mrs. Kline was present and her control gave us a fine talk. Sunday eve, Aug. 27, we were blessed with a beautiful talk by the Rev. Mrs. M. Schumacher, pastor of the Church Students of Nature. She is a good speaker as well as medium and pleased all in the audience. Mr. E. Dirkes, formerly a lecturer, but now developed into a message giving medium, gave some good readings from articles laid on the table. Our social dance was well attended and enjoyed in spite of the warm weather. Our next one will be during the last week of September."

Unprecedented Proposition.

The Good accomplished by The Progressive Thinker in sending out the Twelve Premium Books can not well be overestimated. Orders come in nearly every day for the entire set, and those who receive them are especially delighted. In at least 20,000 homes The Progressive Thinker has been instrumental in establishing the nucleus of a library. The Twelve Premium Books formerly sold at prices ranging from $1.00 to $1.50 apiece, making the cost of the above not less than $13.00. All we realize for the whole set, after paying postage, is a little over $2.00—something never before accomplished in this country or Europe. Any person who sends in a yearly subscription and who desires only one book, can take his choice of the Twelve for only 25 cents, thus making The Progressive Thinker the cheapest Spiritualist paper printed in the English language. Only our subscribers can purchase these Premium Books at the prices given. Another new and interesting volume will be issued next spring.

FROM LILY DALE.

Some Matters of Personal Import Noted.

The closing days of camp life at Lily Dale have come and the season of 1905 will soon be a thing of the past, save the memory which will remain of whatever pleasure or profit we may carry away with us.

The camp grounds and surrounding country are always attractive as a beautiful place to pass the summer months. The varied attractions which have been presented to the various minds of the people in attendance at the assembly this season have met the usual varied criticisms—for the mind of the thinking investigator is usually keenly critical—and able to pass on the merit or demerit of the food presented for their acceptance, and while there may have been some who fell short in the estimation of their work, others fully justified all the hearty accord given.

J. Clegg Wright was here almost through the entire season. His work needs no endorsement from so weak a pen as mine; it is enough to say his lectures were well attended, and his class work was received with hearty demonstrations of appreciation, and no one could listen to his inspired words without receiving lasting benefit therefrom.

Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Twing, Mrs. Lillie, W. J. Colville, C. Fannie Allyn, Mrs. Fixen and B. F. Austin I may add to the list of Spiritualist speakers who were heard from this rostrum this season.

The usual sensational reports concerning the physical mediums have been set going, and much speculation in regard to their work the coming season is rife. However, no worthy medium whose work is honest and above reproach need fear for results.

A judicious pulling out of weeds is beneficial to the growth of the plant, and a stirring up of the soil necessary. So we hope for the cause in the future.

One disappointing feature of the camp work this season which was widely felt, was the non-appearance of Prof. W. M. Lockwood on the public rostrum together with Mr. Wright, as had been the custom in the past, and which had been to hundreds of people the main attraction which brought them to Lily Dale. Many remained away on account of Mr. Lockwood's name not appearing on the program, but to those who came the disappointment was mitigated by Mr. Lockwood's securing private rooms—not at all adequate to his work—which were crowded at every meeting of his class; and the hearty applause which greeted him, and the great interest manifested in his teachings, were certainly a significant tribute to the great worth and need of his continued labors along this line of work. Any society or association engaging Prof. Lockwood and J. Clegg Wright in their especial line of work can make no mistake.

Rev. B. F. Austin is here to close this session of the assembly. Vigorous in utterance, honest and sincere in his presentation of the truths of Spiritualism, he is one of the ablest advocates upon our rostrum to-day, and leaves the impact of his earnest convictions upon the minds of all who listen.

Certainly there are many noble minds espousing and advocating the truth of Spiritualism. We need not fear that our cause is dying. Year by year it is becoming more wide-spread, and if converts do not enroll themselves with our societies it is because the minds of the people are becoming so imbued with the principles of Spiritualism that they do not need to unite with us to find all he have to offer. Truth will prevail, and time will make all things right.

New York State Mass-Meeting at Potsdam, N. Y.

A three-day meeting is called to be held at Potsdam, N. Y., in the opera house on the 15th, 16th and 17th. The programme will include lectures, spirit messages and music.

H. W. Richardson, state president; Carrie E. S. Twing, vice-president, and Tillie U. Reynolds, vice-president and state missionary, are to be assisted by B. F. Austin, Mrs. Effie Chapman, Mrs. Paine and others as speakers and mediums, and the Spiritualists of Northern New York are invited to be present.

"New Testament Stories Comically Illustrated." Drawings by Watson Heston. With Critical and Humorous Comments upon the Texts." Heston's drawings are incomparable, and excruciatingly funny. Price in boards, $1. Cloth, $1.50.

Notes From the City of Light Assembly.

A synopsis of Geo. E. Littlefield's lecture on Socialism to-day would be a mere shadow in effect when compared to meeting the man face to face and hearing his denunciation of capitalism. That he has the courage of his convictions no one who heard him speak can doubt. The auditorium was filled to its utmost capacity, excursionists coming from Jamestown, Titusville, Buffalo, Dunkirk, Chautauqua, and from every point within a radius of 50 to 100 miles the people came to hear this friend and defender of the working man, the helper of oppressed humanity.

Chairman Lillie in introducing him to the large audience, said: "Mr. George Elmer Littlefield needs no introduction from me. He will now take hold of the end of a live wire, and I hope we may all be shocked!"

But one more week at the City of Light Assembly, and the interest never wanes, neither do we expect it to until the last number on the program has been filled.

Talent yet to be heard from the platform this week is, Mrs. Lillie, Rev. B. F. Austin and Lotta P. Cheney.

Mrs. Margaret Gaule Reidinger and Mrs. Annette J. Pettengill still successfully and satisfactorily give clairvoyant and clairaudient messages, while the psychometric readings of both these workers at times are marvelous.

The last dances of the season will be Wednesday and Saturday nights of this week.

An interesting and beneficial feature at the City of Light Assembly this season has been the German meetings, presided over by Mrs. E. Stumpf, of Brooklyn, N. Y. These sessions are carried on in the German tongue exclusively, thus giving those of that nationality not versed in the English tongue an equal chance to learn the beautiful truths of Spiritualism.

Less than one week more will close the most successful season in the history of this Assembly.

MATILDA ORR HAYS.

Chesterfield Camp.

Saturday morning the lyceum children met on the parade ground to say farewell to Mrs. Anna Gillespie and surprised her with a beautiful silver-handled umbrella and a bouquet of flowers. Mrs. Maggie Waite made the presentation speech. Mrs. Gillespie thanked them in a few words, and as she made her way to the cars that were to bear her away on her long journey to California, she was followed by the entire assemblage to give her God-speed. As the cars slowly gathered headway, the children sang the chorus of "Chesterfield, Camp Chesterfield," but broke down, and there was not one among the onlookers whose eyes were not moist with tears. She has made herself beloved by all who came in contact with her and was one of the main factors in the success of the camp.

BOOK REVIEW.

The Elements of Ethics. Founded on the Natural Law of Mind as Revealed by Human Conduct. By E. J. Schellhous, M. D., Kansas City, Mo. Paper, 50 cents.

This work by an author whose name is well known to readers of The Progressive Thinker, purports to be a scientific exposition of ethical science, founded on the psychic forces of man, as physical science is founded on physical forces. The author approaches and handles his subject in a manner entirely different from the old-style text books. He lays his foundation in the firm basis of fact, grounded in the nature of man, recognizing the reign of natural law in the realm of mind, and holding that human achievement for the moral and spiritual welfare of man may far surpass his material interests afforded by the means of the aids of physical science. It is a work of deep, yet clear thought, and is well worthy the study of all who are interested in the science of ethics.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, from his home in San Diego, Joseph H. Tyler, aged 87 years. Born in New York, he came to this state in the early seventies. He was a member of the G. A. R., Co. K, First Minn., and a Mason of high standing. During Mr. Tyler's early life, he traveled extensively in this country and made friends wherever he went. He leaves two children, a son, Alvin P. Tyler of Fresno, Cal., and a daughter, Mrs. Sophia T. Elliott, a prominent and well loved medium of San Diego, with whom he has made his home during the late years; attended by her unselfish care. The funeral services were held Aug. 22, at 2:30 p. m., attended by a host of friends. Mrs. Lily M. Thiebaud of San Bernardino, Cal., delivered the funeral address. COR.

Passed to spirit life from her home at Lowell, Mich., Mrs. Olive Alden, at the age of 78 years. She had been a Spiritualist for many years. She leaves one daughter and grand-daughter. Her husband passed away six years ago. There were many friends present to sympathize with the few remaining friends. Services by MRS. J. H. DUNHAM.

A Lesson by a Spirit.

It is an eternal truth that every successive world, age or cycle, has its own specific work to do, for the furtherance of general knowledge and humanity's weal, as well as the rectification of accumulated errors with regard to life's true import.

The present cycle has the especial duty assigned it to rectify the erroneous idea regarding man's begetting on earth and his regeneration from the crude annexations of matter to his soul and spirit. Thus will be learned what constitutes the true plan of redemption for the spiritually deficient for their onward movement in life's unending march. This has been a difficult problem, but it will have its solution, and absolute proofs of its verity furnished by a scientific demonstration, then the controversy with regard to the true mission of Jesus the Christ will be ended.

Truth is mighty and prevaileth in the end, although while struggling for ascendance, those who defend her suffer hardships and are maligned by the foes of Truth and Right. But they rise in time and are honored while those who gave Truth the fight, are set low.

HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA CAN BE CURED.

THE KOLA PLANT.

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific.

Mr. W. M. Kulp, 317 46th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 24th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Gleave, 186 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Bainbridge, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1906, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York.

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

And lastly, our latest premium book, "Letters From the Spirit World," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea.

All these TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.75 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family,—an achievement only accomplished by the Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Mrs. Julia Richardson: Q. Will you please explain what is meant by the "Comforter," Jesus promised would be sent when he went away?

A. Jesus says, "But the Comforter which is the Holy Ghost, which the Father will send in my name," etc., John 14:26, and again, "When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth," John 15:26.

The thoughts of this evangelist are highly mystical and obscure. The disciples complained to Jesus that they failed to understand. He left it in doubt, for he spoke in parables, and gave the impression that he would return and would become the "Spirit of truth," guiding the world, and the "Comforter." The Spirit of truth is made synonymous with the Holy Ghost, which again was the Logos or divine word. It would not be a strained interpretation to suppose that the hosts of the spirit world, coming into rapport with mankind, should become the redeeming power of the world. Than our spirit friends near and guiding us, there can be no greater Comforter.

C. W. King: Q. In "The New York American Year Book" for 1904, which has an immense circulation, an article appears, written by Mrs. Mary T. Longley in which it is stated that there are "about 1,500 avowed Spiritualists in the United States and Canada, and perhaps as many more who will not acknowledge it." I presume Mrs. Longley did not have an opportunity to read the proof sheets of her article. The mistake should be corrected and wide attention called to it.

A. The matter was referred to Mrs. Longley. She did not see the proofs, and was not aware the error had been made. She wrote 1,500,000 and the three ciphers were quietly dropped off. The probability is that this number should be multiplied by two but it has been accepted as a close estimate by the best informed.

IN FAVOR OF ABSOLUTE HONESTY.

The Views of One Who Attended the Chesterfield Camp.

Having just returned from several weeks of rest and recreation at Camp Chesterfield, I feel impressed to write a few lines to your grand and glorious paper.

I have been looking over the copies accumulated during my absence and it seems to me I never before found so many exceptionally splendid articles published in a brief five or six weeks. I want to say to the editor and his able corps of co-workers as well as to all the readers of The Progressive Thinker, that the thoughtful, honest and intellectual Spiritualists all over this country are reaching out to join hands with you in your fearless effort to crush out all kinds of fraudulent and dishonest manifestations practiced by so-called mediums of to-day.

At camp I heard considerable discussion along this line. Some say to expose a fraudulent medium is to damage the cause. Others contend that the report of a medium being "grabbed" serves only as a fine advertisement for the said medium. Such however failed to prove the case with one whom I have in mind.

Another contingent claims that Spiritualism cannot live without the phenomenal medium, thereby leading one to interpret her (a medium who said this) as meaning if fraud were crushed out there would be no more phenomena.

But my convictions concerning the whole matter lead me to make the foregoing statement, that all genuine, honest, brainy and well-informed Spiritualists stand by the old adage, "honesty is the best policy," and if Spiritualism could not live without the practice of fraud to convince a gullible public the sooner it dies a natural death the better. But all who have investigated intelligently know beyond a reasonable doubt that it can and will live to rule the thinking world. In fact it could not be stamped out if we were all to turn our backs upon the Spiritual world and leave it to battle alone.

It has lived for untold centuries doubtless not to be killed or smirched and trailed in the mire of dishonest money-getters who are conscienceless alike for the cause and their own spiritual welfare.

It is a crying outrage that any such should be permitted to style themselves Spiritualists, when true Spiritualism teaches only that which is elevating and uplifting, pure and ennobling thoughts which breed honest actions and build untarnished character for this plane of existence, to say nothing of reaching the goal of a progressive and happy condition beyond the vail.

So we say, go on, Brother Francis, with your present work, and know that good thoughts of grand and glorious success are God-speeding you forward.

Judged From a Spiritualistic Standpoint.

The ever urgent cry of to-day is for legislative reform, and as the only answer to that cry Socialism has come to the front. It is believed by its votaries to be the best solution of the political and industrial problems now facing the present age.

The labor problem in American and many European nations has become a very grave question. The constant war between capital and labor is tending to anything but peace and good will. A solution of the question would seem to be a pressing demand in view of the exigencies of the case yet it might not be stating too much if it was said here that what will be the only true and lasting remedy for the evil, would if given now not be favorably received.

Social reformers particularly of the political class have certain preconceived opinions as to how these things must be adjusted. They desire to legislate the people into peace and plenty through the power of a righteous and equitable government. Socialists, like all other classes of extremists, are one-sided and tenacious to a fault of that particular side of the question which they have espoused. Political and social reform, whilst serving a purpose in the economy of life, cannot and will not of itself do for the people what so many of its adherents fondly anticipate. Whilst granting the benefits of a righteous and equitable form of government in the interests of the people irrespective of class or party, it falls short of what is the actual need of the people.

Republican governments at one time were thought to be the "beau ideal" government of an advanced nation. In comparison with monarchal rule, Republicanism was supposed to stand first by the superiority of its constitution. Yet permeating the foremost of Republican constitutions we have political corruption and chicanery holding sway. The youth and freedom of the form of constitution has been taken advantage of by political bosses, multi-millionaires and thieving trusts. Instead of finding that the working and ordinary classes of the people are getting richer and more contented, the contrary turns out to be the case. The few own the wealth of the nation, and the rest go a begging. That such a condition of affairs exists amongst a free and liberty-loving people points to "something rotten in the state of Denmark." There is an important screw loose somewhere which requires adjusting. The fault lies not with the existing constitution so much, be it ever so deficient in its make-up, as with the members who compose its government.

In dealing with Republicanism the ideal form of government at present in existence, the question of Socialism has not been lost sight of. Only the argument is, that all things being equal, what applies to the one form of constitution might in time with equal force apply to a Socialistic legislative effort. Humanity without the true knowledge of those spiritual factors which go to make up a righteous and pure life, must ever be unreliable, whether the constitution be Democratic, Republican or Socialistic in its nature. Causes must be dealt with, not effects. Adjust the cause, and proper effects will follow as the resultant of such adjustment. The cause lies within man's self. Individual man must first be reformed, and the social and political questions will find true solution through such reformation.

Spiritual life as a determining factor in the adjustment of the industrial and political life of the people, has been largely a moot question. It has been relegated to a back seat in the affairs of life, as having an unimportant bearing on the case. To resuscitate and give it its proper place in life should be the earnest endeavor of all true lovers of the welfare of the human race.

Let it be distinctly understood that when the question of a true spiritual religion is here dealt with, that no reference whatever is had to dogmas, creeds, churches or isms. The divinity within the soul of man, its awakening expansion and ultimate control of his whole being, is the real issue of the question and will now be dealt with. The soul under the old orthodox conception of God and religion was supposed to be lost by nature and only through the reconciliation accomplished by the work of Jesus on the cross could man hope for salvation. This kind of religious belief was given to the world by the clergy (not by Jesus, as he never wrote a word of doctrine whilst on earth) as a panacea for all ills. The ridiculous doctrine of God the Infinite, propitiating himself and dying on the cross has been impudently given to the world as the mission of that great teacher of spiritual things, Jesus.

The date of the New Testament and the rise of Christianity was at the time of the Emperor Constantine, who paganized Christianity and made the people of his empire Christian at the point of the sword. The Council of Nice decided the canonicity of the New Testament, and from that body of clergymen was founded the Roman Catholic hierarchy. The Latin Vulgate is the correct version of the New Testament writings. From the Roman Catholics, Protestants received their religion in fact. Protestantism in its various branches is only mutilated Roman Catholicism.

The world has been asked to accept a record of religious dogma which was prepared and doctored by old-time priests, as the infallible record of God's revelation to man. As the resultant of religious dogmas, churches and creeds, wars and bloodshed have disgraced the ages since the uprise of the Christian era. Do not blame Jesus, the healer and teacher, for this, the world has wronged one of its greatest and noblest souls by attributing to it false claims and spurious assumptions.

Greedy priests, false teachers and a corrupt and ignorant clergy were the foisters on the people of these doctrines. To-day must be unloosed the bonds of ignorance that the world may go free, and no puny priest, church or ism will hinder the progress of truth and the final emancipation of the race from all error. Instead of divinity being imparted to man through credulous belief, he will know and understand the power of God within himself.

Religion in its truest meaning is the awakening of the soul from the fetters of animality and ignorance, into a higher consciousness of life. It is the spontaneous uprising in the soul of a new affection which attracts and draws it into a realization of the true divinity within itself.

Jesus uttered a great truth which has been obscured and misunderstood by his pseudo followers, when he said: "Ye must be born again." This is a scientific law of life relating to the spiritual unfolding and regeneration of the soul. The majority of mankind are born of animal passion. To enter into the kingdom of spiritual life one requires a new birth, the re-chemicalizing of the atoms composing his organism, on to a higher plane of vibration. Thus in the highest sense of the term religion is a new birth, the springing from within man's soul of an interior power which molds and changes the life to operate on a higher plane of conscious activity. In some cases more than others the seed of divinity is so deeply buried by the encasement of the grosser animal conditions of life, that its growth is more tardy in finding expression. The soil of such an one requires careful tending and turning over before definite results are gained.

Man is in his make-up truly a religious being and when he neglects that part of his nature, he does so at the expense of the whole, and disaster overtakes him sooner or later. To allow the lower or animal senses to dominate and rule is to put the powers of his life in charge of the lowest department of his being. Surely such a course is wholly unphilosophical and unscientific.

How to awaken knowledge of something higher than the life of the animal sense has been the effort of all spiritual teachers throughout the ages. Hell-fire teaching was a good old-fashioned remedy, like the doses our grandmother prescribed for us, effectual, but awful nasty to swallow. Robert Burns, the Scottish poet described the preaching of hell-fire as "the hangman's rope to haw'd the wretch in order." It would seem to have served its day and time, to scare the animal man into something like a sense of rightness. The effect has now worn off and the thinking minds of to-day require something more reasonable on which to base their philosophy of life.

Many scientific minds relegated everything to the realm of matter; matter first and last, the alpha and omega of all creation. A spiritual conception of the universe was wholly unthinkable to such minds. The demand was for demonstration and fact, the church could not give it their religion being built up of an unreasoning faith in theological dogma.

The demonstration and fact have come through Modern Spiritualism, the world has received a shoal of spiritual verities which ought to last for all time. The psychic powers resident within the organism of humanity have been discovered, and through these powers scientific minds have had proven to them beyond question the reality of spirit and the continuity of life in other realms of being. Names such as Professor Hare, Robert Dale Owen, Sir William Crookes, Dr. Hyslop, Dr. Hodgson, Sergt. Cox, Professor Oliver Lodge (of Edinburgh University) Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace, Professor Zollner (of German University fame), Flammarion, the French scientist, and scores of other prominent writers and thinkers have all added their quota of thought testifying to the reality of spirit manifestations. Through the thousands of media the world over, a rational philosophy of life has been received. Man is divine and his own savior, he requires no vicarious atonement to fit him for heaven; he must work out the result of his own ignorance and folly. Through the endless ladder of progression he learns all he requires to know.

The power to make mankind new creatures springs from within, drawn from that innermost vibration of life, which is ceaseless and untiring in its energy, making all things new. Religion is our life, not the act of a moment merely; not one conversion, but it is continually converting us and giving us a fuller consciousness of life.

It isn't so much the environments that make the man as it is man who creates and makes his environments. Changing a man's surroundings does not necessarily change the man. If life springs from an interior source, you cannot change the current of that life by doctoring up the externals. The same error would be committed as by Doctors who treat symptoms and neglect to discover the cause that is producing the symptoms.

It is proposed to give man in his present submerged condition of mind, ideal conditions of government and environment, but if man is not equal to these same conditions, that is, has grown into them as the resultant of the interior reformation of his life, they will be practically useless to him. He will not be able to appreciate or put them to the best advantage. His grossness of life and conduct are just as likely to continue in such conditions, as out of them. A pig in a drawing-room would not behave itself any better, than in a barn, nor would it be expected to do so. All reformation of life must spring from within, growing outwards; if you doctor up the outside only, the inside being still unchanged, the result will not be satisfactory. With the awakened consciousness to the higher life of the soul and a true understanding of the principal factors that go to make up a harmonious existence, so will the soul enjoy ideal conditions of life.

The requirements of humanity are the understanding of life through the consciousness of divinity within itself. The experiences of life are such, that the unawakened or animal man, is wholly an unreliable quantity, be he a Republican, Democrat, or Socialist. When self-seeking, personal aggrandizement and dollars are made the main objects of political life, corruption and disaster are sure to follow.

If such who seek to benefit permanently the human race, would recognize their true relation to the whole and also the utter worthlessness of all narrow, selfish and personal ends, they would be on a fair road to doing something good. Those who serve humanity in a public capacity are in reality the servants of divinity; as such they should be noble, pure and righteous, commanding the love and sympathy of all those whom they propose to serve.

A truly spiritual religious life is simple, though hard in the present material age. When the cobwebs of priests, creeds and dogmas are swept away from the portals of truth, all mankind must surely worship within its shrine. Jesus said, once at least he is reported to have said so, "I and the Father are one." If we can say so with a truthful spirit having recognized our oneness with Deity and all its manifestations of life, then likewise we are one with the Infinite. All life is one and comprehends the whole; truth is a relative apprehension of life, of universal application. Pray do not circumscribe it.

KANSAS NOTES.

Status of the Cause as Seen by a Worker.

Again I come to annoy the many readers of The Progressive Thinker with my would-be nothings, however, I trust they may eventually terminate into somethings.

Behold my great surprise upon reaching Wichita Saturday afternoon, to learn that our good and very genial sister, Laura B. Payne, was here and was to deliver a lecture in the Elks' Hall, 400 E. Douglas avenue, and to also learn that Mrs. Kayner was to be with us tomorrow. Now if Sister Bryan would only materialize, we would certainly have a glorious time and no mistake; however, Laura and I have met, visited and planned to arrange for a meeting Sunday evening, Sept. 3, and if Sister Kayner should join us to-morrow, we will have her, if possible, to aid us in our work Sunday evening.

Brother Francis, I wish to make a statement that should have been made some time ago, so that all might read as they run, and that is that Sister Bryan and myself are not out to injure mediumship, nor to break up circles, when we ourselves depend upon our medial gifts for our livelihood; neither are we out to uphold fakirs. In my travels I meet many that say to me, "Oh, Mrs. Jaquet, don't expose So-and-So; he (or she, whichever it may be) is helping our society."

Now, which is the fakir, the society or person employed to do the fake?

Not a thousand miles away is a trumpet medium, and one good sister who is helping to retain this horn medium, says: "While we know he is a ventriloquist, and perhaps does a part of the talking, at the same time we know the dear spirits manipulate the trumpet."

Oh, bosh! Likely story that the dear spirits are going to run around with the horn and place it to the ventriloquist's mouth, so that he may talk to his audience, who sit in utter darkness. You or they, will have to show me. I am from Chicago, and like the poor old Irishman, who peddled ashes for soap makers, I can not do justice by the case. All I can say is, that such people remind me of some would-be Christians—throw a blanket around the erring members of their church, and cover up the wrong, for it brings them money.

Another subject that is most important, that of organizing societies in Kansas. Do what we may, none are willing to come under the new state organization, claiming that they have but one state organization that is legal, at the same time at our meeting, held in Topeka, June 9, 10 and 11, one of the members, of the Bledsoe state organization arose and made the statement, that there could be no record found of there ever having been a state organization. Now, I trust that all these things will be more clear at the N. S. A. convention to be held in Minneapolis in October.

Sister L. B. Payne delivered a very forceful lecture last evening to a large audience, and was listened to with great earnestness. After the lecture a gentleman, who I am informed is a Universalist minister, arose and said that while he was a novice along our lines of philosophy, he was well pleased with the lecture, and it had given him food for thought. AIM FOR THE TOP OF THE TREE.

Is there a pain in your heart that's eating your very life away?
Does it come every morning and evening, no difference how you pray?
Does it reach way down in your lonely soul, crushing your higher aims,
Crumbling to dust your better self, with all that honor claims?

Is there a burden you carry thro' life, mayhap not all your own,
And you can't get out from under the load that weighs you down like stone?
If no way you turn, you scan catch a gleam of hope, to quiet your soul,
And a weary cry springs out from your heart: Oh, could I but reach the goal!

Then lift your thoughts to the better life; send forth your bravest plea;
With your bow of promise, an arrow of hope, aim for the top of the tree!
Many others have sorrow and trouble, no life from grief is free,
So speed your arrow—not at center nor root, but straight for the top of the tree.

REMARKABLE DREAM WARNINGS.

Resulting, of Course, from Direct Spirit Influence.

A remarkable case of dream-warning was that of Henry Gay of Abertillery, Monmouthshire, England, who on February 19, 1901, had a vivid dream, in which he declared he was standing with a "radiant presence" in a shining cornfield. His companion gathered four ears of corn and handed them to him with the words, "These are all for thee." Mr. Gay immediately told the Rev. D. Collier, of Abertillery, of his strange dream, and said he was convinced that its meaning was that he had four more years to live, a conviction which no argument could shake. Exactly four years later, on February 19, 1905, Mr. Gay died.

The late Lady Teedmouth, shortly before she died, had a strong conviction that the end was near, as the following story proves. At the last dinner at which her Ladyship was a guest in London she was taken in by Lord Rosebery, and during the meal eclipsed even herself by the brilliance of her conversation. At the close of the evening she placed her hand in that of Lord Rosebery and said, without a quaver in her voice, "Good-by, Rosebery."

"Good-night, you mean," replied the Earl.

"No, it is good-by. This is my last dinner in town. I am now going home to Scotland to die."

Two curious cases of this kind were reported recently from Kent and Gloucestershire. In one, Mrs. Cook of New Romney, Kent, in saying "good-by" to some friends on Boxing Day, told them that she would die on the following day, and within twenty-four hours she was found dead in bed, having passed away in her sleep.

In the other case, Martha Wiggett, living at Cutsdean, Gloucestershire, while taking tea with a lodger, remarked that that would be her last meal, although to all appearances she was in excellent health at the time. Less than an hour later, while at a neighbor's house, she complained of a choking sensation, lapsed into unconsciousness and died without speaking again.

Professor Palmer, before he started on his ill-fated expedition to win over the Sinai tribes in 1881, had a strong conviction that he would never return. One day when he was sitting in the editor's room at the Standard office, Mr. Byron Curtis, the acting editor, observed that he was staring vacantly at a copy of the Globe.

"What's wrong with you, Palmer?" Mr. Curtis asked. "You're awfully quiet tonight."

Palmer looked up sadly. "I was just thinking"—he said, "What it would look like to see printed at the head of one of these columns the words, 'Murder of Prof. Palmer.'" Not many months later these were the very words which appeared in large type at the head of one of the Globe columns.

It will be recalled, too, in this connection how Gen. Wauchope, before leaving for South Africa, where his brave heart was stilled in death, assured his friends that he would never come back to them. Lord Winchester went out to fight for his country with a similar strong presentiment. "No, I know it's good-by," he said in farewell to one of his old friends; "I shan't see you again." Maj. Childe was equally certain he was going to his death, and Col. Stopford, when bidding one of his relatives farewell, said: "I shall never come back again. The Boers are excellent shots and I shall make a good target."

"Poor Weston Foote, the great comedian, exclaimed, as with streaming eyes he looked at the picture of a recently dead friend, "Soon others will be saying 'Poor Foote!'"—and in a few more days his prophetic words were verified. And to give but one more example of these strange premonitions, Hogarth chose as the subject of his last painting, "The End of All Things."

"In that case," said a friend jocularly, "there will be an end of the painter."

"There will," replied Hogarth, sadly, "and the sooner my work is done the better."

When he had put the last touch to the canvas he broke his palette in pieces, exclaiming, "I have finished," and a few weeks later his clever hand was stilled forever.

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

The Warfare of Science With Theology.

A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom. By ANDREW D. WHITE, LL. D., late President and Professor of History at Cornell University. In Two Volumes. 8vo. Cloth, Five Dollars. For Sale at This Office.

In these two large volumes are combined information that the reader could not find in the libraries of the world in fifty years. It shows the constant and determined opposition of Theology to the advancement that has been made in every branch of Science. To the Student it is indispensible. Every Free Thought Speaker should have it. It should circulate in every community. It goes into minute details, citing in all cases the authority, showing the persistency of Theology in fighting new and advanced ideas in Science.

"THE WARFARE OF SCIENCE WITH THEOLOGY" is undoubtedly the most complete, careful, conscientious, able and bravely impartial history of the subject ever written. The exactness and reliability of its facts and citations are unquestioned. Its vast scholarly research is amazing. It contains just the information the student and thinker needs, and so indexed and tabulated that it is handy as a dictionary when one wishes to refer to some special point or topic.

These two large volumes, containing about 900 pages, will be sent to any address on receipt of the price, Five Dollars.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as o Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "otherworldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

"THE UNKNOWN"

—BY—

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Price $2.00.

History of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION to the Year 200,

BY CHARLES V. WAITE, A. M.

Fifth Edition—Revised, with Much Additional Matter in Appendix.

A standard and reliable history of the earlier period of the church, giving facts that are not found in the so-called histories written by churchmen. This latest edition has been carefully and thoroughly revised, and it is a reliable magazine of facts, such as the honest inquirer wants. It opens up to the investigator and student a wide field of historical research in matters of fact wholly ignored by the regular church historians, and throws a bright glare of light on points heretofore carefully shrouded in darkness.

A large octavo volume of 550 pages, strongly bound in cloth. Price $2.25. For sale at The Progressive Thinker office.

God or Nature.

The Christian Religion and Natural Ethics.

As usual, of course, under the various orthodox constructions there is a difference of opinion about this matter of faith with and without works, but it is one of the many discrepancies which militate against the acceptance of biblical assertion. No doubt Luther knew as much about this as any Christian. In "Table Talk" he says: "Every doer of the law and every moral worker is accursed, for he walketh in the presumption of his own righteousness." Again, "If men only believe enough in Christ they can commit adultery and murder a thousand times a day without perilling their salvation." And again, "He that says the gospel requires works for salvation, I say flat and plain he is a liar."

What an outrageous doctrine! and yet he has the weight of the testimony, as shown in Gal. ii:16, Romans iv:5, Romans iii:28 and elsewhere. The contradictory passages may be mentioned as readily, but of what use is it, why take the time? It just amounts to this, any way: if one is elected to eternal life he is so constituted that he can believe without or in spite of any evidence, but if ordained to damnation he is so constituted that he cannot believe such evidence as is contrary to reason.

How easy it is for the great majority of people to accept this idea of salvation by faith; how easy for those who do not or cannot think therein they have a passport to heaven. And how often people shut their ears to reason for fear that it will rob them of this ignominious, childish belief.

Fifth, the idea that prevails in the church that its religious instructions and observances are all-potent in establishing that state of mind which leads to eternal life and the trust in the ever ready arm of their omnipotent Jehovah to draw his creation of moral depravity into the fold, makes the religious instruction of children paramount to natural, scientific moral training and instruction, and the youthful mind is more or less if not wholly neglected in that kind of education which alone rescues it from the evil tendencies with which a "kind and loving Creator" has endowed it.

In my opinion there never was a Christian parent who did not to some extent neglect the natural training of his offspring through his trust in what he regards as the higher influences. To illustrate the conditions as they actually exist under this head, let me take a representative case: I have in view a youth with whom I am intimately acquainted, who fairly represents the class to which he belongs as to selfishness, acquisitiveness, animal propensities, self-indulgence and unrestraint. He has been carefully imbued with religious ideas and prevailed upon to enter the church which in the estimation o his parents and himself assures his eternal welfare.

He attends the religious exercises of his church and fully expects to get to heaven, but the natural selfishness of his heart is unchanged if not enhanced; his not altogether scrupulous ideas of acquirement are in no way modified, nor do they take more into consideration the rights of those of whom he acquires; his animal inclinations are not in any respect reduced, his self-restraint in no way strengthened.

On what he believes to be the Sabbath he plays base ball, football or any other game he chooses, under not too obvious conditions; does mechanical work in an obscure out-of-sight kind of way, and, in short, does many things not naturally or intrinsically wrong for one outside of his belief. Aside from his religious teaching he has had some instruction, on natural principles, in regard to natural and real immoralities, such as the use of alcoholic drinks and tobacco.

If he had been taught that these things were simply objectionable from a religious point of view, there would be no reason to expect anything but a downfall should his inclinations lead him in that direction or should his associations become such as to influence him to enter upon such practices; but having been instructed from his childhood and led to see and understand as he grew older the penalties which Nature inevitably inflicts upon those who violate her laws in these respects—having been shown that the use of these things is individually degrading and destructive—that the penalty is sure and cannot be paid by another, it is as certain as can be that he will never violate the resolutions of abstinence which he has formed in regard to these particular things.

Sixth, the opposition of the church to art and science when these have conflicted with its interests or opposed its errors brings it into disrepute with that class of thinkers who move the world. The authors of its book did not know that the earth was a globe and that it revolved; but in spite of the deadly persecution which the church inflicted upon Galileo and others who promulgated the facts, the world has adopted the scientific view and even the church knows to the discredit of its book that the sun does not revolve around the earth and that the earth is not a plane.

When the art of printing was introduced the church termed it the black art and opposed it on the ground that it would prove detrimental to religion, yet printing has become the greatest source of intellectual development and progress the world has ever known. Finding that it was powerless to suppress the art, the church now assumes to have been its patron while it strenuously exerts itself to control it in its own interests. Failing in this, what will it do next? The doctrine of evolution met with the bitterest assault from the pulpit. To-day the idea is accepted by every scholar and scientist of note in the world and the church, to save itself is seeking some pretext or ground for embracing it. To-morrow or the day following or soon, she will be claiming the honor of its discovery. There seems to be no end to this phase of the subject or to any phase of it for that matter, and I must leave it, much to my regret, and pass on toward the end.

It is a peculiar fact and worthy of notice that in the church there are many commendable people who are better than the creed they profess. Such people, however, are not much given to logical investigation, whether from a lack of ability or from disinclination. They do not understand or else do not consider the signification of omnipotence as applied to Jehovah, and instead of regarding him as essentially he should be regarded, they idealize him as a being who is unlimited in power, and yet, with absurd inconsistency, as one who is limited in responsibility and as one who is all love and goodness. They would regard with spasmodic horror the idea that if Jehovah is to be credited with all the good he must also be charged with all the evil, all the sin and all the anguish. They would deprecate the unavoidable conclusion that to Jehovah as an omnipotence must be ascribed the ignominy of having in preference established in the beginning the universal law which results in all that is—the law of sin and pain—when he could as easily have arranged a heavenly existence everywhere.

But, as I have said, they idealize the being they worship, clothe him with all the virtue they are capable of conceiving, and seek to conform themselves to him. This may result in individual good, but how much more rational, how much more direct and efficient it would be to simply conceive the ideal and apply it directly, seeking thus to fix its image within the soul. Aside from the execrable character which according to the tenets of the church must unavoidably be attached to the being whom it regards as supreme, aside from its horrors as depicted in regard to those who by no fault of their own were created for evil; aside from its bigotry and persecution, aside from its fallacies and inconsistencies, aside from its false claims, there is something pathetically beautiful in the self-abnegation, in the sympathy and charity toward suffering humanity, in the aspiration and effort to reach a still higher plane of spirituality manifested by some of those within the fold—those who see only the brighter side of the picture and who yet have builded their house upon the sand. It is the radiance of these sweet souls that makes the church in any degree attractive. But if such lives are beautiful, what shall we say of those outside the pale who possess the same virtues, yet know and understand, and have founded their structure upon the rock of truth. How much brighter and more beautiful are such characters, how much stronger and more efficient, how much more harmonious and unimpeded.

When tribulation assails these shining devotees of the church they derive solace from their belief that this being of imaginary goodness hears their cry, gives them a helping hand and promises eternal rest hereafter from all the agonies of this life. They do not for one moment stop to think that this omnipotent being could as easily have given them rest and happiness not only hereafter but here also. They do not stop to think that if he does help them out of the mire, he first casts them in, and only helps them out to cast them in again. Or should they by any possibility conceive that this "loving father" is the cause of all their suffering and misfortune, they believe that it is for their ultimate good and only the result of his boundless love and interest in the welfare of his unfortunate children. But not once do they think that this omnipotence chose and established this law of suffering in preference to the one of universal and everlasting peace and joy. Ah, poor suffering children of earth! How my heart grieves for you. How I wish there was some one to hear and help; but an inexorable Nature sways the scepter, the law is fixed and I can only place before you the tree of knowledge and invite you to eat the fruit thereof.

It is only necessary to establish the character of an omnipotent being by whose arrangement his creatures must suffer martyrdom—by whose choice everything is as it is, to determine the falseness of the orthodox biblical religion; and, having determined that, one should seek for the truth as it relates to the interests and welfare of the human race. It is safe to say that truth is better than fiction, that reality is better than illusion, even though the illusion may convert pain into imaginary pleasure; for it is better, not to have the pain, and through truth we may avoid it. Being subject to the natural law, we should become students of that law in order to be born well and to live well. The morality and physical well-being of a person depend largely upon the natural morality—not the religious characteristics—of his predecessors.

Then there should be a thoroughly developed system of training and instruction by which the childish mind is led to understand, appreciate and adapt itself to such moral conditions as Nature demands for the best interests of humanity as a whole. When we make science the subject of our study and devotion, and follow its dictates, we shall achieve all that is in store for us, and the race will advance with a marvelous, unparalleled stride. Such is the better way.

I have repeated over and over the fact of an omnipotent creator's responsibility for all that exists, because it is a fact that is too easily lost sight of. I may or may not have clothed it in sufficiently variable language to avoid unpleasant monotony, but I offer the need as my excuse. I have also spoken with such directness and emphasis as may from your point of view seem rude, but I trust not, for that has been furthest from my wish. I am so constituted that the very thought of pain and suffering is intolerable. My own life has been full of physical pain and my sympathies with those whose afflictions, through no fault of their own, have been inexpressibly greater than mine lead me to speak feelingly and strongly on this subject. In addition to this, I naturally like directness and hate evasion and especially fallacy and fraud. So if in stating what I conceive to be facts I have seemed to speak with undue warmth, I hope that you will be able to make some allowance and consider the matter wholly in the light of the statements which I have made.

In making these statements I have been careful to avoid anything illogical or that cannot be demonstrated or substantiated, and rather than be regarded as extreme, I have refrained from so many biblical and deducible accusations against this impossible Jehovah, that you may give me credit for restraint instead of charging me with too ardent indulgence. There are many who having no better argument would pronounce what I have written unmitigated blasphemy; but let them think twice before making that assertion. In the first place no fact can by any possibility be blasphemous, and I defy any one to show that I have made a statement in regard to Jehovah that is not justified by the evidence. In the second place the intention should be taken into consideration, and so far from blasphemy am I that I disbelieve in the existence of such a being as Jehovah is described to be, rather than lay upon him the iniquity of and the responsibility for the evils which in accordance with the biblical presentation can not be evaded.

Either there is an infinite Jehovah who is responsible for everything just as it is, or there is no Jehovah; and I think it is much more creditable and much more rational to regard him as a nonentity than to worship a being to whom must be ascribed the authorship of evil—the originator of the law by which the earth is full of pain and sorrow. I recognize in Nature a vital force, but I cannot accept the idea of an infinite creative intelligence, for the reason that whether it be Jehovah or another he is responsible for having chosen the fiendish way which prevails, instead of a way of goodness, peace and joy. To me this vital principle in Nature is the law, and the law is the universe uncreated, without beginning and without end.

I must not omit to give you what I term the Golden Key to this whole religious subject. It settles the matter in the briefest manner possible, as it applies directly to the fountain head. It is this: Nothing is or can be contrary to the wishes of an omnipotent creator. This being true, you will readily see that the story about the fall in the Garden of Eden is simply a myth and the plan of salvation a fiction. There are other evidences which fully determine the mythical character of this Eden story, but if there were not, the Golden Key is sufficient of itself. By this you will see that had the fall occurred it would not have been as the result of Jehovah's wishes; and, as man could not by any possibility evade the plans or wishes of omnipotence, he could by no means be justly condemned, and an unjust Jehovah would be a monstrosity not to be thought of.

You will also see how in the light of omnipotence, who wills all things, it would be impossible to sin; and yet we know that the world is full of sin and full of penalty. We must, therefore, decide between an unjust omnipotence or an irresponsible Nature. By the application of the Key you may also comprehend more fully the fact that if Jehovah reigns, all the evil—all the dens of iniquity and all the misery exist only in accordance with his wishes, and that having chosen a plan by which evil prevails instead of good, he cannot, as represented, be a God of love and mercy; and if not as represented it may be well to conclude that no such being exists.

Regretting on the one hand that I have been impelled to write at such length, while on the other I am reluctant to leave the subject with comparatively so limited an exposition, I now bring my epistle to a close. I shall be pleased to hear from you at any time, but should I have occasion to write again I must do so with the utmost brevity; dealing, perhaps, with but one phase of a subject at a time, as writing under such physical conditions is not only difficult but detrimental. So you need not be deterred from writing me through fear of having to wade through another prolix and tiresome discourse.

Very sincerely yours,
JEPTHA G. DUNLAP.

MEMORIAL SERVICES

At Queen City Park, Burlington, Vt.

Memorial services for Dr. E. A. Smith, Brandon, Vt.; Hiram Preston, Sharon, Vt.; Samuel Richardson, Roxbury, Vt.; Mrs. Nellie Montgomery, Moretown, Vt.; Miss Susie Stafford, Stowe, Vt., and Mrs. Sarah Patrick, East Montpelier, Vt., who have passed away during the past year, were held in the pavilion at Queen City Park, Burlington, Vt., on Wednesday, Aug. 23. The speakers who took part were Alonzo F. Hubbard, Mrs. Abby Crossett, Dr. S. N. Gould, Mrs. Helen P. Russegue, Dr. B. F. Austin, Newman Weeks, Dr. W. B. Mills, A. E. Tisdale.

The attendance was large, the auditorium being filled. The beautiful flowers contributed by loving hearts and hands, filled the front of the platform and two tables. Life-size portraits of Dr. E. A. Smith and his beloved wife, Fannie Davis Smith, hung back of the speakers' platform. On the two sides of the hall hung life-size portraits of Achsa W. Sprague, Nellie Kenyon, Mr. and Mrs. Sabin Scott, and Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Webb, who were among the early Spiritualists and founders of Queen City Park; also portrait of Dr. George Bronson, who was one of Vermont's greatest and most successful healers.

Newman Weeks and Dr. W. B. Mills had known Dr. Smith intimately from his young manhood all through his professional and business life. They had also known well, and with very high appreciation, his wife, Fannie Davis Smith, from her commencement as a public speaker, all through her most glorious success in New England and the middle west. High tributes were expressed by the other speakers as to Dr. Smith and his wife Fannie, and the other good and loyal souls, who had left noble life records behind them, and who will ever be held in fond remembrance.

Mrs. Russegue, Mr. Hubbard and Dr. Gould spoke earnestly of their appreciation of the fidelity and constant efforts of Dr. Smith in behalf of the cause of Spiritualism at large, and especially his love for Queen City Park and his zeal and determination that the association should succeed and be protected.

A. E. Tisdale rendered two songs; one was, "One by One Our Dear Friends Fall."

One glorious consolation is ever with mortals: "We shall meet beyond the river." NEWMAN WEEKS.

Onset Camp, Mass.

This is a grand closing of one of the grandest meetings held at this camp.

Every seat in the great temple was occupied during the afternoon. The Rev. Wilson Fritch of Attleboro, Mass., was the speaker, and he gave great satisfaction. Miss Annie Foley, of Haverhill, Mass., was the medium. This was Miss Foley's first appearance at Onset, and her success was instantaneous. She is the youngest medium upon the platform to-day, and she has a great future. Societies should hear her.

Of course the audience in the morning was large, as the speaker was that ever popular speaker, Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes. The music for the occasion was furnished by Mr. and Miss Holbrook, and was enjoyed by the vast audience.

Miss Foley closed the meetings for the season by holding a seance in the Arcade to a large audience.

The season of 1905 has passed away, but will not be forgotten by a single person that attended the meetings.

Engagements are being made for 1906 meeting. Many new faces will be presented to the people next season.

The management thanks this paper for its kindness in printing all that has been sent to it. H.

IMPORTANT WORK.

"Official Register of the National, State and Local Spiritualist Associations of the United States and Canada, With Lyceums, Camp-Meetings and Mediums."

The above is the title of a highly important illustrated work, gotten up with painstaking care, by Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, the efficient vice-president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, 1047 Carmen Avenue, Chicago. It contains 100 pages and will prove of great value to those who wish to get information in regard to the different societies located in various parts of the country. It is gotten up in a most beautifully artistic style, and reflects great credit on its compiler. This long needed work will impress the casual observer with the extensive following we have, and the dignity due to the grandest and most important philosophy now before the wholecivilized world. It leads off with a magnificent photo-engraving of Mrs. Abby Louise Pettengill, president of the "City of Light" Assembly, Lily Dale, N. Y., who is a prominent factor in the education process now going on in our ranks. This Official Register can be obtained by addressing this office. Price $1.

Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any inflammable descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times.

SPIRITUAL HARP A collection of Vocal Music for the Choir, Congregation and Social Circles. By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; E. H. Bailey, Musical Editor. New edition. Culled from a wide field of literature with the most critical care, free from all theological bias, throbbing with the soul of inspiration, embodying the principles and virtues of the spiritual philosophy, set to the most cheerful and popular music (nearly all original) and adapted to all occasions, it is doubtless the most attractive work of the kind ever published. Its beautiful songs, duets and quartets, with piano, organ or melodeon accompaniment, adapted both to public meetings and the social circles. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 14 cents.

HARMONICS OF EVOLUTION.
The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science
As taught by modern masters of law. By Florence Huntley. An exceedingly interesting and distinctly valuable contribution to the literature of evolution, unfolding its laws from the deeper and clearer spiritual aspect, and indicating the defects of the Darwinian theory. Spiritualists and Materialists alike can gain much from its perusal. Price, finely bound in cloth, $2.

Discovery of a Lost Trail
BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,
Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by the wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.
"Discovery of a Lost Trail"
is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but, grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

HYPNOTISM PHTHISIS CURE.

Claimed Even Most Advanced Cases Have Been Successfully Treated.

Hypnotism a cure for consumption is the latest claim of the medical profession. Dr. Charles O. Sahler of Kingston, N. Y., who is a firm believer in hypnotism for curing nervous, mental and functional disease and uses that power extensively in the treatment of cases, is the exponent of the new use of hypnotism. He claims that with the hypnotic treatment the white plaugue can be cured if treatment is given in the early stages of the disease in from four to twelve weeks.

In the most advanced stages the treatment must extend over a period varying from six months to a year and even cases that have been pronounced hopeless have been and can be cured under the hypnotic treatment which Dr. Sahler advocates.

"When a patient comes to me suffering with consumption," said Dr. Sahler to-day, "I treat him the same as I treat all other ailments, by establishing within the patient's mind a consciousness that the ego, or soul, is a great central director of all bodily and mental functions, that, through the influence of the ego, the body is builded and repaired from the substance which we take into the digestive system and from the substance which we inhale through the breathing system.

"This is done more effectively by putting the patient in what is commonly called the hypnotic state, but in truth a psychic state, which is neither a sleep nor a trance, but is a peculiar state of mental and physical repose. While in this state the law of suggestion is used to establish, within the superconsciousness, the first truth mentioned, that it is the builder and restorer of the psychic organization.

"Not everyone who possesses the power to hypnotize should be allowed to use that power either in the course of tuberculosis or any other disease. The ordinary use of hypnotism becomes dangerous when used promiscuously by the laity. It is as dangerous for one not educated and trained and not using it conscientiously as for a man to use gun cotton or anything similar who is not particularly trained in its use. Hypnotism is a science and should be used as any other science."

Edgewood Camp, Wash.

This camp closed for the season Aug. 20, and it was the unanimous opinion of all interested that it was the best camp yet held by the Washington State Association. While the attendance was not large, the meetings were very harmonious, and never have I seen such complete harmony among the various speakers and mediums. There was an entire absence of the "I am holier than thou" spirit and no disposition manifested on the part of any one "to be greatest in the kingdom of heaven."

Audiences on Sundays were large when one considers the location of the camp, but it seems plain that the camp is not accessible to any great number of people. Nine miles from Tacoma and twenty-seven miles from Seattle, precludes the attendance of any great number of people from these thriving cities. True, there is hourly service on the Inter-Urban Electric Line to Edgewood Station, but from there to camp is fully three-quarters of a mile over a generally very dusty road. There seems to be quite a general demand to change the location to one more accessible, somewhere on the Sound and midway between the two cities, which will enable patrons to reach the grounds by boat as well as by car lines. This will no doubt be accomplished in the near future.

The sessions of the state convention, held on the camp grounds, Aug. 21 and 22, were very harmonious in character, there were no criminations and recriminations indulged in and there being no mediums on the grounds for physical mediumship, there were no disputes and no wrangling. The mental phases were numerous and mostly of the clean cut variety, and taken all in all your scribe can truthfully aver that it was the cleanest camp he ever had the pleasure of attending.

I shall have the pleasure of serving the Seattle society for the month of September, and desire all correspondence directed to General Delivery, Seattle, Wash. WILL C. HODGE.

Wedding at Camp Chesterfield.

On Friday night, in the beautifully decorated auditorium, in the presence of campers and friends, the marriage of Mr. John Mendenhall of Chicago, and Miss Ethel Lee of Elwood, Ind., was solemnized. The bride and her attendant, Miss Minnie Mendenhall; the ring bearer, little Jessie Lee; the flower girl, little Rebecca McKee, gowned in soft white, carrying shower bouquets of bride's roses and carnations; with the groom and attendant, Mr. George Vonderheide, made a picture that the many who witnessed will not soon forget. The wedding march was played by Miss Jessie Marley. The platform upon which the ceremony was performed, was decorated with a profusion of palms and cut flowers. The ceremony was performed by Mrs. Anna Gillespie. Mr. Will Nicum gracefully gave the bride away. After a brief reception a dainty collation was served in the refreshment parlor. All unite in wishing the young couple a happy life.

On Friday morning the closing exercises of the lyceum were beautiful. A large audience was present. During the services the christening of little Juanita Hoag added a pathos and interest to the work. Crowned with flowers, with lilies in her arms, the 3-year-old baby looked almost unearthly in her beauty. As the spirit name of Hope was given by Mrs. Gillespie, a glow was on the little face, symbolic of her name. Many eyes were wet and tender, as the silent prayer went up that "angels might lead her all the way."

A CALL FOR TEACHERS.

There is a large field for healers and teachers in small towns. After a little study of "Healing Currents from the Battery of Life" (by Walter DeVoe), students start groups for study and realization of the healing power.

So helpful is this book that as many as 21 copies have been sold to a group formed to hear it read. Manifestations of healing are common where students unite to study and practice the instructions given in this wonderful book. Many are willing to pay for instruction in healing truth, but there is need of energetic persons to get them together.

Those who can successfully form groups in their own town among their friends will find enjoyable and profitable work doing the same in other towns.

Order a copy now and spread the glad tidings. Price $2. Special terms to those who can sell a number of copies through personal effort or letters.

FREEVILLE CAMP.

The Central New York Spiritualist Association.

The Central New York Spiritual Association closed its tenth annual camp meeting at Freeville, N. Y., Sunday, August 20.

The association has been served by most efficient workers. Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, with her genial personality, and her ever helpful sermons, gave the opening address Sunday, July 23, and remained the first week.

Friday, July 28, Mrs. Twing spoke in the interest of the state association, that day being set aside as state day. An "Ichabod" seance for the benefit of the camp was much appreciated.

Dr. W. O. Knowles, of Grand Rapids, Mich., was message bearer, and also remained the following Sunday, July 30, to the satisfaction of many seeking consolation and proof of the immortality of loved ones.

Rev. J. S. Scarlett, of Cambridgeport, Mass., served the society Sunday morning, July 30, remaining two weeks. Rev. Scarlett, while he served the society, gave many scholarly addresses, and is a tireless worker for the cause. Friday, August 11, he spoke for the National Association.

Rev. Laura G. Fixen gave an earnest address, Sunday afternoon, July 30, and during the week gave other addresses which held the closest attention of her audiences.

Mrs. Mary M. Jennings of Moravia, who is fast coming to the front as an earnest and efficient worker, served the society.

Mrs. R. W. Barton, of Elmira, was among the corps of workers August 6 to 14, and not only lectured, but is a pleasing message bearer. She gave two benefit seances for the camp.

D. A. Herrick served the society the last two Sundays and the intervening week. Mr. Herrick is a host within himself, an eloquent lecturer, a message bearer and a trumpet medium. The demands for trumpet seances were greater than could be met, and neighboring towns also desired his services. Mr. Herrick held seances at Dryden and Moravia, and other adjoining towns were disappointed because there were not more days in a week.

Mrs. Clara L. Stewart spoke Thursday, August 17, for the Morris Pratt Institute, and as secretary of the school and representative of its interests she is a most faithful and competent worker.

Mrs. Alfarata H. Niver, who with her husband was present throughout, a teacher in the department of oratory for several years past, assisted Mrs. Stewart, and the friends from east to west know that the mantle of her orator father, Moses Hull, has also enfolded the daughter. Saturday evening Mrs. Niver gave a concert for the benefit of the Morris Pratt Institute. She was assisted by her worthy husband in guitar solos, soprano solos by Miss Mable Stone of Freeville, reading Miss Victoria C. Moore, and a most effective rendition of a Puritan ballad, "Peter Gray," by a quartette consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Niver, Mr. A. C. Stone and Mrs. S. Comstock Ellis. Mrs. Niver's readings elicited many encores.

Mrs. Mary E. Clark of Syracuse, assisted throughout as lecturer, message bearer, and an all around worker, but Mrs. Clark's most efficient work is as message bearer. In this phase of work she may excel.

Mrs. Sarah A. Walters, an earnest worker for the cause, was present throughout. Her sister, Mrs. Mary Von Kanzler, made a brief visit to the camp.

Mrs. Hattie Mead of Oneida, presided as organist.

Miss Grace Green of Dryden, who has a pleasing contralto voice, assisted, accompanied by Miss Alice M. Myers. Mr. C. E. Green of Dryden, added much to the enjoyment of those present with his very superior Victor talking machine.

On the closing Sunday, Miss Marguerite Zellers of Moravia, a child soprano, with a voice of wonderful range and volume, delighted her hearers.

The annual election of officers was held Saturday, August 19, and the officers for the ensuing year are: W. W. Kelsey, Cortland, N. Y., president; R. L. Weaver, Dryden, N. Y., first vice-president; C. E. Green, Dryden, N. Y., second vice-president; Miss Victoria C. Moore, Dryden, N. Y., secretary; E. B. Fuller, Rochester, N. Y., treasurer.

VICTORIA C. MOORE,
Secretary.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

On August 27 the camp had Mrs. Marian Carpenter as speaker, who is well known and well liked here. Mrs. Hollis presided as chairman in the absence of Mr. Hunger, the president.

Mrs. Flora Russell of Alliance again led the singing after an absence of several Sundays. She rendered several solos during the day, which is always a treat to Lake Brady audiences.

Mrs. Carpenter prefaced her remarks of the morning by reading a selection by Ella Wheeler Wilcox entitled "Thoughts." She carried out the idea that thoughts are things and by them we build our character and individuality, either consciously or unconsciously, and as that is all anyone can take with them to the spirit world, it behooves them to build well.

In the afternoon she again read a selection by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, "Open the Windows," using the same for her topic. Open the windows of your soul to receive as much truth as possible. The audience was large, the day was fine, and both lectures grand and convincing. Her messages were strong and carried comfort with them.

Next Sunday, September 3, is the last Sunday of Lake Brady Camp. Mrs. Carpenter will be the speaker for that day also. MARY L. BETTES.

Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

Wentworth Association, Ohio.

About one thousand people gathered at the 36th annual grove meeting of the Wentworth Association of Spiritualists, between Hicksville and Antwerp, Ohio, and listened to the logic and eloquence of Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss of Toledo.

The subjects of the three discourses given were furnished by people in the audience and were handled in a most remarkable manner by the speaker, who held the attention of her large audience from start to finish.

Messages were given by Mrs. Belle Fuller of Grand Rapids, Mich., and were concise and ORIENTAL IDEAS ILLUSTRATED.

There Seems to Be Inherent In Humanity a Necessity for the Worship of a Personal Ideal to Draw Out the Powers Latent In the Soul—Confucius and Lao-tze.

Teachings of Confucius [as set forth in the Chicago Evening Post], Chinese philosopher and reformer—Kung-fu-tze—Latinized by the Jesuit priests into Confucius—was born in the province of Shantung, Yin-chau, China, in the year 551 B. C., about fifty-three years after the great mystic philosopher Lao-tze. His family name was Kung, and he was known to his followers as Kung-fu-tze—"the teacher Kung." His teachings are in direct contrast to those of Lao-tze. Lao-tze was an idealist, Confucius a realist. Lao-tze was the Plato, Confucius the Aristotle of China. Lao-tze taught nopresistance—quietism carried to its logical conclusion; Confucius was a reformer, a utilitarian of the most strenuous type. Lao-tze was the mystical dreamer, Confucius the praetical executor. We find Confucius first engaged in the duties of an officer of state, suppressing abuses and introducing reforms. His rigid virtue and honesty were often obnoxious to the loose morals of the high state officials. But Confucius always discharged his duties regardless alike of approval or condemnation. It is said that in his thirty-third year he visited Lao-tze and was much impressed with the wisdom of this great man.

Among the subjects said to have been studied by Confucius were: History, poetry, philosophy, religion and magic. By magic is meant the superphysical control of certain forces. What is now known as telepathy, mental suggestion, clairvoyance, hypnotism, mental healing, etc., would have been classed by the ancients as magic—meaning great science. These things are "new" only to the western world. Among the books associated with the name of Confucius are the "Yi-King" ("Book of Changes"), the "Shi-King" ("Book of Poems"), the "Li-King" ("Rituals"), the "Shu-King" ("Book of Inscriptions") and "Tshun-Tsieu" ("Spring and Autumn"). These are the celebrated "Five Kings" which constitute the "canonical scriptures" of Confucianists. They teach the unity or brotherhood of man, the duties to one's neighbor, kindness, charity and filial obedience, or what we in this country would call "Christian virtues." The ethics of Confucius differ in no essential from the ethics of Jesus. When Confucianism finally became the state religion of China Confucius was elevated to the dignity of deity, and although he said, "I only hand on [the wisdom of the ancients] I cannot create anything new. I believe in the ancients, therefore I love them," he is deified by his followers and exalted "above all that is called God or is worshiped." This is another phenomenon peculiar to all religions, viz., the ultimate deification of the founders. It seems to point to the fact that there is inherent in humanity a necessity for the worship of a personal ideal to draw out the powers latent in the soul.

Abstract reasoning seemed to have little charm for the practical mind of Confucius, and although we find him positing the great extreme—the one ultimate reality—the Tao, the unknowable of Herbert Spencer—within which changes are constantly occurring, yet, like southern Buddhism, Confucianism has little teaching regarding the states after death. Confucius argued—as does the southern Buddhist—live according to law here, practice charity and kindness to all beings, and the future will take care of itself. While yet a mere youth he said: "Beautiful precepts are on the lips of nearly every man, but I cannot find one man who is practicing them. I will practice them!" Herein was the secret of his success. What others glibly talked about he lived. He declared that the first step toward wisdom was to perform the most trivial duties with scrupulous honesty. Of his teachings he said: "As to my doctrines, they are very simple, and my mode of teaching is still simpler. * * * He who well weighs my words will have no difficulty in seizing their meaning and reducing them to practice." When asked if there was one word which would express the whole duty of man, he said: "There is such a word, and it is reciprocity: do not do unto others that which you would not wish them to do unto you." Many claim that the golden rule originated with Confucius, but the same idea is found in all the other great religions. Confucianism, like southern Buddhism, has not much to say regarding states after death. As the southern aspect of Buddhism was the result of the reaction in India against the unhealthy fancy, fanatical superstition and fetish worship of the Hindus, into which they were led by the priesthood—Brahmins—so also was Confucianism a reaction in China against the same phenomenon. So we find Confucius saying: "To give oneself to the duties due to men, and while respecting spiritual things to keep aloof from them [rather from their degradation] may be called wisdom." Confucius held that wise government was based on self-control, and that no man should strive after or accept positions of public trust until he made him strongly virtuous and could practice self-control.

Much stress is laid on the necessity for filial piety; "filial piety is the source whence all other good actions take their rise." Confucianism is a splendid exposition to the minutest detail of man's relation to man. Of man's relation to the superhuman kingdoms and to God there is nothing. That such teachings, exalted though they were from the point of ethics, failed to satisfy the whole nature of the Chinese was proved by the subsequent introduction and acceptance of Buddhism [northern].

Lao-tze disagreed with Confucius on the doctrine of "charity and duty to one's neighbor." Lao-tze claimed that "virtue consists in being true to one's self, and charity in letting alone." Confucius would have a system of regulated charities; Lao-tzo would prevent the necessity for such institutions by allowing each man the freedom of self-expression. Confucius would have man's activities regulated by laws external to himself; Lao-tze would have man regulated by the law within himself. Confucius was conservative—the embodiment of government; Lao-tze was radical—the embodiment of individualism. Confucius was the exponent of the artificial life of civilization; Lao-tze that of the "simple life" of nature. Confucius sought to enrich men's minds by rationalism; Lao-tze sought to uplift their souls by idealism. The world today is richer and better because of the lives of these two great sages.

MARCUS JULIAN.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.,

The Status and Prospects of the New Thought Society.

After a vacation of more than three months during the warmest part of the summer, the New Thought Spiritual Society of Grand Rapids, opens its meetings again on Sunday, September 17, afternoon and evening services being held the same as formerly.

The Holland Unitarian Church, corner East Bridge and North Ionia streets, which proved such a satisfactory meeting place for the society last season, has been leased for the coming year, and being centrally located and ideal in every respect, will do much toward giving us a successful season.

A special effort has been made to secure speakers of the very highest excellence, and we believe we are justified in claiming that we have the best list of speakers engaged that it has ever been the fortune of a local society to secure.

For the opening Sunday, Sept. 17, and the Sunday following, we have Mrs. Abbie E. Sheets of Grand Ledge, one of Michigan's most popular workers in our ranks, and always a favorite among Grand Rapids Spiritualists, she is certain to have unusually large audiences at every lecture. Her lectures will be followed by messages, and for the opening day a special program will be arranged.

As to our speaker for October, Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown of El Campo, Texas, no word of praise from my pen is necessary. Formerly a resident of this city, no speaker ever receives a more enthusiastic welcome than does Mrs. Brown when she returns to warm us again before the fires of her logic and her inspiration.

November will give all liberal thinkers such a treat as they have not had before in years. W. J. Colville is our speaker for this month, and in addition to giving a series of twelve class lessons and speaking twice every Sunday, he will give twelve week-day evening lectures on dates to be announced later.

During December, February and May, Mrs. D. A. Morrill, a local speaker, will serve us. Disproving the adage that "a prophetess is not without honor save in her own country." Mrs. Morrill's lectures always please at home.

We look forward expectantly to the month of January, for Prof. W. M. Lockwood will then be with us. This will be Prof. Lockwood's first visit to Grand Rapids, but what we have missed by not having him with us before, we expect to make up during his future visits.

When Helen Stuart-Richings was formerly in the work she often appeared before local societies, always to crowded houses. When a short time ago it was announced that she had again entered the lecture field, an effort was at once made to secure her services for the New Thought Society. She is engaged for March and April.

This completes the list of speakers so far engaged, but if it is possible to engage for week-day nights any good speakers who happen to be in the vicinity, this will be done occasionally.

The New Thought Spiritual Society was organized a year ago last April, but since then has made extremely rapid progress. Its friends started out to make it the best society in Michigan. Already we are well on our way to this goal, and by the end of the present season we hope to have achieved it. The New Thought Society aims to be progressive. Societies innumerable have been organized, have enjoyed success for a time, and then have passed away prematurely.,

The reason, do you ask? It is simply this: All things are either advancing or receding. Nothing remains stationary. The society that achieves a certain degree of success and then, contented, ceases to grow, is doomed to failure. Having no longer one common end in view, dissatisfaction and dissension creep in among the members, or else interest lags. And once the society starts on the downward path it is extremely hard to turn the tide and regain what has been lost.

The proper way for a society, then, as for an individual, is always to aspire to something higher. Each foothold on the ladder of success should be used for the purpose of gaining yet a higher hold. Had Spiritualist societies throughout the country followed this plan from their inception, the average society would not be the partial failure we find it at present. If societies from the beginning of Spiritualism had continually striven to increase the scope of their usefulness as they should—had they exercised the untiring zeal that other religious organizations have, or had they worked as a few able workers in our own ranks have worked, Spiritualism would to-day occupy a place in the world's affairs far in advance of its present position. When Spiritualists learn that it is not all of managing a society to engage speakers and mediums and then sit down with folded arms to listen to them, when they realize that a society should be more, much more, than merely a place where people can congregate once a week to hear lectures and observe phenomena, then will our cause prosper as it never has before.

But I forget. I started out to herald the doings of Grand Rapids Spiritualists. Let me say in conclusion that Grand Rapids has long been known as a city of Spiritualists. We number thousands. Nowhere else is there so good an opportunity to build up a society par excellence. The New Thought Society starts out with many improvements over last season. The social features will be made more prominent. Many new features are contemplated and will be inaugurated during the year. Its officers understand what a society ought to be, and if careful planning and persistent hard work count for anything, The New Thought Spiritual Society will keep advancing until it stands the equal of any society in the United States. Keeping in mind that where there is a will there is a way, co-operation can accomplish much. Watch us grow.

THE CONFLICTS OF LIFE.

The Causes, Results, and the Remedy for Human Ills.

Countless millions of the human race, who are getting experience on this planet, that is not very pleasant, are asking the question: What are we here for, in our world of so many conflicting interests?

They are the troubled souls who are battling for an existence, amidst the trials, disappointments, reverses, sickness and death. They are living under unfavorable circumstances, and as all business ventures go against them, they give up in despair, living in idleness, poverty and want.

They behold the fortunate ones of life, living in luxury, and fine mansions, going forth from day to day riding in carriage of elegance, drawn by stylish horses, or in automobiles and palace cars, for pleasure. The rich enjoy all of the conveniences of modern times, while the poorer classes, in their lowly and humble conditions, look upon the millionaires with envy and hatred.

The wealthy people look down upon the struggling masses, with disgust and scorn, showing within themselves proud and haughty dispositions.

They act as though they are superior beings, and that the laboring classes are their slaves and servants.

There are inequalities in this world, and eternity must even up justice, or it would have been better that human beings had never been born.

The country people wonder how so many millions of human beings can live in the great cities, enduring the heat of summer, and the extremes of cold in winter. We learn, that the largest portion of the city people are homeless, living in slums, tenements and flats, without much food or raiment to keep them cheerful and contented.

Such conditions of society are deplorable, but they have existed under what is called civilized environments ever since our old world has been peopled with human races. The systems of mankind have always been oppressive and tyrannical, as far as we can learn from the past centuries.

The difference between the cities and the rural districts is very great, but the forming community do not live on beds of roses and ease, all the time, as the city people suppose.

It is true, that the farmers are close to nature, and can behold the landscape covered with blossoms, buds, flowers, grains, fruits, vegetables, and everything necessary to sustain life in man and beast. The farmers many times rejoice when they see beautiful crops of grass, grain, fruit and vegetables, growing and maturing, but they toil early and late to produce the necessaries of life, while the brainy men of the money centers cheat the farmer in the end, out of his just share of profit. Then he learns by experience in time, that the farm is a great place to work for the benefit of the schemers and great financiers. The farmer not only earns his bread by the "sweat of his face," but he many times sweats all over.

We read much in the bosses' newspapers about the rich farmers, but I have never met any millionaires among them. Most of the time, the seasons are against the tillers of the soil, and they have to work at a great disadvantage, as so much has to be done in short order. The storms of rain, hail, floods, drouth and insects destroy their crops, and with all the beauty of nature around them, they become discouraged the same as other laboring classes.

Too many farmers run in debt for land at fictitious prices, during times of so-called prosperity, and then they become the victims of the money lenders.

Under our social, political, financial and industrial systems, the money kings absorb the wealth of the producers and consumers, and while many remedies are suggested to change conditions for the common people, not much can be done, while our legislators are under the control of the syndicates and corporations. Most of our editors, ministers and attorneys are the tools for the powers that rule and ruin the government of the whole people.

I admire such independent papers as The Progressive Thinker, that does not fear pope or potentate, priest or minister, king or emperor, but discusses boldly our religious and social topics. It differs from Paine and Ingersoll on the creed of materialism, but is with them on the religion of humanity. The principles promulgated by The Progressive Thinker are as broad and deep as the oceans, seas and continents of the world of mankind.

Spiritualists learn through spiritual sources, that the natural and spiritual worlds are all around mankind on the earth sphere. That humanity is here, on this lower plane, for the purpose of getting experience, learning the difference between good and evil, and peopling other worlds with immortal beings, who can reach a higher and better existence, through education and progression. This progress and advancement is made under spiritual influence of a high order.

Worthy and willing spirits are guided through the spiritual realms of life and thought by angels of light and wisdom, to the higher and celestial sphere of that blessed state of love, peace and happiness. This world has been a terrible tragedy, but it will result in good for all aspiring souls. The societies formed by men and women for religious, social or other purposes, are all so human, that contention, anger and hate abound everywhere, instead of love and kindness.

Every organization of man has its contentions, strifes, envies, quarrels and combats, through ignorance, intolerance, bigotry, prejudice and superstition.

The orthodox churches claim to be the disciples of the meek and lowly Jesus, but no two sects among them can worship in the same building or temple.

Is it not because their human nature predominates over the religion of love, as taught by the Nazarene?

The religious quarrels and wars are the most bitter, lasting and revengeful; far more so than what is called worldly conflicts. An infidel said to me once, "We hold the balance of power, and keep the churches from going to war with each other over the man-made creeds." It set me to thinking and acting.

Mankind cannot comprehend the fatherhood of God, and the brotherhood of man. They cannot live it in their lives and actions, on account of having too much human frailty. The swarming legions of human beings who have lived and died upon this planet have passed through various experiences, from the lowest forms of existence that the earth plane has afforded them, to the highest civilization of modern times.

The dark and cruel side of life in part, has been awful to endure for humanity, in all ages of the past.

The better part of life has been filled with great blessings from the vast storehouse that nature produces, by the toil, art and skill of man, for the benefit and happiness of all races of mankind.

The inhumanity of man to man, has been one great cause of suffering and want among the people. There should be a more even distribution of wealth among all classes of people in the nations, and when a man accumulates ten millions of dollars, the rest of his earnings should be confiscated by the governments, for the good of the whole people.

CLARA WATSON'S OPINIONS.

On Matters of Great Interest to All Spiritualists.

I read Harrison D. Barrett's plain statement in a recent issue of your most valuable paper, and it seems to me that with frauds, obsessions, exposes, and arrests of mediums, and with "ignorance on the rostrum," we Spiritualists are in rather poor company, and with all the suggestions offered there seems no way out, for changing human nature is a slow and laborious process.

If frauds are exposed in one place they soon bob up in another, and the credulous and those who lack keen discernment will continue to be duped; and how will making a "religion" of Spiritualism, as friend Barrett desires, remedy the existing evils?

The greatest, most gigantic frauds ever perpetrated upon a long-suffering people have been in the name of religion. Christianity has duped more people with its scheme of salvation than all swindlers outside of religion could possibly do. Religion has been and still is the cloak that covers a multitude of frauds wearing high-sounding, "holy" titles, and why intelligent Spiritualists should cling to a name that has associated with it so much of horror, of wrong, of ignorance and superstition, intolerance, cruelty, torture, oppression, bloodshed and war, interspersed with sweet and silly delusions, is past understanding; and really "religious" Spiritualists who proclaim so loudly against fraud and ignorance, it seems to me haven't much to boast of when they establish a "church" and take up the titles, forms and ceremonies, rituals and senseless mummery rounded out with the good old orthodox "amen," all of which were conceived and foisted upon the world by the ignorant, pious old frauds of the long ago.

There seems no way to keep the pure white garments of true Spiritualism unsullied, because of the idiosyncrasies and pranks of humanity.

And then there comes the great hue and cry about "commercialism" in Spiritualism, and a separation or discrimination between "religious" Spiritualism and "commercial" Spiritualism is asked for, as though commercialism didn't enter into religion. Did anybody ever know of any religion that the leaders and makers of it did not demand money from the people, and get it, too, in large quantities? Commercial mediums are trying to get their living out of their work, and the religious Spiritualist is doing the same thing. The leaders and workers in the movement—the speakers, lecturers, pastors and reverends, the officers of state and National and camp associations, the faculty of our one school of theology, the Morris Pratt Institute, all are trying to make their living out of Spiritualism.

Commercialism in religion is just as pronounced as it is in the business world. The leaders—popes, priests, cardinals, bishops, preachers, pastors, etc., are working ostensibly for the Lord, but they all keep an eye single to the "filthy lucre," and live in luxury at the expense of the people they dupe.

It is said "commercialism" is the bane of Spiritualism, and yet it is perfectly legitimate. If the mediums give value received, if a business medium gives straightforward advice to a person about to enter into business, or gives counsel in business matters where through legitimate methods a business is run successfully, thereby giving support and sustenance to families, and at the same time aiding humanity by producing something the world needs, in my opinion this is far better than all the invocations, benedictions, amens, sermons, christenings and church folde-rol that constitute a large part of any religion.

Mr. Barrett defines religious Spiritualism as "giving comfort, consolation, spiritual advice, words of tenderness and love, spiritual messages, soul culture and evidences of the presence of excarnate spirits." This is all good; but in thus classifying religion, has he not followed in the footsteps of the past and divorced religion from the physical or material needs of life? If I had to have a religion, I should want one that would help me to get an honest living, because physical needs are basic; without these are supplied we cannot stay here to receive words of comfort.

It is thought that drawing the line between religion and commercialism in Spiritualism will purify Spiritualism and cause our troubles to disappear. But the history of past and present religions does not justify this idea. As before stated, the greatest frauds that have ever cursed the world have been religious frauds. The most religious countries are the most ignorant, besotted, dejected and defrauded people in the world, as witness Russia, Italy, Spain, etc. The one point in religion is, frauds can flourish under its name unmolested by the law.

The "Holy Rollers" are holding forth in our vicinity, and it the same ridiculous, fraudulent proceedings were carried on under any other name than religion, the law would step in and close them up as a nuisance and a menace to morality.

Mr. Barrett says the officers of National, state and local societies should pronounce judgment upon psychic claimants; but past experience has proven that mighty poor judgment has been used in the past by some of these officials, in a number of cases. Officers of local societies have recommended and officers of state and camp organizations have ordained people with not one particle of fitness for the position. These officers have not had stamina enough to say no, but would "coddle" the applicants if they had a little money to invest in ordination. Many of us do not see any way out of our difficulties, at least not until human nature is more nearly perfect than it is to-day.

SPIRITUALISM IS NATURALISM

A Paper Read Before the Temple League, Washington, D. C.

The name of an object, a society, or a sect does not change the character of such in any way whatever.

It is an aphorism that "a rose by any other name would smell as sweet." So those who are sensitive about the application of the word Spiritualism need not be disturbed by its being called Naturalism nor those who deride Spiritualism feel that they have something more respectable in Naturalism.

The sect called Spiritualists has come to be so named because they have taken up the study of the higher manifestations of life on the spiritual planes through communion with the dwellers on those planes; but a closer analysis of that study shows us that we are learning of the material as well as the spiritual living, and it will be found that the way to learn the most of all the manifestations of life is to go to the spiritual planes where is to befound the knowledge relating to all planes, where indeed we find the reasons of things, and also that the difference between the material and the spiritual is only in degree of fineness of the particles constituting the manifestation.

The Christian Scientist says, "There is no matter, all is spirit," we say, all is life in varying stratas of ability. There is an energy in every atom of so-called matter, which is its spirit, its higher and directing force; impel this atom into activity and the force is manifest, and wheresoever or howsoever the activity is carried on the lesser and the higher elements of the atom are working conjointly, the ratio of progression, or betterment, being according to the object of the activity, whether it be good or bad, as Nature in its faithfulness to evolvement of good gives nothing permanent to effort against good, that being the true ultimate of cosmic work.

In the higher states of being it is found that no one improves except by putting forth efforts in the direction of good; all who do not, deteriorate and in time realize a loss of energy, of power within to do anything, simply because the nature forces within them are deflected from good and those finer elements which once were incorporated in their being depart from them for work elsewhere, leaving them in a demoralized state, mere masses of substance of a low order, held together by the individualizing soul which never leaves or forsakes.

Through all these manifestations, as through all others, there is a constant blending of the spiritual and material in a purely natural way, so that we have no defining line, it is natural for them to work together.

Paul wrote of the "natural body and the spiritual body,"—in our day, after two thousand years of evolution, we say physical and spiritual, recognizing both to be natural.

Terminology has much to do with our concepts of things. We need clearer definitions, and until we have them we shall not grasp many of the points that are of vital interest in the study of Spiritualism.

Supernatural is a term long used to describe all phenomena on the spiritual planes; this is because the concept of the natural has been only the phenomena of the earthly planes, or that perceived by the physical senses. Spiritualism has corrected this and shown us that all manifestations of life are natural. We need to incorporate this idea in our study of higher elements; when we do we shall see in death only a manifestation of life's processes, and that in complete accord with natural law we shall go on eternally, dying to former expressions and rising to higher ones.

The one point of supreme interest is to know as much of the laws of nature as will enable us to order our expression of the potencies within us in most exact accord with those laws, for it seems that the great mass of difficulties which we encounter is simply the result of broken law, and that before we can make much progress we must seek adjustment to law.

Spirit teachers are trying to help us understand natural law and practice it here in order to save the regrets and often suffering that come of broken law, and it is natural that they should as for those who love us on the earth plane to have us avoid everything that would hurt or hinder.

Spiritualism in all its phases is Naturalism, is a demonstration of it. All religions must disappear in time unless they are grounded in it, for this is the proposition of the elements of being, "the survival of the fittest." Study Spiritualism, then, that you may better comprehend Nature, and study Nature that you may become better Spiritualists, the one will be the complement of the other.

PROCESS OF RECONSTRUCTION,

Cogent Views on Proselyting In Behalf of Spiritualism.

To all friends of our progressive cause I wish to say, let us not try to proselyte or persuade anyone away from their creed, be it ever so barren. Man must grow to sense a truth soully before it becomes a fact to him. Some are ready to accept a truth, while others will insist on feeding on faith, because it is so deeply implanted in them in their earliest childhood, that it has become part of themselves.

Dress a child of the slums in the finest laces and linen, and it will prefer its rags in the majority of cases. Try to teach anyone operatic music when he has no organ developed sufficiently to appreciate it, and he will deem it too much for him to try. Take a life-long churchman, and try to force scientific religion on him, and he will feel that if he accepted such, all the props in the way of promised salvation would be knocked out from under him, and his life and prayers has been a waste of time and devotion. It would be of no avail to force him into seeing things that his mind did not aspire to, and against which his early training would revolt.

We do not necessarily have to enlarge our membership by drawing anyone away from his favored creed in order to numerically enlarge the adherents to Spiritualism. No, dear friends, that would be missionary work for gain and numerical strength, instead of for enlightenment. Let us give our best efforts, character and lives to set the world an example, and give of what knowledge we have wherever we encounter an inquiring mind; and for this object we must study and retain every lesson in profane and sacred history, ancient and modern, and all that will enable us to assist in enlightenment; for if we should ever mislead or misquote, our teachings as a whole would be deemed valueless, and we would be held responsible.

"Think before you speak" must be a salient point for every reformer; and above all, live a true life devoid of mercenary motives or selfish policy.

Never argue with an ignorant being; never argue with anyone unless you are thoroughly familiar with the subject, and, as a rule, never start or force an argument; but, if need be, and you are assailed, use hard and telling blows. Administer them in all kindness, and avoid ridicule, while satire and comparison are allowable.

Nature teaching is the best. Take year hearer from the archian period of the past into the spirit realm of the present, step by step; or, if you are able, from the nebulous hypothesis into the starry realm beyond our solar system; then let your hearers form their own ideas. They may then understand how worlds and beings have evolved; how each form, animate and inanimate, has appeared as a necessity of the age in which it existed; how man with inner visions of the spirit spheres has evolved from the first crude form in human shape, just like liberty evolved out of serfdom, and giant ocean liner from the catamaran.

Facts are what the world needs, but many are not ready to receive them, while others dare not.

All things have been evolved as necessity at every age, and, I may add, that all is perfect as far as it has developed, while looking at the world at large we may detect seeming imperfections. The rose may have wilted leaves, and communities may have brutes in human form, but both may sink into the elements from whence they came, while there is annihilation to neither. An apple tree may do its best, like our globe is doing, still there are ripe, wilted and immature fruit on the same tree. The fruit on the sunny side may be lusciously red and golden, while the fruit maturing in the shade is still green, and so it is with the modern churchman, who has seen but the hopeful side of life through his faith, never having hungered for facts. Throw your sunny rays of spiritual facts athwart his path gently, but never proselyte him into apostasy away from his creed until he outgrows it. He will in time, like the sunflower, turn his face towards the light.

CRITICISMS.

"If a Man Will Not Work, Neither Shall He Eat."

I take some exceptions to the article, "Work Fit for Mind," from the pen of French Hollinshead, in No. 820 of The Progressive Thinker. He would place all our social ills to the fault of our government. He says "the youth have been ingloriously neglected and allowed to grow up in tatters and rags, roaming the streets of all great cities," etc. Our government provides compulsory education for children, books are provided free of cost to the parent, and truant officers see that they are kept in school. It is the parents' fault if the children spend the long vacations from school in idleness. They should be obliged to earn their spending money. Light work is better for children than idleness.

Again he says, "Not even the innocence and purity of the maiden has been regarded. She in the last half century has been forced by conditions over which she had no control, conditions which the government is responsible for, to sell her virtue and desecrate her body for the price of a meal." That is sentimental nonsense. The daily papers have long lists of "wants" for girls, in all departments of industry. Cooks, waitresses, chambermaids, and domestics in private families are in good demand and receive good wages.

Young girls in department stores receive less wages, but the work is considered more genteel, and the supply more than equals the demand. If more girls would go out as domestics, the merchant would be obliged to pay living wages to his clerks. No self-respecting girl sells her virtue. If she can find no work in the city there is plenty for her in the country where the air is pure, and there are no social inequalities.

Throughout the country, west as well as east, the demand for working girls is much greater than the supply. There is hard work on the farm, but there is wholesome food in abundance, and less temptations than in the city. Farmers as a rule are prosperous. They have musical instruments in their homes, and good books in abundance. A home on the farm would be a rest from unwholesome city excitements.

This writer goes on to say, "Old age, too, has been kicked into the gutter, to end earthly life in a poorhouse or prison." I am acquainted with a man 62 years of age, who was once the owner of several thousand dollars in real estate. He signed a note with a supposed honest man; the man failed, and the signer had the debt to pay. That lesson was not heeded. He signed with others, and lost his home. To-day he works in a machine shop. Was the government to blame because this man had more generosity than judgment?

Next this writer says: "The matured youth and middle-aged man have become tramps or servants for others." Men don't have to become tramps when there is such a call for help; and we are all servants in some sense, and dependent on each other for help. The millionaire is dependent on others for his food and clothing, and all the comforts by which he is surrounded.

Tramps will infest the country as long as people are foolish enough to feed them. I have no sympathy for a well-fed tramp when farmers are paying $2.50 per day in haying, and paying from $20 to $25 per month by the year, besides boarding, lodging, washing and mending, on farms of about 175 acres, and carrying from 20 to 25 cows.

I suppose Mr. Hollinshead would have all wrongs righted by a division of property. The tramps are waiting for a division, and would be willing to take one quite often.

"The laborer is worthy of his hire," and should receive good living wages; but the willing worker who has gained a comfortable property by honest means, as many have, has a right to it. The world pays more for brains than it does for brawn, and it is right. If there were none to plan nothing would be accomplished. Work is not a curse, it is a blessing.

"Honor and Fame from no conditions rise;
Act well your part, there all the honor lies."

LAWS WERE BLUE.

Statutes So Severe as to Seem Impossible Were Enforced.

It is generally admitted, even by the advocates of a sterner religion than is usually professed in this twentieth century, that the Subbath was made for man, and this interpretation includes recreation in the injunction to rest. In the days of Puritan dominion there is as little doubt that one idea prevailed most effectually that man was made for the Sabbath.

This religion of a people who believed in taking literal interpretations of the Old Testament as their guide in the government of a country which they had misnamed the "land of the free," reached the height of its impossible demands at the middle of the seventeenth century. A statute framed in Boston in 1653 regarding the penalties for breaking the laws of Sunday observance is the severest of any formed before or since, and shows what a day of dismal gloom this day of rest must have been.

In the days of the Puritans an observance of Sunday meant an attendance at all the church meetings, and it meant little else. Worship in the public meeting house was compelled by law. When the bell tolled out its summons, all must go, willing or otherwise, and notwithstanding the difficulties in the way of the journey. This often meant a tramp of many miles over rough ground where one carried his footgear in his hand.

At the time this severest of all statutes was passed in Boston, no one was allowed to go anywhere on Sunday except to church, unless there was some extraordinary need or the errand was one of mercy. No one was permitted to go from one town to another on that day or to enter any public house for a drink. Guards were stationed at the edge of town Saturday night at sundown to see that no vehicle passed either in or out of the city from that time until the close of the following day, and labor of all sort was prohibited.

Even children were not allowed to be seen in the street nor young men and women to promenade. In fact, it was because the worthy town officials had heard of the grievous misdemeanor of childish laughter in public high ways and had been informed that certain young people had committed the offense against God of walking in the fields on the Lord's day, that the statute regulating penalties for these faults had been enacted.

It was of no more avail to the offender of that early day to plead ignorance of the law than it is today. Still, to make assurance doubly sure that all inhabitants knew what these Sunday laws were, ministers were required to read them from in front of the meeting-house twice during the year. Then woe to any one who chose to ignore them, for the hand of inexorable law, not tempered by mercy, was upon him.

Parents were responsible for the misdemeanors of children between the ages of 7 and 14. Over that age they were required to receive themselves the penalty of their own misdoing. For breaking any of these laws the first time, the punishment was a severe reprimand from the chief executive of the town. If any daring child escaped for a moment the family corral to frolic upon the public highway, this untoward action would not fail to bring his parents into open disgrace.

The above was the actual condition of affairs in the dismal past; now how different, yet in no wise perfect.

TRUE BLUE.

DENIES THE SUPERNATURAL.

Contributor Says All Things Happen In Accordance With Fixed Laws of Almighty.

Writer in the Battle Ground [the Chicago Record-Herald] wants to obtain authentic proof of one supernatural manifestation. No Spiritualist of my acquaintance believes in miracles or anything supernatural; that is, above and beyond nature. Some writers use the word "supernatural" when they only mean spiritual. Spiritualists all say that strictly speaking there is no such thing as a miracle.

All the wonders that have ever been known in Bible times or under modern Spiritualism can be explained and duplicated by scientific demonstrations, proving their occurrence through and by natural law. God Almighty governs the universe now, and always, by immutable, inexorable law, and the greatest miracle is that these laws never vary and never fail.

A genius is simply a highly organized, sensitive, healthy human being. A medium may be described in the same language—the sensibilities are so acute, the nervous organization so exquisitely sensitive, the soul powers in such perfect harmony with the natural laws of the universe, that they catch the finest vibration of light and sound and thus hear clairaudiently and see clairvoyantly that which coarser mortals cannot see, hear, or even believe.

Jesus was simply a highly organized, sensitive, magnetic man of genius. If Jesus could be transfigured and see and talk with Moses, Elias and other angels and spirits, why should not exquisitely sensitive mediums in modern times do the same? If Jesus Christ, immediately after His death, could materialize and appear before and talk to His disciples, why not departed spirits in modern times? If there is such a good thing as telepathy on earth, why not in the heavens or in the spiritual realms? If the "departed spirits of the mighty dead" have a conscious existence and there is such a thing as the "communion of saints," why not receive telepathic messages from them, wherever they may be?

Some of us are trying to find out if these things are true, and if they really occurred according to natural and spiritual law, either in ancient or modern times. To this work and to this cause we bring all that science and art, and all that the productions and inventions of human genius can produce, not for the purpose of proving miracles, but to disprove them.

Have Spiritualists a Work?

C. H. Doty, an Octogenarian, and a Spiritualist for Fifty Years, publishes his own Funeral Discourse, in which he presents many striking thoughts and instructive observations, embodying the spiritual wisdom gathered through many years of ripening experience and reflection.

Christian societies have their regular meetings, stated speakers, known obligations. They go regularly, with their families, to their places, especially to Sunday-school, and contribute personal work and money to their support. Not only in cities and towns, but in the rural districts, where there are only a few, they meet and have some kind of service. All outsiders are urged to participate and aid. Fine talent is not always expected or needed. It is an expected obligation—a sanctified duty.

Is Spiritualism more indolent or neglectful? Is there a defect with us that the rural ground cannot be held? Could not reading circles be established and good poetry and lectures and books be read and discussed? Circles and phenomena when carefully managed are well, but is it enough? Expense and foreign aid should not dwarf daily-bread living. We are continually contributing to, and being absorbed by orthodoxy. Sing. Sing what is true. Refuse to sing untruth.

Excuse me if I "speak in meeting." The earth must be reformed. Human want and suffering must be put aside. Hell must be redeemed. True socialism is brotherhood; it must advance. Darkness and suffering in all spheres be relieved. Heredity must be taught. This launching of body and spirit should be by knowledge. Heaven, hell and earth must be united in the work to make it successful. What is our part—and how? Read Henry C. Wright's communication through Mrs. Cassell again. That single article is worth a double subscription. And I see so many of these articles having a relation to our practical duty. Proselyting is only a part. We need enthusiastic work. Is not light, love, and knowledge as inspiring as fear? I will not extenuate but only suggest.

I have been a Spiritualist now for fifty years. I am 80 years and 6 months old. Naturally I should look for a funeral soon, and ought it to be orthodox or spiritual? Being well isolated, alone, sick and poor, I have prepared my own funeral discourse; and if Brother Francis will print it, I will give its use to any and all who have to have such an article, and are so circumstanced they can do no better. C. H. DOTY.

Juniata, Neb.

Prelude.

It is customary on the occasion of funerals to have some ceremonies, such as singing and speaking.

It is also desirable to have such service, in a measure, represent the sentiments of the departed.

Limited as I am by circumstances, there are few who understand my position, so I think it proper to do this for myself.

I have for a long time thought the increasing expense at funerals was wicked; so I wish to have my body buried with as much simplicity, and with as little expense as is consistent with the judgment of my friends. Some one who is willing, may read the following:

Text.

"Why do we see with dead men's eyes?
Looking at "was" from morn till night;
When the beauteous now, the divine to be Charm with their forms the living sight?"

Exemplification

There is no face more thoroughly established than that nature cannot be kept still. Nature is the manifestation of life. Life will act. All the operations of existence will go forward. Non-action would be death and what we call annihilation.

Therefore, we accept the universally conceded law of progress. We use it everywhere, and there is no such thing as denial or refutation. It was—it is—it will be. Here is the point at which we may differ. Progress will be—and will be forever. Not only this, but every immortal being, by right, inherits within himself this law, which cannot be taken from him. The mistake of the present is we are trying to crystallize into unchanging authority the past, and prevent there being anything new. We see with dead men's eyes. What was, was associated with our ancestry, and we regard it as sacred, and resist with strenuosity all change.

It was indeed sacred at that time, because it could be no different under the circumstances. But life cannot stop at its commencement, or at one of its stages and be life. Manifestation cannot end at the beginning, or at partial formations, and have actuality. Having begun the circle of existence under the one great cosmic law, from the one central energy, we, and all things, must move forward to completion.

Our earth was once an expanded mist—then barren rock—then fern-clad wastes—these changed to grasses, flowers, trees, fruits, vegetables, grains, under the same eternal impulse, until the present beautiful and bounteous conditions of existence are realized. At none of these stages, however remote or however recent, could perpetual change have been stopped and earth have existed. The most curious and insignificant animals lived in all those changed conditions, each in their time, each adapted to condition, because nothing else could be at that time. It was primary life, covering vast periods of time but under the same central law.

An unfledged nestling is hardly a bird; and our earth is yet in the youth of its existence. The social and ethical standing of man has not had its ultimate trial. Monarchy is not a perpetual fixture. Sun worship could not hold the soul forever. Knowledge has increased.

Man himself, at first a naked savage, with savage conceptions, has passed through all the various changes which he has experienced to his present status. As the elements improved his form, mentality and spirituality kept pace. To-day we see the world trembling and vibrating in the throes of evolving a higher conception of life. We are getting tired of suffering, and privation, and greed, and lust, and war, and bigotry, and are getting ready for the birth of higher ideas.

The desolate "was" has become the beauteous now. The climbing has been long and tedious, but certain. It could have been no other way, or it would have been. The funeral pile of India—the rack of Italy—the burnings of Spain—the prisons of England—the banishments of the Puritans—the shackles of slavery have become shells on the shore of the ocean of time—specimens to teach us better things. Is there more than one source that proposes and accomplishes? Have you no faith in the eternal unity and power to build on its own foundation and not be thwarted? And will you deny me the right to carry you forward to the divine to be? Would you have me put the breaks upon the wheels of progress to prevent the glorious consummation of the universal life?

Surely we should look for success and not failure. In the rugged "was" there was temporary failure and hindrance. Even in the advanced "now" there are tortuous ways, tearful experiences, and dreaded discouragements. But the gain, the change, the advancement, the analogy, the law, the inner glow of hope stand like angel prophets to say: Thus surely shall come the divine to be. No matter from what source it emanated, "Every valley shall be exalted, and every hill shall be brought low. The crooked shall be made straight and the rough places plain."

Thus we have outlined the generalized law of life, which means, when briefly stated, that man's final destiny is happiness, usefulness and enjoyment. But it may be necessary in order to better understand these things to descend to detail and explanation. Man came up from a low animal plane, in a state of perfect ignorance, approaching everything he has met from the side of experience. This is true in spite of his being endowed with infinite possibilities, in a semi-latent state. He did not come down from perfection to savagery. But being without knowledge, imagination tried to supply the lack; and working with intuition, made things partly right and partly wrong. Myth sometimes took the place of fact.

For ages we have been looking at "was," and for centuries we have been hanging in doubt between the increasing light of the "now" and the thundering anathemas of "was." Fear paralyzed our judgment. We were afraid to be natural, afraid to make love and infinite trust the watchword of action. Even now the clash of contending opinion the force of habit, the conservatism of education, the unreliability of a weakened will, the temptation of place, the still low quality of spirituality struggling with the earthy, make a mingled whirl of light and darkness confusing to the inexperienced and unenlightened mind.

But have you yet formed any true estimate of the words spoken so long ago, "In that day I will not write my law on tables of stone, but on the fleshy tablets of the heart, and no one shall teach his neighbor, or his brother, saying: Know the Lord, for all shall know me from the least to the greatest." Is it wise to tenaciously hold to the tables of stone, and fight out as heresy that which springs from the fleshy tablets of the heart? The tables of stone said: "An eye for an eye." The tablet of the heart said, "Forgive your enemies."

But let me be simpler and plainer still. The ancient tale of creation is no longer tenable. The Garden of Eden and fall of man was not; but his rise from low estate is being demonstrated. The forgiveness of sin was an assumption of priests. Salvation is the love of good and doing it; that is, a condition. Slaying a sacrifice is an impossible way of purifying the soul. But slaying selfishness and passion has much to do with it. The improving of soul is not by external application, but by awakening and stimulating internal growth, like the opening of the rose. The poet says:

"Heaven is not reached at a single bound,
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to the summit round by round."

Forms and ceremonies in themselves count nothing; but a true life of loving and serving builds the spirit home. We need not look for a throne, a harp and a life of idleness; but an inner and a finer life, natural in all respects to the spirit, as this is to the body, where we shall expand in soul and still work for the good of others. We need not look for the walled lake of torment, but a sure and swift sorrow and regret for all misdeeds. We shall be bright or dark according to the quality of our lives. Any impure or debasing condition must be hated and lived out of our characters, as it was lived in, to establish a condition qualifying us for a fitting association with the just. We need not look for a personal devil to thwart the purposes of goodness, but we should watch carefully and look within us for temptations to indulge in unwise gratifications.

The resurrection of the physical body has been abandoned by thoughtful people. The body at dissolution is no longer needed, and disintegrates to mingle with the elements. The soul, the real life, immediately enters upon its new existence and continues its course of unfoldment or its discipline, commencing at the points of the needs of the soul. Therefore no general judgment need be looked for, for the conscious spirit comprehends its condition and relation to its surroundings in its true light, as we awaken to spiritual perception. Rewards and punishments, in the light of gifts and inflictions, now fall away from the mind, and we realize that what we lived we are, and what we wish to be we must strive for. Thus we must necessarily grade at some advanced point or the foot of the class. So each one of us, if we understand these things and know ourselves can discover our associates and home. Our homes are built from our magnetic auras.

These things with much more have been revealed to us by Modern Spiritualism. The spirits of those who have departed have returned, as conditions have enabled, and reported their state and surroundings. The souls of some on this side of life are favored to temporarily pass through the "gates ajar" and see the splendors of the "better land," as well as the sorrowful homes of the undeveloped.

All knowledge does not come in a moment there, any more than here, and differences of opinion on some things follow; but the underlying principles remain. It is a world a step higher than this, an inner world, it is real, and a place of activity, and duty and progress. We are what this world has made us. We shall be what our desires and efforts accomplish. The loves of this life are continued, and broken links are reunited under the law of like attracted to like. Nothing is or can be lost although estranged, and the return of every prodigal will mark the time when "God shall be all and in all."

I have placed these things in contrast, for the sake of enlightenment. The errors as formerly understood, and the corrections as now discovered. Many things as formerly taught are not true. Some of them were thought to be true, and some of them were devices imposed upon the ignorant. And some of them were true. We rejoice in the present advent of light, and are elated at the coming further elucidation of truth. The glory will be the social and spiritual transformation of the world. The rule of selfishness and wrong will be broken, and the reign of love and righteousness set up. The divine to be will be ushered in, yea, has been dawning and is being ushered in in all places, and by all people, who have adopted these principles and have incorporated them into their lives.

It was a very true saying: "God is no specter of persons. But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." Cornelius was not a Jew—was not a Christian—only a pagan—but a good man. Lazarus, who went to Abraham's bosom was not a Christian, only a heathen beggar. The Good Samaritan was not a Christian, but a man despised by the orthodox religionists. The father of the prodigal son was not a Christian, simply a loving and just father. And yet they were all Christians, because they exemplified the principle of love.

The improving of the soul is not by external application, but by awakening and stimulating internal growth, like the opening of the rose. Dr. Holland, the poet, says:

"We rise by things that are under our feet;
By what we have mastered of good and gain;
By the pride deposed and the passion slain,
And the vanquished ills that we hourly meet."

China is eaten through and through by looking with dead men's eyes. Caste in India is the same old "was" of the past. The tribes of central Asia and the hordes of Africa cannot progress and must perish. England lost the American colonies by stubborn holding to old policy. Spain lost her prestige by adhering to the cruel "was." The Catholics of France have lost control because they could do nothing but in the old dictatorial way. Christian unity was put back fifty years when the Methodists refused to work with the Christian Endeavorers and selfishly instituted the Epworth League. At critical points is it not well to learn?

Now, when our loved ones pass the boundary of death; we are assured we shall meet them again. When we look at the darkened places of earth we no longer shrink at the horror of endless desolation, but know the same just law that elevated us will not reject them. It is a matter of time and opportunity. The love of the eternal life is never exhausted, neither is the power to accomplish. We are brethren of the same source, and the same destiny awaits us when we have completed the circle of our existence.

Some fail to grasp abstract ideas and wish everything reduced to personality. Then have it. And some say: "I feel within me"—yes, the voice of the soul according to education. Let it speak. Time is the harmonizer of all things. And standing as I do now upon the brink of worlds—looking in the eyes of those we love— putting our hands in blessing upon the heads of those who have journeyed with us—we look away to the great supreme—and in spite of the frailty imposed upon us by birth, or nurtured by habit, trustingly say, Sometime it will be well in the "divine to be."

Prayer:—May our spirits vibrate in unison with the universal life. May our thoughts be pure, our lives be true—our aspirations upward. May love sweeten all our lives, and bind us to the ever-loving heart. C. H. DOTY.

Wonewoc Camp, Wis.

The reports of camp-meetings would be incomplete if Wonewoc was not represented therein, as the interest in this camp is growing with each season's work. The camp which has just been brought to a successful close has been one of the most satisfactory since the organization of the Association under whose auspices it was given.

We have had an exceptionally strong program this year, and many were the regrets expressed when the day of closing drew near. That we are growing is evidenced by the fact that this year a new and commodious auditorium was erected on the grounds; also that money has been cheerfully subscribed for the purpose of erecting several buildings for the next camp-meeting, including among them a rooming-house and dining-room. Also a reading-room and library; the library is to contain many of the very best books along our line of thought—and, by the way, donations of books for our library will be very gratefully received; they can be addressed to Miss Gertrude Spooner, secretary, Wonewoc, Wis.

Another evidence of progress is the further fact that next year our camp will include five Sundays instead of three and four as heretofore.

Our talent was well received throughout. It will be needless for me to mention them in detail, as space will not permit me to do justice to all. I might mention, however, that Bro. B. F. Austin and Mrs. Coffman paid their initial visit to our camp, as did also Miss Agness Chaffee, Miss Alfa Bullock and M. Florence Johnson (Mr. Hull's eldest daughter). The best way for me to express the sentiment is that every one "took" well; the workers were thoroughly appreciated, and we look forward to another visit from most of them next year. That tells the story better than anything else I can say.

Now a word about Wonewoc. The writer has traveled a good many miles, and has seen a good deal of the scenery of the West, having spent six years in the western country, and is free to say that we have here one of the most charming spots it has been his lot to visit anywhere; for lovers of gorgeous sunsets, etc., let me say I have never seen anything to surpass those that we have here. Better watch the proceedings of this camp in future, ladies and gentlemen; it is taking a stand that will be emulated by some of the camps, we hope—a stand that will not be derogatory to Spiritualism, I may add.

We can safely challenge anyone to produce a more harmonious camp-meeting anywhere than we have here. That is saying a good deal. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Will J. Erwood; vice-president, C. C. Pratt; second vice-president, C. G. Porter; secretary, Gertrude Spooner; treasurer, M. M. Blish. Trustees: E. Hemenway, Cyrus Spooner and Mrs. J. P. Whitwell. They all mean business, and have vowed success.

The business men of the town are among those who have subscribed liberally toward the erection of the new buildings; they realize that our camp is a benefit to the town, and show the right spirit toward it regardless of creedal or denominational ideas. They are demonstrating that we have selected the right spot in which to hold our annual camp-meeting.

In conclusion I would say our memorial service in honor of our arisen friends, Nathan and Reuben Fisk, Ambrose Kent, J. L. Potter and others was a very impressive event. It was conducted by Moses Hull and the writer. A very handsome urn was presented by Mrs. Dr. Matteson of Buffalo, N. Y., in memory of the Fisk brothers. It added largely to the success of the occasion.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

After eight weeks of spiritual food and enlightenment, the Spiritualist camp-meetings at Lake Brady, Ohio, came to a close Sunday, September 3. The weather conditions on that date were all that could be expected or wished for, and before eight o'clock in the morning Lake Brady patrons began coming in from all directions, and at 9:30 a. m., the Lake Brady special from Cleveland, over the Cleveland & Pittsburg railroad, and filled with human freight, steamed up to the station, and within fifteen minutes thereafter every available seat beneath the large tent was taken, many having to get seats on the outside.

In due time the opening of the morning services by the worthy president, Brother Hunger, of Cleveland, was announced. After a song by the audience and a song having been sung by Mrs. Flora Russell of Alliance, Ohio, Mrs. Marian Carpenter was introduced and by her a grand invocation was given.

After another song Mrs. Carpenter arose semi-entranced, which lasted for only a few moments, when the control took full charge, and to a grander or more soul-elevating lecture the writer has never had the pleasure of listening.

Mrs. Carpenter's lecture in the afternoon, which was along a different line of thought, was equally as interesting as the lecture in the forenoon and her tests and messages were clean-cut, readily recognized, and seemed to be perfectly satisfactory to those for whom they were intended. I do not wish to flatter Mrs. Carpenter or her controls, but I do believe that the lectures delivered at Lake Brady, also other lectures I have heard her deliver, should have been taken down verbatim and published to the world, and such an instrument as is she should be kept busy by societies and camps for years to come. After the delivery of the afternoon lecture and preceding the tests, Dr. C. W. Haines of Bedford, Ohio, made some very appropriate remarks, after which Mr. D. A. Herrick, speaker and medium, who is well known to the Spiritualists of Ohio, Michigan and elsewhere, arose from his chair on the rostrum and in his usual pleasing but telling way, informed and impressed upon the minds of the audience that more money was needed for the erection and completion of the proposed new auditorium. He also asked for donations, and the way silver dollars and Uncle Sam's currency flowed to the rostrum was evidence that modern and better quarters in which to hold future meetings and to listen to divine inspirations were needed, and not only needed but greatly desired by those present.

The Spiritualists of Cleveland, prinappear on the program never failed to bring forth a goodly attendance.

We next present Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, daughter of the noted test medium, E. V. Wilson, now passed on to cipally, I have been told, through efforts of the ladies, have purchased a church on Fullerton avenue, that city, and on Sunday, October 1, will dedicate it, and in behalf of the ladies, I here and now extend a cordial invitation to all Spiritualists in and out of Ohio, to make it a special point to be there on the above date. Many speakers and mediums will be on hand and there will be morning, afternoon and evening services and a general good time for all will be had. You, reader, are invited. Upon your arrival in the city take a Broadway car and get off at Fullerton avenue. The temple is located about a half block from Broadway. E. R. KIDD.

THE SNAKE DREAM OMEN.

What Induced That Psychological Experience if Spirits Did Not?

A few years ago, while staying over night at a country hotel, where I had business to transact, my night's rest was greatly disturbed by the most vivid psychological experience I ever had.

I dreamed about my daughter and her husband, a clergyman, and their two little children, whom I had visited a few weeks before. In my dream I saw clearly the form and features of each one, especially the active, joyous little children, who suddenly were seized with paroxysms of pain and distress. The father and mother were weeping and groaning in agony, so that I felt myself weeping over the unhappy scene.

There appeared to be four snakes, curving and curling. Two were large, hideous reptiles and two smaller looking ones of less repulsive appearance. I made a desperate effort in my dream to kill the snakes, but they escaped into a thick hedge.

Then I awoke in a profuse perspiration. The whole scene appeared so real that I could not banish it from my mind. Sleep was out of the question, and when morning came I could scarcely eat my breakfast.

I had business in the country, and the hotel-keeper drove me out. I related to him my dream and the effect it had on me, and told him some of the happy incidents which took place when I last visited the rectory.

On my return to the hotel the next day there awaited me a letter and a telegram. The first gave an account of the death of the two children from diphtheria and their burial, and added that both parents were down with the same disease. The telegram advised me of more favorable symptoms in the rector and his wife. Both were from the church warden.

It seems the children died on the night I had the dream. The parents recovered. F. C. I.

Foreknowledge of Human Events.

Predictions which have so far transcended the normal powers of the human mind, in the foresight exhibited, as apparently not to be explained by mere reference to the prophet's power to reason from cause to effect or from effect to cause, have been regarded as due to supernatural inspiration. Even those celebrated lines in Virgil's Fourth Eclogue referring to the approaching birth of a god-like child, which were written forty years before the birth of Jesus, impressed early Christian writers, and, we are told, contributed to the conversion of Constantine. Many prophetic expressions in the Old Testament have been regarded as of great evidential value in proving the Scripture to be a supernatural revelation. To prophecy theologians have appealed as one of the pillars of their faith. But now, when every phenomenon which has been carefully observed and studied has been divested of the special supernatural character it was once supposed to possess, the power of foreseeing coming events, even in the distant future, beyond the calculating, reasoning faculties of man, may be regarded, even though exceptional and supernormal, as being just as natural as any of the ordinary processes of the mind. Both theologians and skeptics may yet come to see that truth demands that they extend their considerations of prophecy, so that they may include the predictions of all countries and times, and not merely those of Judea some thousands of years ago, and that the predictions be considered and fairly judged without reference to the theory of special supernatural influence.

The question arises, How is it possible to foresee human actions which do not yet form any part of the order of natural events, and which in many cases have not been decided upon?

The law of causation is as true of the mental as it is of the physical world. Experience is valuable because knowledge of the past furnishes grounds for expectations in regard to the future. This is as true of experience of human conduct as of experience of the habits of the lower animals and the qualities of non-living things. The order of our thoughts is as "fixed" as the order of nature in general. This fact makes possible the lessons of history, the use of which, as an historian observes, "is only to discover the constant and universal principles of human nature, by showing men in all varieties and situations, and furnishing us with materials from which we may form our observations, and become acquainted with the regular springs of human action and behavior."

The actions of individuals sometimes appear capricious; but so appear also some of the manifestations of force in the physical world. Why should our inability to co-ordinate any given mental phenomena with the sequence of natural events be proof of the absence of causation, when our inability thus to co-ordinate physical facts is conceded to be proof only of our ignorance? The complexity of man and his relations, the multitude of incident forces to which he is continually subject, the dependence of volition upon a great number and variety of principles,—many of them hidden by reason of their remoteness and liable to the secret opposition of numerous contrary causes,—are sufficient explanation why human volitions and actions are less calculable than the habits of animals and the operations of the inorganic world.

Only because volition which leads to action is caused, and is therefore in some degree calculable, is it possible to frame a theory of action and have a basis of morals. Were volition lawless, the wise man might at any time act like a fool and the fool like a sage. The insane man is exempted from punishment because his volition is not capable of being acted upon by fear of punishment as a deterring motive. While man is free to act as he wills, how he wills depends upon his wishes, tastes, preferences, and choice; and these are determined by his mental and moral nature, his education and surroundings. What is true of one man is true of all men, of tribes, nations, races, of mankind. The actions of men in the past were the effects of causes adequate to produce them; the actions of men in the future will equally follow antecedents. Uncertainty in regard to the future, in the domain of mental activity, exists only in our minds, and is due to our ignorance. To Omniscience the motives and the doings of men would be known, even to the smallest details, with at least as much certainty as the astronomer knows the hour of an eclipse. Human actions and affairs are calculable and knowable in advance in proportion to knowledge and prescience. Prophecy, then, in regard to human events in the affairs of men, has a natural basis in the sequent order of human actions.

But how do future events, even though they belong to such an order, present themselves to the mind when it is utterly unable by the exercise of its normal faculties to foresee them? This question suggests others. How is it possible for the mind in a clairvoyant condition to see objects and know what is occurring at a distance? How is it possible for a person writing automatically to record a series of facts, and to give detailed information in regard to matters of which the person and those present possess no knowledge? How is it possible for Mrs. Piper, for instance, in a trance, to state facts and circumstances to Prof. James in regard to a variety of things of which she could possess no normally acquired knowledge whatever? Perhaps these powers of gathering knowledge belong to the same class of supernormal faculties by which certain minds get glimpses of the future, and have, in some cases, visions of what is to occur. We certainly are without the knowledge to enable us to formulate any law concerning the facts; but, in the future, science may possibly discover the rationale of these supernormal previsions, which we may regard as being as much a part of the orderly, natural workings of mind as any other of its powers and achievements.

Awakened from a hypnotic trance, a subject in a perfectly normal condition will do what he was directed to do in the trance, never doubting that he is all this time acting from his own volition. This fact alone is sufficient to warrant the question whether a man's acts, those determined upon and performed by his ordinary self, are not initiated by some stratum of self, so to speak, which lies outside of the conscious will, which forms no part of the stream of consciousness, in which he habitually lives. In that obscure region wherein are initiated the acts of man, may also reside the power of foreseeing to some extent the outcome of those acts. Knowledge acquired by supernormal means, communicated to the ordinary consciousness, is sometimes surprising and apparently miraculous.

Socrates, the wisest man in the ancient world, was guided by a monitory voice, which gave proof of knowledge and wisdom greater than he was conscious of possessing. It was not dependent upon his observation or conscious experience. Did the daemon represent a higher intellectual and moral plane than that of the conscious life which was directed by the mysterious voice, even in the face of death? Says Sir William Hamilton, "The infinitely greater part of our spiritual nature lies beyond the sphere of our own consciousness, hid in the obscure recesses of the mind." The human mind has capacities, it is certain, not dreamed of in the old philosophies and psychologies. There is, perhaps, as Mr. F. W. H. Myers suggests, a larger life, in which the various consciousnesses that, superficially considered, make man appear to be a whole platoon of personalities, are merged in an individual unity which comprehends all those mysterious powers which belong to the "dark continent within."

We speak of the past and the future, as if time were an objective reality,—something outside of the mind which separates events; but the world's great thinkers agree that time should be regarded merely as a mental form, a subjective condition of sensibility and thought. What we understand by time exists only for beings that have sensible experiences. Because it is one of the formal conditions, a priori, of all phenomena, time necessarily enters into all our cognitions and conceptions of events; and without it, constituted as we are, we could have no history, and age would have no meaning. Yet, if time is not objective, but a formal condition of the mind, then the succession of events exists only in the mind; and, while it may be, must be, symbolical of some actual mode of existence, there is no ground for the belief that past, present and future represent any real distinctions like those which these words connote to us. There would seem to be "one eternal now," divided only in thought by the necessities of our present mode of thinking, subject to our organically imposed limitations. If it shall exist, freed from physical conditions, the soul may have no further need of what is now so essential,—time and space. It may perceive truth under conditions and by methods of which it is impossible for us to form a representative idea. And in supernormal states, in conditions where clairvoyant and prophetic powers are exhibited, the soul may be en rapport, to some extent, with that ultimate order of being in which the past, present and future exist in one indivisible unity, wherein is seen, as in a picture, we will suppose, those events which to us now appear to be separated by definite periods of duration. We conceive our position "between two eternities"; but there is only one eternity, and that we may assume is the time of the eternal present.

If these considerations do not help us to understand how the mind can perceive events which, from our point of view, have not yet occurred, they may help us to see that conceivability is not the limit of possibility. Under conditions that are inconceivable, but possible,—and some thinkers would say probable,—the soul may know the future as well as the past. As we approach or come under the influence of these conditions, even while the mind is partially eclipsed by the opaqueness of the body, we may catch glimpses of the future, and thereby obtain knowledge which no mere study of the calculable order of nature can give.

ANCIENT INDIA,

Its Language and Religions. By Prof. H. Oldenberg. Paper, 25 cents.

A SYMPOSIUM.

Suggested by Dr. Alex. Caird, of Lynn, Mass.

Massachusetts steps to the front and demands a hearing. Alex. Caird, M. D., an influential Spiritualist, suggests a Symposium on an exceedingly important subject. It will be inaugurated in his special honor as a leading and highly respected Spiritualist of the Old Bay State, one who is constantly working for the spread of the Truth as manifested in Spirit Return. It will prove especially interesting, suggestive and valuable to every reflective mind.

The Important Question.

What Does Spiritualism Teach That Spiritualists Believe in Common?

ONLY ONE COMMON POINT OF BELIEF AMONG SPIRITUALISTS

Ervin A. Rice, a leading Spiritualist of Chicago, and thoroughly well posted in the literature of Spiritualism, writes as follows:

In answer to the question by Dr. Caird, "What does Spiritualism teach that Spiritualists believe in common?" I can only say, "SPIRIT RETURN." The fact that this is the only common point of belief among Spiritualists seems so self-evident that I see no grounds for discussion of the subject.

Columns may be written deploring the fact, but a fact it will remain so long as Spiritualists have free and open minds, and refuse to bind their honest opinions by any creed or formulated statement of belief.

SPIRITUALISM IN COMMON.

It Embraces Very Many Points of Agreement.

"What does Spiritualism teach that Spiritualists believe in common?"

Also, "What should be accepted by all well-informed Spiritualists as the corner-stone of their faith?"

I would say, mediumship, as the corner-stone. Drop it, and only ruins would remain. Ignore it, and the avenue leading from world to world would be closed by bars that no science could surmount. Withdraw it, and the heavens would again be shrouded in darkness.

About teachings that all Spiritualists believe in common, I believe they are almost as numerous as the sands, and as countless as the stars. Fear of death is changed to understanding. Progress in the continued life is by laws evolved from the laws of this life. Each retains his and her individuality, socially, intellectually, and characteristically. This world has the counsel, social pleasure, and many other benefits naturally resulting from the union of the worlds. Disposition determines the velocity of the spirit's growth.

The location of the spirit world is no longer a question of speculation. Conservatories of music, academy halls, lecture palaces, grades of schools for children passing early, greatly superior to the mortal grades, theaters, the loveliest of scenery, universal easy investigation, marriage and divorce, on natural principles without resort to priests and courts, a government of natural law ascertained scientifically, in place of legislative bodies; the appreciation of the happiness of the home life is intensified; spheres upon spheres of existence based on fitness.

Spirit can know all we are doing.

While we may rationally "rhapsodize over the sweet Summerland," it is not all summerland! The slums, opium eaters, inebriates, deceivers, and criminally inclined, find the habits inhere in the spirit bodies, and though they can be outlived there, the process is not without pain.

Heaven and hell are conditions there, as here.

There is plenty of work there for reformers.

Mediumship is born, not made. The gift, like all other gifts, must have due development to give satisfaction. Some Spiritualists enjoy the phenomena most, others the philosophy, yet all believe both necessary.

All of the above teachings is common knowledge with all Spiritualists. Furthermore, there are volumes and volumes written by the spirits, intensely interesting, and while they differ in many things, caused by the writers occupying different planes, they are largely harmonious. These books are read by all Spiritualists. The variations of description are no more unnatural than the varied representations of Europe given by Europeans from their different planes.

I could discuss the doctrine of reincarnation, but there are so very few spirits or mortals that give it any countenance at all, that it is unnecessary. The mediums thus talking, are controlled by ancient Hindoo spirits that haven't outgrown their earth foolishness. Occasionally, quite an otherwise cultivated spirit, while admitting he hasn't yet seen God, still clings to his earth teaching that there must be one. The same spirit will teach "that what has a beginning will have an ending." If his theory of creation should be true, then, as both the universe and nature had a beginning, they must both have an ending. Such spirits are always in "hot water" with science.

After Dr. Caird asks his most interesting and educational question, he proceeds to charge a vast array of faults against almost the whole army of Spiritualists. It is a principle in law to "let no guilty man escape," and I believe him too noble and magnanimous to object to a little return criticism.

He says: "The only points on which Spiritualists seem to agree is that we are entities in this life, that we shall continue to be the same after the change called death, and that after that change we can communicate with those still in the earth life."

He lays stress on the importance of organization, as though it was everything. He appears utterly blind to the importance of the home circle, making not the least mention of it. The enthusiasm for organization is refreshing, rightly understood.

He says, "Educated speakers could be supplied from the various colleges that are turning out graduates by the thousands every year, many of them children of Spiritualists." I believe there is not one of such graduates, including the children of Spiritualists, that learn anything of the teachings of Spiritualism in his "various colleges." The Unitarians, Universalists, Presbyterians and Methodists are a thousand times wiser.

He says: "Educating speakers seems to me like building the roof before we have laid the foundation." With the builders of warehouses, to support hundreds of tons of freight, their first thought is of the character of the foundation, and for this they seek the most rigidly expert education.

He says: "There are many speakers in the country at the present time unable to secure employment, speakers that are in every way competent to meet all requirements." It is only the destructionists that are "shelved." They were popular many years ago. Evolution has continued at work since then. The uninformed might hear them month in and out, and scarcely learn an iota of Spiritualism, but would hear torrents of abuse of themselves.

There is a deal of truth in the saying, "once a destructionist always a destructionist," the powerful law of habit accounting for it. The demand now is for constructionists, and the graduates of the "various colleges" would be "the blind leading the blind."

He says: "Spiritualism should teach that the human mind is incapable of grasping the immensity of creation, much less the Creator." He withholds how he so easily grasps the knowledge that Nature had a creator. The highest and most truly informed spirits report that they find nothing above nature.

He says: "Natural laws must be followed for our physical well-being; moral laws for our mental contentment." The clear inference is that he takes moral laws out of the category of the natural, and would make them supernatural.

He says he "has had more experience with the practical aspects of Spiritualism than with the ethical," clearly implying that the ethical is not practical. He goes on, and advocates the cultivation of the emotions, ideality, and veneration; and in the same breath ridicules the speakers that "go into rhapsodies over the sweet Summerland." Perhaps he can harmonize the different positions. I confess I cannot.

He says: "Let us have our energies concentrated on an effort to solve some of the great problems that must be solved before Spiritualism can take its place among men," and then instructs us to invite the graduates of the orthodox colleges to do the solving. In this I believe he will find every progressive Spiritualist against him.

He opposes having so many different kinds of Spiritualist meetings. Chicago, for example, has some twenty-five or thirty Spiritualist meetings, no two alike; each working on its own natural plane, as the different spirits work on their own separate planes. I believe the various Chicago meetings are rendering vastly more aid to the cause than they possibly could by having even Dr. Caird collect them onto one plane and have them all follow his leadership.

Nevertheless, I admire Brother Caird's courage, noble ambition and honesty.

The divisions in the ranks of the great and mighty reform wave are really trivial. On the Bible the Spiritualists all agree much more than they disagree. On religion the difference is more in manner than matter. A small handful gets satisfaction out of digging up heathen Theosophy and squeezing it. It pleases them and doesn't hurt us.

Dr. Caird favors making Spiritualism a world-wide religion. So do I. My manner would differ from his. I would have "our energies concentrated" less on kicking, and more on a better study of our subject. After all, is there not some virtue in kicking? Quakerism wouldn't kick, and died—only a few gasps left. The Christians have constantly quarreled among themselves, and flourished.

THE AGNOSTIC VIEW OF DEATH.

My short and happy day is done;
The long and lonely night comes on,
And at the door the pale horse stands
To carry me to unknown lands.

His whinny shrill, his pawing hoof,
Sounds dreadful as a gathering storm;
And I must leave this sheltering roof
And joys of life so soft and warm.

Tender and warm the joys of life—
Good friends, the faithful and true;
My rosy children and my wife,
So sweet to kiss, so fair to view.

So sweet to kiss, so fair to view;
The night comes on; the lights burn blue;
And at my door the pale horse stands
To bear me forth to unknown lands.

WHAT YOUR THOUGHTS LOOK LIKE.

The old parlor game of "What is your thought like?" [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune] is now being played by the scientists, and certain answers to the query relating to such stuff as thoughts are made of, to their shape, size, color, movements, and influences have just been made public by two investigators of England.

Twentieth century science, weeping for more worlds to conquer, no longer directs its attention solely to the things of the earth, but finds itself compelled to glance further afield and construct hypotheses as to the nature of matter and force which lie beyond the ken of its instruments, so that telepathy, clairvoyance, movement without contact, though not yet admitted to the scientific table, are approaching the Cinderella stage. So far has science pressed its researches that it is receiving the reward of those that seek, and forces and beings on the next higher plane are beginning to show themselves on the outer edge of the physical field.

"Nature makes no leaps," and as the physicist nears the confines of his kingdom he finds himself bewildered by touches and gleams from another realm which interpenetrates his own. He finds himself compelled to speculate on invisible presences if only to find a rational explanation for undoubted physical phenomena and insensibly he slips over the boundary.

Physical Interpenetrates Astral Plane.

One of the most interesting of the byroads from the physical is that of the study of thought. The western scientist commencing in the anatomy and physiology of the brain endeavors to make these the basis of sound psychology. He passes into the regions of dreams, illusions and hallucinations; and as soon as he endeavors to elaborate an experimental science which shall classify and arrange these he inevitably plunges into the astral plane. Dr. Baraduc of Paris has nearly crossed the barrier and is well on the way towards photographing astro-mental images, to obtaining pictures of what from the materialistic viewpoint would be the results of vibrations in the gray matter of the brain. Dr. Hooker of London has done similar work with the aurae of people, while Mrs. Annie Besant and Mr. C. W. Leadbeater have gone boldly beyond, and in their latest researches record observations and conclusions on thoughts and thought forms as systematic as a chemist's notes on an experiment, and show us pictures of thoughts and thought forms as clear and seeable as the painting of a flower or a star.

"Each man," says Mrs. Besant and Mr. Leadbeater, "travels through space inclosed within a cage of his own building, surrounded by a mass of forms created by his habitual thoughts. Through this medium he looks out upon the world and naturally sees everything tinged with its predominant colors and all rates of vibration which reach him from without are more or less modified by its rate. Thus until a man learns complete control of thought and feeling he sees nothing as it really is, since all his observations must be made through this medium, which distorts and colors everything like imperfectly made glass.

Dual Effect of Each Thought.

"Each definite thought," they say, "produces a double effect—a radiating vibration and a floating form. The thought itself appears as a vibration, and this may be simple or complex. If the thought itself is absolutely simple there is only the one rate of vibration and only one type of mental matter will be strongly affected. When a sudden wave of some emotion sweeps over a man, for example, his astral body is thrown into violent agitation and its original colores are for the time almost obscured by the flush of carmine or of blue or some other color which corresponds with the rate of vibration of that particular emotion. This change is only temporary; it passes off in a few seconds, and the astral body rapidly resumes its usual condition. Yet every such rush of feeling produces a permanent effect; it always adds a little of its hue to the normal coloring of the astral body, so that every time the man yields himself to a certain emotion it becomes easier for him to yield himself to it again, because his astral body is getting into the habit of vibrating at that especial rate.

"The majority of human thoughts, however, are by no means simple. This means that at least two separate vibrations appear both in the mental and astral bodies—frequently more than two. The radiating vibration will therefore be a complex one, and the resultant thought form will show several colors instead of only one. These radiating vibrations like all others in nature, become less powerful in proportion to the distance from their source, though it is probable that the variation is in proportion to the cube of the distance instead of to the square, because of the additional dimension involved. Again, like all other vibrations, these tend to reproduce themselves whenever opportunity is offered to them, and so whenever they strike upon another mental body they tend to provoke in it their own rate of motion. That is, they tend to produce in the mind thoughts of the same type as that which had previously arisen in the mind of the thinker who sent forth the waves. The distance to which such thought waves penetrate and the force and persistency with which they impinge upon the mental bodies of others depend upon the strength and clearness of the original thought. But clearness and definiteness are of even greater importance than strength.

One Man's Thought Has Replica in Others.

"A man thinking keenly upon some high subject pours out from himself vibrations which tend to stir up thought at a similar level in others. They naturally act with especial vigor upon those minds already habituated to vibrations of similar character, yet they have some effect on every mental body upon which they impinge, so that their tendency is to awaken the power of higher thought in those to whom it has not yet become a custom.

"The second effect of thought, the creation of a definite form, has to do with the fact that every thought or impulse sent forth from our mental or from our astral body becomes for the time a kind of living creature, the thought force being the soul and the vivified matter the body. Some novelists have been dimly aware of such a process, and like Thackeray, have testified that their characters when once created have developed a will of their own, and insisted on carrying the plot of the story along lines quite different from those originally intended by the author. Each thought draws around it the matter which is appropriate for its expression, and sets that matter into vibration in harmony with its own. This thought form is not inaptly to be compared to a Leyden jar, the coating of the living essence being symbolized by the jar and the thought energy by the charge of electricity.

"Quality of thought determines color. Nature of thought determines form. Definiteness of thought determines clearness of outline.

What Thought Color Denotes.

"Black means hatred and malice. Red, of all shades, indicates anger, clear brown shows avarice; hard, dull brown-gray is a sign of selfishness; deep, heavy gray signifies depression; green seems always to denote adaptability, in the deepest tones deceit, when the color becomes purer it means rather the wish to be all things to all men; in its still higher, more delicate and luminous aspect it shows the divine power of sympathy. Affection expresses itself in all shades of crimson and rose; a full, clear carmine means a strong, healthy affection of normal type, while pure pale rose marks that absolutely unselfish love which is the outpouring of high natures. It passes from the dull crimson of animal love to the most exquisite shades of delicate rose, like the early flushes of the dawning as the love becomes purified from all selfish elements and flows out in wider and wider circles of generous impersonal tenderness and compassion to all who are in need. With a touch of the blue of devotion in it this may express a strong realization of the universal brotherhood of humanity.

"Deep orange imports pride or ambition, and the various shades of yellow denote intellect or intellectual gratification, pale luminous primrose being a sign of the highest and most unselfish use of intellectual power, the pure reason directed to spiritual ends. The different shades of blue up to the rich, deep, clear color of heartfelt adoration and the beautiful pale azure of that highest form which implies self-renunciation and union with the divine; the devotional thought of an unselfish heart is most lovely in color, like the deep blue of a summer sky. Through such clouds of blue will often shine out golden stars of great brilliancy, darting upwards like a shower of sparks. A mixture of affection and devotion is manifested by a tint of violet, and the more delicate shades of this invariably show the capacity of absorbing and resounding to a high and beautiful ideal.

Brilliancy and Depth Show Degree.

"The brilliancy and the depth of the colors are usually a measure of the strength and the activity of the feeling. If a thought be purely intellectual and impersonal, if the thinker is attempting to solve a problem in geometry, the thought form and the wave of vibration will be confined to the mental plane. If, however, the thought be of a spiritual nature, if it be tinged with love and aspiration or deep, unselfish feeling, it will rise upwards from the mental plane and borrow much of the splendor and glory of the buddic level. In such a case its influence is exceedingly powerful, and every such thought is a mighty force for good which cannot but produce a decided effect upon all within reach, if they contain any quality at all capable of response.

"In cases in which thoughts are projected at individuals those thoughts, if they are directly to fulfill their mission, must find in the aura of the object to whom they are sent materials capable of responding sympathetically to their vibrations. Any combination of matter can only vibrate within certain definite limits, and if the thought form be outside all the limits within which the aura is capable of vibrating it cannot affect that aura at all. It consequently rebounds from it, and that with a force proportionate to the energy with which it impinged upon it. This is why it is said that a pure heart and mind are the best protectors against any inimical assaults, for such a pure heart and mind will construct an astral and a mental body of fine and subtle materials, and these bodies cannot respond to vibrations that demand coarse and dense matter.

Pure Heart Its Own Defense.

"If an evil thought strikes such a body it can only rebound from it, and it is flung back with all its own energy. It then flies backward along the magnetic line of least resistance, that which it has just traversed, and strikes its projector, and he, having matter in his astral and mental bodies similar to that of the thought form he generated, is thrown into respondent vibrations and suffers the destructive effects he had intended to cause another.

"Thus curses and blessings come home to roose. A thought of love and desire to protect directed strongly towards some beloved object creates a form which goes to the person thought of and remains in his aura as a shielding and protective agent. It will seek all opportunities to serve and all opportunities to defend, not by a conscious and deliberate action but by a blind following out of the impulse impinged upon it, and it will strengthen friendly forces that impinge upon the aura and weaken unfriendly ones. Thus may we create and maintain veritable guardian angels round those we love, and many a mother's prayer for a distant child thus circles round him, though she knows not the method by which her prayer is answered."

NO DEATH FOR THE SOUL.

Spirit Declared Not to Be Affected by the Passing of the Body.

In a recent article in the Battle Ground, in the Chicago Record Herald, J. H. Coyle seems to have picked out all the dark sayings as to no life beyond the grave. For instance, he quotes, "The dead know not anything," and "for there is no work, no device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest."

Certainly not—"in the grave"—where the body goes, but what about the ego, the soul, that everlasting pilgrim for whom the hour never strikes. There is no death for that. The soul does learn wisdom beyond the grave, or in the spirit world, whichever you please. To my thinking the spirit world interpenetrates the physical. Though unseen, it is ever in touch with us.

This is no enigma to the spiritual-minded person. As to evil spirits palming themselves off as one's friends or relatives, I know nothing of that by experience, as I am not a Spiritualist. What I do know is of my own belief and personal experience.

The words "The bourn from which no traveler returns" are from Shakespeare and not from the bible, as is so often understood. "Our real self, our immortal spirit, is divine and eternal." "Birthless and deathless and changeless remaineth the spirit forever; death hath not touched it at all, dead though the house of it seems."

SPIRITUALISM EXPLAINED.

Interesting Answers to Questions Made by John W. Ring.

The lecture given by John W. Ring at the Spiritual temple Thursday evening was worthy of a larger hearing than was given it. Mr. Ring comes here from Galveston, Texas. It was announced at the beginning that he would lecture on subjects in the form of questions that would be submitted by persons in the audience.

There were three questions offered for his consideration, the first being, "Is the doctrine of reincarnation consistent with the doctrine of Spiritualism?"

In reply the lecturer said that Spiritualism aims to teach not so much a doctrine as a fundamental philosophy and law of life. Its teachings rest upon the basic proposition that all is life, consequently there is no actual death, and what appears to be death is only a form of change of continued life that has no beginning, and no end. Reincarnation is one of the ideas advanced to account for the ways and means provided for the immortal ego to gain experience in both the past and future of an endless life. Individual Spiritualists are not united on this question, as some reject it utterly and others accept it as a reasonable theory. The lecturer did not approve of dogmatism and restriction of thought on such questions, but advocated the largest freedom of honest opinion in all matters where the very largeness of the question made it unprovable to limited finite comprehension.

The second question asked was "What is the highest value of spirit communion?"

To this query Mr. Ring replied that while continuity of life beyond the grave was a very important and valuable fact that had been satisfactorily proven by spirit communion, still in his opinion the highest use that can be made of this privilege is the opportunity given to learn and apply the law and philosophy of life by loving and serving humanity, and by living the truly spiritual life whose daily acts spring from a realization of the divinity of all men.

The third question propounded was worded as follows: "If Spiritualism is a religion, and religion is a system of faith and worship, on what basis does the Spiritualist place his faith, and whom or what does he worship?"

In answering this question the lecturer called attention first to the fact that all systems of faith and worship in the past had kept pace with the state of development mentally and spiritually of the different peoples, giving adherence to the different systems of religion.

People have in different times and places placed faith in gods, demons and devils.

Even at this day of supposed enlightenment there are probably more people here in America that worship, and place their faith in gold than in God. Religion as well as all other systems is a matter of evolution and growth. The history of nearly all systems of faith and worship have been written in letters of blood and carnage.

As man has grown and evolved mentally and spiritually, he has desired to add to his faith knowledge. Spiritualism has given him this opportunity. Spiritualism invites faith in infinite intelligence, expressed in divine purpose, divine law, and infinite love. It teaches that worship can be directed to the same source in which we live, move and have our being. It sees God expressed in every human soul, and in every human life, and defines worship as serving the Creator, by serving humanity as the creature. It teaches that all will be happy as soon as they are worthy of happiness.

Mr. Ring is to deliver three more lectures in the Spiritual temple, Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and again Sunday and Monday evenings of next week, and it is hoped that his lectures will attract the audiences that they are truly entitled to.—San Diego (Cal.) Sun.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

Sunday, Sept. 3, was the last meeting of Lake Brady camp for the season of 1905. At the opening service of the morning the tent was filled to overflowing. Mr. Hunger occupied the chair, introducing Mrs. Marian Carpenter, who is a great favorite here, and was at her best. After the singing of "Sweetly Falls the Spirit Message," by the audience, and a solo, "Only a Thin Veil Between Us," by Mrs. Flora Russell, by request Mrs. Carpenter read a short poem, "The Kingdom of Heaven," basing her remarks upon the same, showing the necessity of living right, as we are building our own heaven day by day, or the opposite, as the case may be.

In the afternoon Mr. Dell Herrick gave the invocation, followed by another solo by Mrs. Russell, "Just Send an Angel Down and I Will Come." For her topic Mrs. Carpenter took the quotation, "There is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." Inspiration was the main idea of the discourse. Her remarks were soul-inspiring throughout, and many regrets were expressed that this was the last Sunday and her last lecture for the season. May she live long and be able to continue her work till the time is ripe for her transition to the higher life which awaits us all.

After the lecture Dr. Haines of Bedford, made a few remarks relative to his recent consecration to the spiritual work and gave all present an urgent invitation to be present at the dedication of their spiritual temple in Cleveland the first Sunday in October.

Dell Herrick followed him, making a speech in his own inimitable style, soliciting funds for the auditorium which they hope to begin this fall.

Mrs. Carpenter closed the services by giving messages to many present from their loved ones gone before.

The Ladies Aid has netted the neat little some of $128.11 for their summer's work.

On Friday evening about thirty of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Snook met at their cozy little home, it being Mr. Snook's 82d birthday. The evening was spent in social converse, singing, and a few remarks by Mrs. Carpenter appropriate to the occasion. Mrs. Connor, a daughter of Mrs. Snook, served light refreshments. Mr. Snook received many congratulations and hopes for his continued health and unimpaired faculties which he now possesses, also a substantial remembrance in a collection of five or six dollars as it was an impromptu gathering and there was no time to get a present.

The campers will soon be scattered, quite a number intend going to Lake Helen Camp in Florida.

May we meet another year, though we scatter far and near; may the chain of thought still bind us heart to heart. May we each one do some good, helping others as we should, in life's battle each one doing well their part.

TO WISCONSIN SPIRITUALISTS.

A Call for Action in the Interest of Spiritualism.

The time has again come for active work in the interest of organized Spiritualism in this state, and your attention is called to the need of hearty cooperation in the work. At the spring convention and board meetings the matter of missionary or organizing work was put into the hands of the president and secretary, with instructions to push the work in every legitimate way. For reasons that must be obvious to all we have refrained from active work during the summer months, but now that the fall and winter is at hand we are ready to put our shoulders to the wheel and work.

If all those who desire meetings in their locality will write me or the secretary, Rev. Nellie K. Baker, Portage, Wis., and tell us what they want, and what they are willing to do in order to get it, we will see what can be done in that direction. Do not forget that both myself and Mrs. Baker lecture on the philosophy of Spiritualism and kindred subjects and are ready for work wherever our services are needed. Mrs. Baker will answer calls not too remote from her home; as for the writer, he will answer calls from any part of the state.

Now, friends, what we want is a strong pull together, and we will land our state association on the top of the ladder. Will you see what you can do?

Nearly every hamlet has one or more Spiritualists; and nearly every hamlet can get out a few people to listen to lectures on the subject when an effort is made. Personally I would like to visit all parts of the state, and feel that by so doing we can unitedly assist the work of the state association. If you are hungry for some of the spiritual truths, write us, and if we cannot go ourselves, we can arrange for someone else to go.

I wish to state now that we are making arrangements for some work which will be put on in the early winter—shortly after the holidays, which will be of exceptional character in point of excellence. It requires the assistance of the Spiritualists to enable us to do that. What I would like to know is, how many of our Spiritualists in the towns and cities want work of this character? Will you write me from every point and tell me what you want and how much you can afford toward bringing the workers I have mentioned to your town?

It is necessary for me to be out of the state almost the entire month of September; in order to facilitate matters I would advise that all who are interested in this work in Wisconsin, write me, addressing me at Ottawa, Kansas, care Spiritualist Camp, at which point I will be from the 15th to the 25th of the month. Remember, good friends that I will be ready for work in Wisconsin by October first, at the latest, and would like to have meetings arranged en route; that will make it easier for you and for us also.

Write for terms on which meetings will be put on anywhere and everywhere in the state. You are interested in the cause of Spiritualism; so am I, and I want to see it succeed in this state particularly, as well as everywhere else. I believe if we join hands we can surprise the outside world at our strength.

Spiritualists, you sometimes complain that you do not have any good workers come to your town. I know where to reach a good many capable workers who would be willing to work in this state, but they must be encouraged; let me see what you are willing to do, and if you will meet us half way, we will have such workers in this field as will make you proud of your Spiritualism and its representatives.

Now, friends, don't wait! Let me hear from you at once; even though you can do nothing but send an encouraging word. Renew your memberships if you have not already done so. Address as above directed, or write me at LaCrosse, Wis.

A SPIRIT SUDDENLY APPEARS.

The Doors of the Spirit World are Open and Our Spirit Friends Can Appear.

The following remarkable incident is related for the special benefit of those people who think that spirits are "fakes." A young lady in Roxbury was playing with some little children, when one of them ran towards the hall door of the house and seeing a strange "man" standing there, stopped in surprise and holding up its little hands in amazement, said: "Why, there's a man there." The child's mother in another room saw him and said to the young lady: "Miss ——, there is a man waiting in the hallway. I guess he wants to see you."

The lady stepped to the hallway and was dumfounded to see a New York man there, pale from consumption, holding a piece of paper in his hand. She knew him at once as her relative M——, and he said to her, holding the piece of paper towards her, "Here is something for you. I died last ——, and my funeral will be held next Wednesday in New York. I came to tell you about it." She stepped towards him to get the paper and he suddenly dematerialized before she could touch his hands.

This young lady did not know that the consumptive relative had really died, so she wrote to his people and asked if it was true that her relative M—— had died and were they to hold the funeral on Wednesday? They answered her and said that he had died on the day she mentioned and would be buried the next Wednesday, but then they wanted to know how she knew he was dead as they had informed no one when her message was first sent to them, etc.

Now, was this a ghost, spectre, spirit, apparition, sub-conscious ego, vision, etc., or did she dream and the child and the child's mother all dream the same thing at the same time in the same place? Many of these spirits have written messages between sealed slates, they have had their photos taken. They have spoken through trumpets, mediums, etc. Probably thousands of spirits have proved that there is a life after death, and yet there are millions of people who do not believe it. They do not read any Spiritualist papers, although several large sheets are published in the United States and many in other lands. The Holy Bible is full of spirit incidents, which are regarded by the experts as scientifically accurate. Still, there are people who say: "There is no life after death." Strange that such people should push into print.

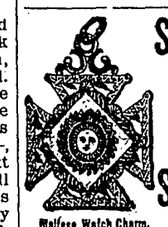
THE PSYCHOGRAPH OR Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?



The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Simply Awful.

Now the statement, confirmed by official reports, that the Chicago bridewell is filled to repletion with prisoners; that accessions of forty and upwards are made daily; that one day last week ninety-four prisoners were received and added to the number; that a few days ago 2,043 prisoners were confined within its prison walls; that the increase from last year equals near 50 per cent; that the authorities are deeply anxious as to what disposition shall be made of the overflow of prisoners.

Coming to the outside world, and it seems crime, with disregard of human life, is rampant.

Going out of Chicago, and examining the statistics of the penitentiaries of the nation, and it is found the foreign convicts, or those born of foreign parents, amount to from 50 to 75 per cent of the whole number.

Beyond this we have not official reports of to-day; but all know probably nine-tenths of that criminal class die Catholics; while near the entire mass were members of Christian churches, else were reared by Christian parents in the dominant faith. Spiritualists, Agnostics and Jews constitute but a small fraction of the criminal class, there being more clergymen representing Christian churches in those penal institutions than there are, all told, of persons of non-believing sects.

We are content to allow our readers to make their own deductions as to the cause of these conditions. The Catholic priest listens to the confessions of the guilty wretches of his church, and, with full authority from the pretended words of Jesus, excuses crime: Matt. 18,18, "What things soever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

So that confession, with perhaps a slight penance, excuses crime and is a passport to glory.

The Protestant's belief in Jesus excuses guilt without the intervention of the priestly confessor.

We must not forget in passing that the slums of all Catholic countries in Europe during the last years have been emptied on the United States, adding one million to our population, largely of the criminal classes. Can we afford to allow this condition of things to continue?

A Thrust From the Pulpit.

The "yellow journalism of the pulpit" received a thrust before the Epworth League Assembly, at Lincoln, Neb., the other day, from Rev. Stephen J. Herben, editor of the Epworth Herald, which should be long remembered. The secular press should give it a wide circulation. The Progressive Thinker quotes with approbation:

"A sensational preacher, in place of quenching the thirst of souls, administers a dose of carbolic acid that corrodes and destroys. He is possessed of the devil. He dishonors God and toys with the destiny of deluded humanity that listens to his unholy performances. The buffoon preacher is a distressing and wretched anomaly doing greater harm by his mouthings and antics than the true ambassador of Christ can correct in many a day. He is to be stared at and laughed at as a freak."

Yes, he is a freak, a mountebank, a pulpit clown, dishonoring God, and the church for which he displays his pranks. Persons converted to the faith under the influence of such tricks, are probably the material which a little later fill our jails and penitentiaries, under the conviction that belief in Jesus insures eternal rewards. His death on the cross paid all the debt they owe. The culprit on the scaffold, with a rope about his neck, literally swings to glory.

Dowie and His Millions.

Continuing from last week the quotation from "Public Opinion," the first part relating to Mrs. Eddy and her Christian Science appearing in the preceding issue, we find a greater success than she in the founder of Zion City. Again we quote:

"John Alexander Dowie, self-styled Elijah III, and founder of Zion City, near Chicago, is a great speculator in real estate as well as a prophet. His scheme of creating new property values by massing his followers upon a farm and changing it into a city met with such success that he now intends to set on foot a similar enterprise on a larger scale in Mexico. Fifteen years ago, when Dowie first went to Chicago to establish his Christian Catholic church, he was almost penniless. To-day he has control of many millions, and has his eyes on more. In one of his addresses Dowie gave the following corrected statement of his anticipation for the future:

"'Deacon Barnard, Zion's financial manager and I, once made a list in which we found that there was from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 worth of property in the hands of Zion people, which they were endeavoring to turn into money; it was on its way and would come in perhaps during five years. Since then I have been around the world, and I have looked at the whole situation, and my conviction is that $150,000,000 will flow into Zion within five years.'

"For three years after Dowie arrived in Chicago he had a hard struggle. He depended much on the receipts of a boarding house which he called the 'Divine Healing Home.' This was managed by his wife. The boarders were followers who possessed money. About four years ago, Dowie, who has displayed repeated evidence of rare financial genius, bought 6,500 acres of farm land, for which he paid $1,250,000. This tract of more than ten square miles is about forty-two miles north of Chicago, on Lake Michigan. There he laid out Zion City and summoned his followers. Since then, the value of the land has increased to $26,000,000. The prophet holds the title to all this real estate. His followers, who have built Zion City, hold 1,000 year leases.

"Dowie was formerly a Congregational preacher in a little town near Sydney, Australia. Tiring of humdrum village life, he became a sort of evangelist, and then drifted to America. The methods of this modern Elijah are best illustrated in his own words. To stimulate the waning faith in the future of Zion City of some of his followers he said:

"'I remember when the land was first offered, some of our friends, not seeing what Zion was destined to become, thought it was pretty stiff for the general overseer to ask at the rate of $3,000 an acre—and a little more perhaps. It had cost me $200 on the average. I said to them, "Think what we are doing. We are giving you streets, parks, and sidewalks; and we are planning schools and advantages." Still it looked to be a high price. I said again, "The land you buy now at $3,000 an acre is dirt cheap. It is cheap dirt, and if you do not take it you will regret it; because it will be gone, and you will not be able to get it." It was gone in a week! Oh, that was a boom! I believe every acre of that land has an average value of $4,000.'

"After thus boasting of the wealth that was passing into his hands, Dowie made haste to add that he was working for the glory of Zion and not to enrich himself. 'Why should I care for money?' he said. 'I do not personally need more than I have. If I care I could keep the profits after paying what I have agreed to the shareholders. You know, Judge Barnes, one of the deacons, no one could prevent me.' To this Judge Barnes, one of his deacons, replied, 'You might easily do it.' 'I could pocket the whole thing after paying interest,' cried the prophet, 'but I am true to God and to Zion, and without an iota of selfish motive in my toils for this people and for God's kingdom.'"

Mr. Kirby, the author of this long article from which we have quoted, then enters into a disquisition on Mormonism, and shows that Brigham Young became the whole thing to the Mormon church which Joe Smith founded. Though important, as illustrating how persons laboring to advance the Christian idea, became wealthy and successful, yet we shall follow him no further.

Educational.

"'Tis education forms the common mind,
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined."

Pope's words came forcibly to mind as we read in an exchange, "Japan has 27,138 public schools, in which 50,084,099 children—about one-third of Japan's population—are taught by 108,360 teachers. This is 93¼ per cent of all children of school age in the empire."

What a marvelous revelation! It accounts for the Japanese triumph of arms against Russia—education in a contest with ignorance and barbarism.

The same facts were noted in the war between France and Germany. The soldiers of Germany, no sooner encamped for the night on French soil than lamps were lighted, maps were spread out, the place of encampment for the night was located, while every highway, byway, water course and body of timber was examined, and places for rendezvous in case of separation were carefully marked. The topography of the country through which it was proposed an army should pass, was as familiar to the common soldier as to the resident. The armies of France had no such knowledge, hence their defeat.

And it is probable the Japanese forces in Manchuria were equally well posted during their campaigns against Russia. Certainly they have shown a wonderful intelligence in their contests with the uneducated and poorly disciplined Cossacks.

Casting the eye backward along the track of human progress, is it probable that the present dominant religion would be in being had it originated with an educated people? Its barbaric beginning is apparent on every page of its history. Demons and damned spirits have no place with a thoughtful, cultured people.

The various sects as they have sprung into being from time to time, betray the educational character of their founders. Take the Mormon church whose beginning was in the life-time of some of us. Joseph Smith was of Baptist parentage. He was manipulated by a Baptist elder, Sydney Rigdon. His converts were the uneducated and lowly. The accretions came principally from the slums of European cities. As intelligence is diffused among them the tendency is to disintegration. And is not the same true of all denominations? The great mass of Liberals, the Voltaires, Volneys, Paines, Huxleys, Tyndals, Bradlaughs, Ingersolls, are offshoots from Christianity. Honest men, all of them, but too learned to endorse the creeds of their parents.

There is no faith which can boast of so many educated persons as the Spiritualists. Notwithstanding the tricksters who have intruded themselves into our ranks, we honestly believe we can show a larger per cent of educated persons among us than can be found in the same number of any other class of believers in an immortal life.

DEATH OF MRS. E. V. WILSON

Removes Another of the Grand Original Workers.

To the Editor:—As you are aware, my dear mother passed away last Monday morning, and was laid beside my dear father, at Lombard, Ill.

Mrs. Kayner was in Kansas, and being delayed in a wreck could not get here until after midnight Wednesday.

The funeral services were held at the house Wednesday afternoon at three o'clock, conducted by the Rev. W. I. Housten, a minister of the Christian churches at Westville and Wanatah, Ind., who makes his home in Valparaiso and boards with us. (I keep a private table of twelve boarders, as mother's feebleness prevented me from doing anything away from home.) He has been in our home for nearly a year, and was so well liked by mother who used to argue with him a great deal, each knowing and respecting the other's belief.

Mr. Housten spoke so beautifully of mother's brilliant mind, how well she kept informed of the current events and how firm was her belief in a future life. He read the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes, from which mother used to quote so often as she leaned on father's cane: "I am now where the 'grasshopper becometh a burden, and the grinders cease to grind because they are few.'"

In keeping with our lives, the laying away of the earth body of my dear mother was very simple. The plain black casket was covered with flowers sent by loving friends of whom we have so many, though living here but a few years; the house filled with the same friends for the services. My dear nieces, Esther and Mary (Mrs. Kayner's daughters) were with me and my sister came at midnight. We took the early train for Lombard and were met by Mr. Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Brookins and other friends. Mr. Brooks' words were a sweet solace to us as we realized that again our dear parents were united.

Mother went without a word, without a murmur, turning her face toward me, her dear eyes closed and her suffering was over. Dr. Vickery, our physician, who has been so faithful in his attendance, stayed till the last and a dear lady rooming in my home, took charge of my boarders and attended to everything as only a true friend can. My daughter was away on a short vacation and the last thing mother said was at midnight when she rallied, "Lois, I want you to write Ferrissa and tell her not to come home Wednesday, as the eclipse may frighten her." Soon after, the change came for the worse.

She was only taken ill Sunday morning, and the doctor came in the afternoon. Her condition was not alarming until after midnight when the heart action became involved. An acute attack of stomach trouble, to which she was very often subject, was what she was taken ill with.

Everything was done that could be thought of by our kind neighbors and the Rebekah Lodge to which I belong, to make the parting with our dear mother's and grandmother's earthly presence less hard.

I have faithfully tried to remember my father's last words as I bade him good-night over twenty-five years ago, only to be called just as he crossed the border: "Stand by your mother, my girl, stand by your mother." Was it a premonition? I have often thought so and a sweeter pleasure I have never had.

LOIS WILSON JELLIES.

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

To Be Held in Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

The thirteenth annual convention of the National Spiritualists' Association will be held in the First Unitarian Church, Eighth street and Mary Place, Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

Among those invited and expected to participate in the exercises are Rev. Dr. Austin, Will J. Erwood, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Oscar Edgerly, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Mesdames. H. P. Ressegue, R. S. Lillie, Laura G. Fixen, Eva McCoy, Margaret Gaule Ridinger, and a galaxy of others.

Come one and all to the greatest Spiritual convention ever held.

Special railway rates on the certificate plan can be secured over all lines. Ask your railroad agent for certificate tickets to the National Spiritualists' convention at Minneapolis; the round fare will be one and one-third of a fare. Delegates and visitors desiring to receive the benefits of this special rate must have their tickets vised by our railroad agent at convention the last day, October 20, and pay 25 cents each for such vising.

Hotel Nicollet, a first-class hotel on the European plan, will be headquarters of the convention. Special rates for good rooms, one dollar per day each person. Write and secure your rooms from Shattuck & Wood, proprietors of the Nicollet Hotel, Minneapolis, Minn.

The annual reception to delegates and visitors will be held at the First Unitarian Church, Monday, October 16, at 8 p. m.

All are cordially invited. Admission free to all meetings.

Secretary.
HARRISON D. BARRETT,
President.

TEXAS STATE ASSOCIATION.

The Texas State Spiritualist Association will hold its annual convention in Dallas, Texas, Sept. 29 and 30, and Oct. 1. The best talent will be employed for the occasion, and each evening meeting will be for the exposition of true Spiritualism in its highest and best light. We hope for a large delegation and for many visitors from all parts of the state.

Waste of time is the most extravagant and costly of all expenses.—Theophrastus.

No one tries to cure the ague with prayer. Quinine has been found altogether more reliable. Just as soon as a specific is found for a disease, that disease will be left out of the list of prayer. The number of diseases with which God from time to time afflicts mankind is continually decreasing. In a few years all of them will be under the control of man, the gods will be left unarmed, and the threats of their priests will excite only a smile.—Ingersoll.

PHENOMENAL!

How Live Birds, Rich Jewels and Ancient Tablets Were Produced at the Famous Stanford Seances, as Set Forth by Addie L. Ballou, in the San Francisco Bulletin.

We present another account of remarkable manifestations given through the mediumship of that wonderful medium, Mr. Bailey. It reads like a fairy tale, yet is true in all respects. It contains some additional matters of importance, not mentioned in the preceding communications, and will be read with special interest. Mrs Ballou is known as an able speaker, an author, and a most excellent artist. Her portrait of General Grant is recognized as the best ever produced. The Progressive Thinker Leads all other papers in presenting something with which every reader should be familiar. Now is the time to send in your subscriptions.

Since the first introduction of the matter of the clay tablets which Mr. Stanford offered to Stanford University and which were declined by that institution as other than genuine, I have been besieged with inquiries as to how and where the tablets were produced, whence they came, and what happened at their coming. The public has appeared to be unusually interested in the affair, perhaps because of its mysterious element, and because of this interest I will explain, as far as I am able, the peculiar circumstances attendant upon their materialization.

All do not possess the gift of faith. What to some is visibly apparent, is to others bafflingly weird. An audience will watch the conjuring feats of a Hindu adept with mixed feelings. To some they are but the inexplicable "tricks of his trade," to others the direct manifestations of the victory that mind has gained over matter. To the sect to which Mr. Stanford, the late Mrs. Stanford and Mr. Bailey belong, they are ascribed to other than normal sources. To these same sources are accredited the production of the different articles that are exciting press and public. They are regarded as being produced by those departed beings who take possession of the body of Mr. Bailey when he is in a state of coma, or, as it is called "under control."

In the first place, let me state that belief is demanded of none. Every religious sect that lives is scoffed at by another sect which cannot reason along the lines of the first. To some the reasoning processes are absurd, to others apparent. Charity is the only thing that makes toleration possible.

Mr. C. Bailey, known as the "sensitive," who produced the phenomena, is not a well educated man. He was, before the knowledge of his power dawned upon him, a laundry man of Melbourne, Australia. Honesty, good nature and a certain innate refinement is written upon his face. He first came before the public eye through the introduction of Mr. Thomas Stanford, brother of the late Leland Stanford, who being interested in occultism, discovered and developed the peculiar mental gift of the laundry man. The special phase of this "sensitive" is the sudden translation of objects, either animate or inanimate from any distance to the place where he may be. The demonstrations that I am about to describe took place in the home of an intimate friend of Mr. Stanford in Sydney, Australia.

Mr. Bailey had agreed with this gentleman to give a series of six sittings, and came from Melbourne to Sydney for that purpose. Although he had never before seen his host, Mr. Bailey went straight to him through the great crowd at the dock, and stated that he knew him to be the person he had come to see.

The conditions agreed between Mr. Bailey and his host were rigid in the extreme, so as to preclude all possibility of fraud.

The host was to select all the persons to be present at the manifestations, Mr. Bailey not to be given the option of either rejecting or recommending any guest. His wife was to be excluded from all the meetings; he was to have no access to the meeting room except on the night of the exhibition, and then only when almost all of the guests had assembled; he was to be carefully searched by two or three guests before every sitting, and his manifestations were to take place in a room absolutely without means of concealment for any sort of article, with but one door, which was to be locked before and during each and every meeting, the key to be kept by some person chosen by the host.

To further eliminate chance of fraud, Mr. Bailey was tied in a large canvas bag, made by the host, with only hands and head remaining uncovered, and sealed in. The seals were examined and certified to immediately after each exhibition.

The room selected was a large one in Queen's Hall, Sydney, empty of everything but a table and a few chairs, with no entrance except the door. No one was allowed to enter the room after it was engaged but the host and his secretary. About twenty-five persons were invited to attend the first meeting; all of them were strangers to Mr. Bailey and met him for the first time on that occasion.

Mr. Bailey was searched thoroughly; every part of his body and clothing was gone over carefully without revealing any concealed articles. He entered the room, was enveloped in the canvas bag, which was sealed up, and he was then seated.

In a few moments his face and body underwent a change as apparent as sudden. He became another person, and his eyes closed as though he slept. Soon he spoke and announced that he was a Doctor Whitcombe of Melbourne. It was at once apparent that Dr. Whitcombe's individuality was distinct and different from Mr. Bailey's. It was different in voice, verbiage, manner, clearness of expression, indication of refinement and general culture. When it departed, other personalities took control, and introduced into Mr. Bailey the different influences of their personalities. One was that of an Egyptian who wrote his name and occupation in what appeared to be hieroglyphics, and which were subsequently translated by a professor of languages entirely ignorant that the signature had been given through Mr. Bailey.

At the second meeting in this carefully guarded room objects were materialized. More guests had been invited, all strangers to Mr. Bailey. All the newcomers were pronounced skeptics. Again the door was locked and Mr. Bailey enveloped in the bag. He immediately fell under the control of a personality calling itself a high-caste Hindu. The personality was particularly striking. Mr. Bailey's own character and being was entirely obliterated, and his manner and hearing were distinctly Oriental. The Hindu ordered that the light in the apartment be switched off. In a second the control stated that he had something for the audience to see. Instantly the light was turned on, disclosing a live bird, in its nest lying in "sensitive's" hand. It twittered and fluttered, apparently much frightened, and was described as an Indian jungle sparrow. It was given to one of the ladies present, and is still alive.

When the light was again turned off something was heard to fall heavily. It was found to be a clay tablet, sun? baked apparently, with some indecipherable inscription upon it. Three other similar tablets were materialized in the same way at that meeting, and a mango seed placed in a flower pot was made to grow a shoot to the height of three inches.

But more wonders were to be disclosed at this gathering. The Hindu again ordered the light to be extinguished, announcing that he had something more to bring. It proved to be a handful of jewels, Burmese rubies a whitish stone described as a star sapphire, an Egyptian scarabeus, and ten uncut red stones.

On this same day, but earlier in the morning, while Mr. Bailey and his host were in the latter's library, another tablet of the nature of those materialized at the meeting, fell into the room, deeply indenting a piece of mahogany furniture that it struck.

Perhaps the most remarkable manifestation of all those occurring at these meetings was that of a live fish and a sea crab. They were produced in an entirely mysterious manner. The sea crab was not alive, but the fish, a species of shovel-nose shark, was, and died after being examined by the audience. Bunches of seaweed, soaked with sea water, were entangled in the fish and crab.

Here are the articles produced in all of the six meetings:

Ten coins, described as being those of the various reigns of the Ptolemies.
Three coins, described as ancient Roman.
One coin, described as Antiochus specimen.
One Egyptian scarabeus.
One ametbyst (cut).
One topaz (cut).
One crystal topaz (uncut).
Two cut ruby garnets.
Thirteen uncut ruby garnets.
One moonstone (uncut).
One star-sapphire (uncut).
Three live Indian jungle sparrows.
One bird's nest.
Two flat clay tablets.
Six soap-shaped tablets.
One Arabic newspaper.
One sea crab.
One shovel-nosed shark, one foot long.
One lot of wet seaweed.
One half-baked chupatti cake, said to have come from an Indian housewife's kitchen, half baked and warm, when produced. These cakes are of such a nature that they will spoil after twenty-four hours' exposure to the air.
One lot of alluvial earth.
One terra cotta cylinder, weighing over two pounds.

In all, fifty-four articles were produced, and all chance of concealment on the part of the "sensitive" was rendered impossible because of the rigid searches to which he had been subjected.

The host, however, was not entirely satisfied, thinking that some slight oversight might have rendered a fraud possible. He therefore suggested to Mr. Bailey that he give another series of manifestations. Mr. Bailey declared himself willing.

Meantime the host had ransacked his brain for a more rigid test, something that should satisfy the most skeptical. Happening to meet a friend one day, he explained the circumstances to him.

He suggested that a piece of mosquito netting be procured and placed over Mr. Bailey, fastened at the bottom, and secured at the top. A cage was accordingly made, covered with netting, and left open at the base. Mr. Bailey was searched, put into this mosquito cage, and the bottom secured with wide adhesive plaster as well as nailed to the floor. Not even the tiniest sliver of paper could find entrance at the base or sides of the cage. So secure was the cage that the host offered $20 to anyone present who could insert a tiny coin into the net cage without betraying the spot. A number of those present attempted the feat in order to satisfy themselves personally, but no one succeeded.

But four tests were given in this second series, all equally wonderful with the manifestations in the first series. In addition to coins, a beautiful untanned leopard skin rug was manifested and given to the host, a plant was made to grow and to bear leaves, an Indian cap, richly embroidered, several live birds, a pair of satin slipper shapes embroidered in silver after the fashion of the far East and a number of precious stones.

At two of the meetings a hand was materialized so plainly that even the nails could be seen. The hands ended at the wrist, and were evidently members of a person of quite a different person to the "sensitive." Many different persons took control of Mr. Bailey, talked in different languages and exerted different influences and impressions upon him.

Other manifestations were given of Mr. Bailey's marvelous power when the "sensitive" was supposedly in a normal condition. One day while in a shop with his host, a coin fell at the host's feet. It was a silver piece of the reign of the Ptolemies, an exceedingly old coin, and very valuable. At another time while warming his hands at the open fire a tablet fell at Mr. Bailey's back, denting itself from contact with a chair which it struck in falling. This was one of the several tablets that have since been offered to the University and rejected.

It is a singular fact that Mr. Bailey neither can nor attempts to explain the phenomena of which he is the involuntary agent. He demands no price of the public for the manifestations, regarding money as unnecessary to one who, like himself is endowed with gifts that preclude the necessity of financial means.

Whether or not the tablets are genuine seems to be the present point of controversy, and the one occasioning all the difficulty. From Mr. Stanford's standpoint he is justified in his actions, as the University is justified in its deeds. As I said before no one is asked to believe beyond his ability. He is merely asked to exercise charity in his judgments and reason in his doubts. The well authenticated facts of one man's honest research and investigation are worth volumes of denials of skeptics and scoffers who have neither opportunity nor inclination to investigate any new thing.

RUSSIA AND ITS TORTURES.

Horrible Atrocities Incite the Use of the Bomb.

In a number of the Outlook there was published a story of Katherine Bereshkovsky, a Russian woman revolutionist, now in this country, in which she gives some of her own experiences, together with that of other women. She was a nobleman's daughter, but imbibed the desire to assist in liberating her people when only a girl. The courageous spirit of the woman is shown in her account of her first sacrifice, she says: "I was at this time twenty-six years old. My husband, like me, had a whole life before him, and therefore I thought it only fair to speak frankly. I asked him if he were willing to suffer exile or death in this cause of freedom. He said he was not. Then I left him."

She then described her first experience in a Russian prison: "In jail, I was led down to the 'black hole.' I was pushed in, the heavy door slammed and bolts rattled in total darkness. I took a step forward and slipped, for the floor was soft with filth. I stood still until deathly sick; I sank down on a pile of straw and rags. A minute later I was stung sharply back to consciousness and sprang up covered with vermin. I leaned against the walls and found them damp. So I stood up all night in the middle of the hole. And this was the beginning of Siberia."

Later on she thus describes what happened to some of her friends at the prison at Kara in Siberia: "Kara grew worse after I left, to hint at what happened, I'll tell briefly the story of my friend Maria, a woman of deep education and refinement. Shortly after my going Maria saw Madam Sigida strike an official who had repeatedly insulted the woman. Two days later she saw Sigida die, bleeding from the lash; that night she saw three women commit suicide as protests to the world; she knew that twenty men attempted suicide on the night following, and she determined to double the protest by assassinating the governor of the province, who had ordered Sigida's flogging. Her prison term over, she left her husband and walked hundreds of miles to the governor's house and shot him. She spent three months in a cold, dirty, 'secret cell', not long enough to lie in or high enough to stand up, sleeping on the bare floor and tormented by vermin; she was then sentenced to be hanged."

Now, if these terrible statements of the demoniac cruelty, upheld and practiced by the political Christianity and the government of Russia upon her own subjects are true, the unfortunate people have but one method of redress and that is—the bomb. King Charles of France had engraved upon his cannon, "The Last Argument of Kings." May it not be possible that in Russia the bomb may prove to be the last argument of the people? And are they not justified in using it? Now, if the destruction of one inhuman monster, who upholds and orders the execution of these horrible atrocities, this wholesale murder system of autocracy, would be the means of saving a hundred of the common people from torture and death, would it not be better that the one should go? Furthermore were you satisfied that the statements made by the woman we have quoted are true, and you were in St. Petersburg standing near a revolutionist with his arm raised ready with a bomb to hurl an autocrat out of physical life, one noted for his cruelty to the people, would you attempt to stay his hand?

We believe that better days are in store for unfortunate Russia, and that this awful sacrifice of human life on the altar of liberty has not been in vain; that the cry of the blood of her martyrs to heaven will yet be heard, that some deliverer like Washington, some Garabaldi, or perhaps some Toussiant Louverture, the dusky deliverer of Hayti, will yet arise, and that the time is not far distant when a new system of government will be adopted, in which all the people shall have a voice, a time in which this old system of "hell on earth" shall pass away, and a new heaven and a new earth of peace and prosperity to the whole country shall take its place. A new condition in which education shall supplant ignorance, and intelligence overcome superstition. Then a new nation will arise from the ashes of the dead past, bringing into life children, possessing all the characteristics of unflinching courage, self-sacrifice and love of liberty, such as we have already described as now now held by the revolutionists. True that at the present time the condition of the peasantry is one of humility and of ignorance, but there is a better day coming. It has been said that "No soil can grow genius, no seed can produce it, it springs into being in spite of all laws, rules and regulations. No novel is safe from it,' says Whistler."

Under such changed conditions as we have described it is not impossible that before the close of the present century Russia may become the center of the highest manifestation of the arts, science and education, together with the most liberal and advanced religious thought of all Europe. Within that time she may yet produce among her men and women some of the grandest and most noble characters the world has ever known.

"WAR IS HELL"

A Graphic Delineation By Doctor J. M. Peebles.

It is needless to say that some wars mentioned in the Old Testament were expressly commanded by the Lord. Take the following sentences as suggestive texts:

"For when you go out to battle against them, the Lord will be with you. * * The battle is not yours, but God's."

"The Lord of hosts numbereth the hosts for the battle. * * And many fell down slain because the war was of God."

"God taught my hands to war so that a bow of steel is broken. * * * God has gone forth before thee to smite them in battle."

"Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations as when he fought in the day of battle."

"Our God shall fight for us; the battle is ours because the Lord of hosts leads the hosts."

"And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord in Gilgal."

"Let him bring a young bullock without blemish unto the Lord. * * And he shall bring the bullock unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord, and shall lay his hands upon the bullock's head and kill the bullock before the Lord. * * * And the priest shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense before the Lord."—Leviticus.

"And the priest's custom with the people was that when the priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, he should strike a flesh-hook with three teeth into the pan, or kettle, and all that the flesh-hook brought up the priest took for himself. * * And also before they burnt the fat, the priest's servant came and gave flesh to roast for the priest."—Samuel.

I quote these biblical passages from the Old Testament, which Jews and Christians alike hold to be divinely inspired. On Sabbaths and Sundays they read chapters from the Old Testament and select texts therefrom as a base-work for their sermons, seemingly forgetful of the Christ of the new and higher dispensation, who said: "For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth come by Jesus Christ." And again: "Christ is the end of the law through righteousness to every one that believeth."

That there are gems and pearls of inspiration in the Old Covenant collections—especially the prophets—is admitted; but the general trend of Mosaism (which included the Israelitish priests and their teachings) is along the line of retaliation—the blood of kids, of heifers and bullocks, "eye for an eye," "tooth for a tooth;" "if a man shed blood, by man shall his blood be shed." In a word—WAR! War, which Senator Charles Sumner pronounced "a trade of barbarism, and a damnable profession."

During the nineteenth century 14,000,000 of human beings died in consequence of war, it is said; and statistics are shown to the effect that Napoleon caused the direct death of 2,000,000 men, while in all fully 8,000,000 died for his glory.

It is estimated that the war of the Crimea cost 300,000 lives; our American war, 5,000,000; Prussia doomed 800,000 to death between 1860 and 1871; and during the Russio-Turkish war, the French and German war, the South American wars, the Boer war in South Africa, the present Japanese and Russian war in Manchuria, millions upon millions have fallen and are falling upon blood-stained battle-fields, or have died—gashed, bleeding and maimed by the wayside, or died in grim and gruesome hospitals; while bridges were burned, houses were roofless, pastures herdless, and women at home left to mourn, children to cry for a father's care, and sisters weeping for a brother's love.

To be more specific, Waterloo, upon which the fate of Europe hung for a time, lost 51,000 from her three armies. Sherman left 37,000 soldiers upon the field of blood or in hospitals between Chattanooga and Atlanta, and Grant lost 60,000 men in the Wilderness. Shiloh cost us 13,000, Spotsylvania 35,000, and Gettysburg, 23,000. And saying nothing of Russia and Japan, think of the mighty armaments of Germany, England, France and other European powers to-day flaunting the motto—"In time of peace prepare for war." Just as well say in times of sobriety and temperance, "Prepare for drunkenness."

Japan and Civilization.

Just recently a Japanese scholar and statesman is reported to have said in scorching irony: "Centuries ago, though we published Aesop's Fables and many other books, and had our artists, painters, sculptors, philosophers—we were called heathen and barbarians; but now that we have great battleships, now that we have torpedoes and cannon, which redden the China Sea with the blood of our killed and those we kill, you call us brave and praise us. Our torpedoes roar, our shrapnel shriek, our cannon breathe slaughter, and we die and are the cause of thousands and thousands of deaths. And you Occidentals say to us: 'You have won your rank; you have civilized yourselves. You are now a civilized people, patterning after Christian nations.'" What a crushing comment upon popular Christianity!

Famed the world over through his books, Mark Twain, writing near the close of the last century of what the nineteenth century had to transmit to the twentieth, said: "I bring you the stately matron named Christendom, returning bedraggled, besmirched and dishonored, from the pirate raids in Manchuria, South Africa and the Philippines; and with her soul full of meanness and her pockets full of boodle and her mouth full of pious hypocrisies. Give her soap and a towel, but hide the looking-glass!"

Writing of the wars of Christian nations, the poet Parkinson says:

"Above the shriek of shot and shell,
The smoke of war, the breath of hell,
Above the tide of human gore,
The battle's shock and cannon's roar—
Above all these, which sinews are
That draw Greed's Juggernautic car.
And ever leaves within its wake
Despoiled, distorted human shape—
O Lord of hosts, above this din,
The wail of pain, the curse of sin,
Omnipotent Jehovah, hear
A breath of earnest, simple prayer!

"Christendom! What shame is here!
She, whose hired murderers
Flaunt her banners to the breeze
In the islands of the seas!
Christendom! Her robes a-stain
With the victims she hath slain!
Kings—'Defenders of the Faith,' Constantine to Edward—hath
In the name of God, misled
O'er a highway paved with dead,
The misguided sons of men
Feasting them with gore and gain!
Erring minister and priest
Standing by to bless the feast!"

Are So-Called Christian Nations Christian—Can True Christians Fight?

The demon of war, dipping its pen in rivers of blood, has traced a tale among the ages, and along the Christian centuries, that crimsons the cheek and stirs the heart in deepest sorrow. As a so-called infidel has said—"Christians pray like saints and fight like devils."

It is expected that the wild animals, ranging the forests, will fight, because they are animals; and the nearer the tribes and nations approach the selfish, animal plane of existence, the more do they engage in war and thirst for blood. When the pious Abbot Cietoux, on the sacking and destruction of Beziers, was inquired of how they could distinguish between the heretics and the Christians, "Kill them all—kill them all," was the heartless answer of the Abbet, "God will know his own."

During our so-called Civil War, 600 battles were fought, and the professed ministers of Christ (Him who said, "Blessed are the peace makers.") preached in favor of war, and prayed for victories—victories on "our side." Bishop Polk of Louisiana, laid aside his Episcopal robes, his prayer-book and Bible, and led one wing of the Southern army on to the bloody battlefield of slaughter and death. Later in the war he was shot dead; proving the teaching, "he that taketh the sword shall perish by the sword."

The distinguished Gen. Jackson, called "Stonewall Jackson," maintained morning and evening prayers during all his campaign. His negro slave-boy used to say, "Thar's gwine to be a big fight to-day; Massa prayed one big, long hour dis mornin'." And the Rev. Mr. Miller, commanding a battery in the corps, had his church bells melted down into cannon balls when the ordnance stores were low, to shoot down the Northern Christian soldiers. In the present Manchurian war, the Greek church officers and soldiers have their chaplains to pray for conquests, and some of them carry the crucifix in their hands to urge on the Russian soldiery to battle, amid the rolling of drums and the roaring of cannons.

In the South African war, both the English and the Boers had their chaplains, each praying to the God of Battles for victory on their own side. Such unchristian scenes among Christians are soul-sickening. During our late war with Spain, Sunday bull-fights in Christian Spain were inaugurated and urged on as a means of paying off Spanish war expenses. Were these officers, these blood-maddened witnesses to Sunday bull-fights, Christians? Were they followers of the Prince of Peace?

There were 88,500 lives sacrificed upon the war-altar during the Franco-German war; and the Emperor William, informing Augusta of the latest victory, devoutly thanked God, and the people catching the inspiration, marched through the streets of Berlin, singing—

"Ten thousand Frenchmen sent below, Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

The distinguished Dr. Dillon, who was with Europe's allied armies in the war with China, writes this of the Christian soldiers' treatment of Chinese women: "All along to Pekin it was the same sickening story of Chinese girls and women, of all ages from six to sixty, insulted first and bayoneted afterwards. I knew of many whose wives and daughters hanged themselves on trees and drowned themselves in garden wells to escape a worse fate."

And these armies were the representatives of the Christian nations. This fife-and-drum Christianity, the Greek church, is now fighting in Manchuria, and her priests are urging the Czar to continue the war, while Count Tolstoi, branded by churchmen as an "infidel," is pleading and praying for peace.

During the ten crusades in Europe, begotten by bishops and monks and called "the holy wars," 2,000,000 human lives were sacrified to wrench an empty tomb in Jerusalem from the grasp of Mohammedans.

Sectarian Christianity, whether Roman, Greek, Coptic or Protestant, that prates of the beatitudes, is a blistering shame, a brazen-faced sham, and the author thereof an Oriental myth. No Jesus Christ ever lived as the popular pulpit represents. With few exceptions, church and pulpit pray and preach war—war! They bless war cruisers and torpedo boats, and encourage boys' brigades; but the true Christ of the Gospels, aflame with the divinity of love and brotherhood, said: "Put up thy sword;" "return good for evil;" "blessed are the peacemakers;" and the angels of God in the birth-hour of the Prince of Peace sang under the bending Bethlehem skies, "Peace on earth and good will among men."

The blessed Christianity of that poor, persecuted Nazarene, outlined in his sermon on the Mount and enlarged upon and illumined in John's Gospel, is yet to be believed—is yet to be tried—is yet to be practically lived. I pleadingly pray of prelates, preachers and church-members to become born of the spirit, to become in word and deed, Christians, believing in the father-motherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, the sisterhood of woman, the ministry of angels and the life of the Christ, living it—living it daily, as did He of Calvary who said: "I am the resurrection and the life."

Paul and the templed priests of Paganism, and not the Christ of Nazareth, were the authors of this 20th century Christianity. Constantine, styled the "first Christian emperor," was an armor-clad warrior and a murderer, and instead of Pagan Rome being converted under him to Christianity, Christianity itself, with its bishops and priests, became largely Pagan in its worst form, persecuting Jews and pillaging the homes of heretics.

When Bishop Cox of Western New York, wrote a number of years ago a fiery, unchristian war poem, a peace poet connected with the secular press thus rebuked him:

"Thou man of God (?) who thus implore—
Thy brother's sacred blood to pour
In hateful tides of turbid gore
From Dardanelles to Danube's shore,
Be still—be still!
Blaspheme no more!

"God help the babes! God bless the wives!
Shame on the priests that whet the knives!
Shame on the church whose altar thrives
By wrecking peaceful peasants' lives!
Be still—be still!
'Tis hell that drives!

"How long, O Lord, before thy shrine
Shall men pray, 'Vengeance, God, is thine!'
Then worship Moloch as divine,
And drink the battle's bloody wine?
Be still—be still!
O, heart of mine!"

Modifying somewhat, we feel to add:

"Come, holy peace! May Muscovite
And Japan end their wretched fight,
That souls with songs may hail the sight,
And children flock with flags of white—
Be still—be still!
O, sacred sight!"

War Useless and Merciless.

War suspends every idea of justice and humanity, and is entirely inefficient towards redressing wrongs. It multiplies instead of indemnifying losses, and while Lord Brougham pronounced it the greatest of human crimes, Benjamin Franklin said, "there wes never a good war nor a bad peace." Porteus exclaimed:

"One murder makes a villain;
Millions a hero. Princes were privileged
To kill, and numbers sanctified the crime."

Happening to be in Cape Town, Africa, when the much-praised Henry M. Stanley with his party finished his journey across the Dark Continent, I heard him boast in a speech of the thirty battles he had fought with the natives, mowing them down like grass—leaving their unburied bones to bleach 'neath Afric's burning suns. And Cape Town feasted and lionized him to the extent that the English church dean, in rich dinners and carriage drives, showed him special favors; and all this, while orphans were crying for bread under the shadows of towering church steeples.

War for conquest, for territory, for revenge, for capitalists, and commercial combinations has not one redeeming quality. It is not merely inhuman, it is barbarian, and it utterly fails to accomplish any ostensible purpose for good. It is the principal cause of the great national debts of Europe and the further cause of excessive taxations. It vitiates morals, corrupts the young, and sets at defiance every principle of justice and fraternity. It is dueling on a most reckless scale. It is official and governmental murder. It is bestial butchery on blood-soaked battlefields.

Unlike the mechanic or the farmer, the soldier's trade is to trample down harvest fields—to burn farm houses, to sack and burn towns and cities—to depopulate nations and convert fruitful and happy lands into a barren wilderness—to shoot down the enemy, who has never personally injured him—to drive people from their houses and homes to freeze and scourge—to make widows and orphans—to cut and mangle human flesh—to break human bones and tear human bodies in pieces. In a word, to shoot and stab men and starve women and children. This is the soldier's work, directed by proud, gaudily-decorated and gold-trimmed officers, hot for fame and glory.

The thought—the whole scene, is a degrading abomination, whether home, internecine or foreign. We drop it as we would the coal that burns or the serpent that stings.

The Early Christians Would Not Fight.

It will not be denied by any student of history that for the first two or three hundred years after Christ, every person embracing Christianity refused to fight. If pressed by the government to enlist, their reply was: "No, I have enlisted under the banner of the Prince of Peace. I cannot fight; and cannot because I believe in Him, who said, 'My kingdom is not of this world; if it were, then would my servants fight.'"

"We Christians are superior in this," said St. Jerome, "we do not fight with our enemies." And the good St. Martin exclaimed (300 A. D.), "I am a soldier of Christ. I follow peace, and therefore will not fight."

If Jesus Christ were to reappear to-day, with flowing hair and sandaled feet, clad as of old in coarse Syrian costume, to how many besides Quakers, Shakers and the Communistic Amanas of Iowa, could be approvingly say: "Ye are not of this world, even as I am not of the world."

There are a few Spiritualists and many liberal Christians as well as Quakers and Shakers who stand firmly upon the olive-branch embowered platform of arbitration and peace as against all wars. To this end one of our New England poets, Rev. William Brunton, thus sings in unison with the Bethlehem angels:

"For peace we pray, peace to the world of man,
For hush of hate and spite and brutal strife;
For sense severe of sacredness of life,
For hope to follow out love's finer plan!
Let our America stand in the van
And put on evil passion, ceaseless ban!
No need of war with cannon, sword and gun;
No need antagonizing race with race;
Let reason rule and brotherhood increase;
Now with new century of light begun—
Give us the sweeter, grander gift of grace—
The world-wide beatitude of peace!"

How Shall Wars Be Ended?

To further dwell upon the enormities and barbarities of war would be the work of supererogation. No poet can picture, nor artist put on canvas its miseries and horrors.

But how shall wars be ended? This is the question of questions. Both Quakers and Shakers as organized societies have given for a century and more, powerful testimonies against duels and all kinds of war. The Monthly Peacemaker, the Universal Peace Union, the Pennsylvania Peace Society, of which Alfred H. Love is president and a tireless worker; the Delaware Peace Society, the Connecticut Christian Peace Society, the Lake Mohonk Conferences for International Peace and Arbitration, under the influence of that devoted, generous-hearted arbitration advocate, Albert K. Smiley; these, all these, have done and are doing yeoman service in the interests of universal peace. But, oh, the work—the educational work yet to be done!

What has the church done in the past for arbitration? What is it doing to-day for a world-wide peace? Did it ever, as an organized body, originate and perpetuate a reform? Never! Fred Douglas (once a slave), lectured, we are told, for twenty years upon the wrongs of African slavery before a church door was opened to him. Truly did Beecher say: "The best commentary upon the New Testament was a good, pure, Christian life, but the edition," he added, "was nearly exhausted."

It is not enough to plead before Congresses and Parliaments. It is not enough to lop off here and there some offensive war branches; we must go to the root, to the foundation, to conception, and to the all-important impressional period of gestation. Why was Byron so rash, impulsive and emotional? It was born in him. During the gestative months the mother was bewitched to attend theatres, listening to amusing comedies and the wildest tragedies. Why was Napoleon the warrior he was? Because the mother prior to his birth talked of wars, and conceived the strange idea that she would like to witness a battle. Accordingly the Bonapartes went to Italy where a battle was raging, and riding horseback upon a mountain she looked down and saw two small armies in a deadly combat; and seeing the tramping of horses, the cannons' curling smoke and the flashing steel, it left the pre-natal impress of war and human butchery upon the unborn Napoleon. We all remember the Massachusetts boy-murderer, still imprisoned, who when nine or ten years of age had stabbed three boys and killed one. And why? Effects have their necessary causes. The father was a butcher, and the about-to-be mother would persist in seeing him kill the poor animals. And when she saw their throats cut, saw the crimson currents and the blood-stained knife, it left the impress of murder, the "mother's mark," on the unborn child. It is well that butchers are not allowed to act as jurors. They are men of blood and generally great family breeders, begetting more Cains than Abels.

Prof. Peelman, of the Bonn University, treating recently of prenatal impressions and heredity, investigated and traced the descendants of a woman famous for prolific multiplying and who was a confirmed scold, given to quarreling and frequent drunkenness, dying in the early part of the last century. He ascertained that of her descendants, 30 were soldiers, 106 professional beggars of illegitimate birth, 181 were women who made a trade of unchastity, 64 were inmates of poorhouses, 7 were condemned for murder, and 76 were convicted of other crimes. The professor, saying nothing of the lust and terrible crimes of this family estimates that the total cost of this family to society and the state has been $1,260,000. Sin is always expensive, not only financially, but morally and spiritually.

Well do I understand the stock reasons for justifying wars. With an air of triumph we are told that the Greeks taught the proud Persians a needed lesson of humility on the fields of Marathon—that the Goths and northern hordes of Europe taught the Romans the necessity of union and the efficacy of patriotism—that King George the third and his armies were taught by our forefathers the injustice of unjust taxation, and that our four years of Civil War freed the slaves and subdued the South.

Neither that war nor the outcome of it subdued the South. Satan cannot cast out Satan nor redeem souls. Wars by superior physical and martial forces may conquer, but they cannot subdue—only the divine principles of love and wisdom can touch the heart and subdue. Not mentioning the desolated homes, the suffering prisoners, the crippled limbs, the armless sleeves, the gore-stained dead, embodying the flower of our country; the vast sums of money spent in those years of fratricidal war with 600 battles, would have purchased the freedom of every slave and put a schoolhouse in every southern township.

The Puritans and Pennsylvanians.

Those acquainted with American history remember the horrible warfare between the early New England settlers and the native Indians. Those churchianic Puritans that banished Roger Williams and persecuted Quakers, literally hated the Indians and went armed, and they built fortified places and went about armed with swords and guns. The natives knew this, and it was no uncommon thing for the Indians to suddenly attack the whites in the fields and their houses, braining babes and scalping adults. Mark the contrast! When William Penn and a few Europeans sympathizing with him, moored their barks on the shores of this New World, they met the Indian tribes along the banks of the Delaware as friends and brothers. Later, under the shadows of an old elm, the good Quaker Penn, in his plain drab dress, met the assembled chiefs, sub-chiefs, and tribal warriors, as peaceful friends and neighbors. He addressed them in tones as kind and sweet almost as angels use. He said, in substance: "We are children of the same Great Spirit. The sun shines and spring-time comes to us all alike. We are brothers. We will live together in peace, as though one man's body were cut in two parts—bone of bone, and flesh of flesh. I will be just and kind and good to you and love you as my soul-brothers." The old chief, sitting a few moments in meditation, smoking his pipe of peace, arose and said: "This pale-face speaks good talk. He calls us brothers. His tongue speaks straight. We love this white man, and we will live in peace with him and his white tribe as long as the sun shall shine or these waters roll towards the ocean."

Here was a treaty of peace signed without blood, and sealed with the Christly principles of love and friendship.

This Colonial community was constituted mostly of Quakers who carried no arms, nor did they construct any garrisons for safety, but, panoplied in kindness and good will, they pursued their peaceful, industrial avocations on their farms and in their homes, and they were neither molested nor harmed by their neighboring Indian tribes. This was a victory for peace—a beautiful, practical illustration of the Christ-spirit: "Love your enemies." Gautama Buddha of the Orient taught the same general principle, that human life was sacred and that it was absolutely wrong to kill either human beings or the harmless animals; and it is a historic fact that Buddhist nations have never been aggressive; but have ever sought to avoid the merciless ravages of war.

During our (un) Civil War, the Shaker communities north and south were rebuked by neighboring soldiers and governmental officials for not enlisting. The injustice was almost unbearable. Finally, the believers, (nicknamed "Shakers"), replied: "We believe in our Father-Mother God; we believe in the Christ of the New Testament—believe in the Christ-order of peace, and in the gifts of the Spirit, and therefore in conscience cannot go on to battlefields and fight."

"But," said the army officials, "you must—you will have to enlist or be drafted."

"Draft us if you choose," was their calm response, "but, abiding by our principles, we will not leave our homes and go off to fight."

"Very well, if you will not go when drafted nor pay for sending a substitute, the authorities will imprison you."

"Imprison us—imprison us if you choose. Paul and Silas were imprisoned. Mother Ann Lee was imprisoned in Manchester. Yea! Imprison us, if you will. We can—we will, if compelled, go to prison, and we will lie there and rot—LIE THERE AND ROT, but we will not fight." And they did not fight. Here was principle practiced in the face of prisons; here was the principle of peace triumphant!

A little later, Elder F. W. Evans, commissioned by the Shaker ministry, went to Washington in his plain drab dress, and laid the matter of drafting before Stanton, then Secretary of War, and Lincoln. Their hearts were touched with the reasons assigned for refusing to fight—with his plaintive plea for peace, and Shakers as a body, were officially relieved from all further troubles about enlistments and drafts.

Is the Question Still Pressed? How Shall We Abolish War?

Briefly stated: 1. Cease reading from and preaching the Old Testament teachings of an "eye for an eye," and from the pulpit cease extolling and praising Jehovah, that tutelary god of the Jews, often pronounced the "god of battles." He was no more the Infinite God of the

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. There is no risk or experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. Below we print extracts from testimonial as such as are received by us daily.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother, of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 73 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Rev. W. O. Goodwin, Moline, Kan., writes: "My honest opinion of Actina is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It cured my eyes, and cured my wife of asthma."

Hundreds of other testimonials can be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept 342B, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

Out of the Depths Into the Light.
By Samuel Bowles; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. This is a very interesting little book, and will be appreciated from start to finish by all who wish to gain spiritual information. Price, 25 cents.

DEATH ITS MEANING and Results.
By J K Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting narrative relating a series of wonderful psychic manifestations occurring in the writer's experience. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

The Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake } This fascinating Book by the well-known Author and Scholar, HON. A. B. RICHMOND,
Should be in the hands of every Spiritualist in the land. It is based on a historical fact, but through the narrative is woven a psychic line of thought in the style so natural to the great criminal lawyer that one can feel the author's very presence during its perusal. It is certainly interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

In the World Celestial
Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance medium, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness.

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

President Bowles of the National Liberal League, says: "It is one of the choicest pieces of literature of this marvelous age of books."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

PROGRESSION Or How a Spirit Advances in Spirit Life. The evolution of Man. By Michael Faraday. Price, 15c.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

Talleyrand's Letter to the Pope.
This work will be found especially interesting to all who would desire to make a study of Romanism and the Bible. The historic facts stated, and the keen, scathing review of Romish ideas and practices should be read by all. Price 25 cents.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Mrs. Kayner will soon go to Kansas to resume her work, also to Texas, and would like to make engagements en route. She was called to Indiana owing to the death of her mother, Mrs. E. V. Wilson. She can be addressed at 619 Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill., care of Mrs. Born.

E. W. Baldwin writes: "Of all the most interesting and profitable symposiums, the last is subject for deep growth of thought. The others each had two sides, which kept the interest up. This has two sides."

After a two months' engagement with the First Society of Spiritualists, J. C. F. Grumbine returns to his platform in Faelten Hall, 30 Huntington avenue, Boston, where he resumes work Sept. 10. His new address is Algonquin Road, Chestnut Hill Station, Boston, Mass. See adv. on last page.

W. D. Noyes writes from Minneapolis, Minn.: "After a pleasant sojourn at Wonewoc camp, and a long rest in nature's garden, we feel better able to again take up our spiritual work of healing and messages from our loved ones. We will conduct a public spiritualist service every Sunday evening at the A. O. U. W. Hall, 15 South Seventh street. We are located at 1222 Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis, Minn."

Mrs. Gartelman writes that a picnic will be held at Reissig's Grove, Riverside, on September 10, by the First German Spiritualist Society of the West Side. Admission, 25 cents.

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "The opening of the afternoon and evening services of the Rising Sun Mission on Sunday, Sept. 3, at Star Lodge Hall was very satisfactory as to attendance, etc. The hall had been newly carpeted and refurnished, and presented a very home-like appearance. Our president, in the afternoon spoke on immortality, and in his discourse presented some very valuable thoughts. Spirit messages were given by Sister Gifford, who just returned from Clinton camp, also by Brother Thompson. In the evening, Sister Fravel gave a very interesting talk, her subject being 'Home Again.' Her guides handled the subject with great consideration and predicted an outpouring of spiritual awakening for the winter months, which is a forerunner of what we may expect when we occupy our new temple. The singing of our choir drew the attention of those present. Tests were given by Sisters Weaver and Trafton Seven new members were enrolled on our membership book, with prospects of more. Services will be held every Sunday afternoon at 3 and evening at 8, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 South Western avenue. Our speaker for Sunday, Sept. 17, will be that veteran worker and Spiritualist, Dr. J. H. Randall. Our next social will be held Saturday evening, Sept. 16, at Brother Avery and Sister Sinn's home, 515 E. Fullerton avenue, near Halsted street. Come and bring your friends and have a good time."

Dr. J. H. Randall lectures October 10 and 24 for the Kenwood Church, Mrs. Grace Aitken, psychic and messenger-bearer. He lectures for the Rising Sun Mission, Star Lodge Hall, Oct. 17, and will make engagements for dates in the future, and may be addressed at 1058 Washington, Blvd., Chicago.

I. N. Richardson, a leading Spiritualist of Delphos, Kansas, writes: "I leave this day for the coast. I will visit Los Angeles, San Francisco, Alameda, and my esteemed friend, Ex-Senator R. A. Dague. From there I go to Portland, Oregon, to join my wife and son."

"Personally, out of the many contradictory theories, I take that to be most probable which holds the centralization of the nervous system to be a condition of consciousness; and that is wanting in the lower classes of animals. The presence of a central nervous organ, or highly developed sense-organs, and an elaborate association of groups of presentations, seem to me to be required before the unity of consciousness is possible."—Ernst Haeckel on Consciousness.

Mrs. DeWolf Kiser, a favorite in Chicago, is temporarily located at 851 W. Harrison street.

The Grand Rapids Spiritualist Society has purchased a lot for the erection of a temple, on which it has paid nearly $2,000 and meetings are held on the lot every Sunday. Virginie Barrett of South Bend, Ind., is serving the society during the month of August and large audiences attend the meetings and her work is highly appreciated. The Ladies' Aid of the society are putting all their efforts into work for the temple and are aiding the society in every possible way. The Ladies Aid takes the form of a literary club. With Mrs. John Hoskin as president the society is prospering and progressing in a financial and literary way as it never has before. Mrs. Barrett desires to make engagements with societies for fall and winter. Address her for the present at 333 West Colfax avenue, South Bend, Ind.

Henrietta Licatig, secretary, writes: "The picnic arranged by the Sunflower Club was held as announced, Monday, Sept. 4, on the beautiful grounds of the Minnetonka Club at Lake Bluff, Ill. Although the day was cloudy and threatening a goodly number of the faithful availed themselves of the opportunity to have an outing. Two cars were well filled, also the baskets which they brought along. Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, who as a hostess cannot be duplicated, made everybody feel at ease as soon as they arrived. After the inner man and women were filled with the goodies which were devoured in the open air under the sheltering branches of the trees, a meeting was called to order and Miss Elizabeth Harlow, of Columbus, Ohio, addressed us on the question of the hour, 'The Labor Problem.' It is impossible in a few words to refer as we would like, to this masterly oration, so logical, so convincing, and so grand in its discussion by this finished speaker. Everyone present pronounced it the best they ever listened to. Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley followed with a short but very interesting talk, after which several mediums gave messages, among them being Mrs. Dr. Caird of Lynn, Mass., who is to make Chicago her home. Supper was served, and after much handshaking all declared that they had had the best time of their lives, and taking the 6:50 train were homeward bound much improved mentally and physically for having enjoyed the hospitality of Mrs. Laura G. Fixen."

Mrs. Dr. Barker writes from San Jose, Cal.: "Rev. Allen Franklin Brown and wife and Mrs. Anna Sweeney left San Jose last Friday for San Francisco; from there took the steamer Sunday morning for San Diego, where they will attend the California State Spiritualist Convention, as delegates from the First Spiritualist Union of San Jose, the convention being held September 1, 2 and 3. Mrs. M. E. G. Howe of San Francisco, filled the rostrum of the First Spiritual Union, Sunday, Aug. 27, in the absence of Rev. Brown. Mrs. Howe gave many beautiful tests and readings from flowers in a very pleasing manner. The house was well filled and all were much pleased with Mrs. Howe; hope to have her with us again in the near future. Mrs. Nettie P. Fox will speak for us during the present month. Wednesday evenings of each week Mrs. H. L. Bigelow has parlor meetings at her home. A number of the members of the First Spiritual Union gave Brother and Sister Weber a surprise Monday evening. There was an impromptu program and games, which made the evening pass quickly and pleasantly. The ladies served dainties which they had prepared and it was a late hour when the happy gathering bade goodbye to Mr. and Mrs. Weber, leaving them alone to ponder over what had happened."

The Unity League dedicated its new hall lately at 201 North Williams street, Dayton, Ohio, in a splendid service, beginning at 2 p. m., and lasting till 10:30 at night. A grand feeling of unity and harmony prevailed throughout the entire day, and all who participated were enthusiastic in their realization that it was good to be there. There were no long addresses, nor tiresome essays, but short and crisp extemporaneous speeches by a large number of earnest men and women, making a real symposium of bright and helpful thought and sentiment. The opening number was a fine performance on the piano by Mrs. W. V. Nicum, "The Shepherd Boy," followed by a choice musical selection by Miss Churchhill, of Eaton. The Unity League was organized several months ago to provide a free public forum for the discussion of religious, scientific, social, philosophical and ethical matters and as an organization is unattached to any body of creeds or dogmas. Persons of all faith and attachment are invited to attend the meetings of the league, which are held on Sunday nights, present their views or participate in the informal discussion that ordinarily attends the presentation of a subject. The meetings are consequently very interesting and prolific of much genuine good.

Eva L. Stewart writes: "On last Sunday evening, September 3, the Hyde Park Occult Society had the pleasure of listening to a lecture by Dr. D. Stearns White. Mrs. Jennie Staner Adams, Mrs. Henrietta Lichtig and Mr. H. S. Fraser gave messages, all recognized. We were also entertained by a recitation by Miss Marguerite Sherman of St. Louis. She is only in her sixteenth year and is a remarkable elocutionist and would put to shame many of larger experience. Her recital held the audience spellbound and was loudly applauded. I forgot to mention Mrs. Kingsberry, who has just come to the front, and this being her third time upon the rostrum, she gave us a fine talk, and then read a poem which was well rendered. Sept. 12, we will give a benefit social for Brother H. S. Fraser, at which time we invite all mediums who would like to help him, to be present and kindly donate their services for his benefit that evening. He is a worthy young man, and we will be doing a good deed by our contributing to his welfare. Everyone should come. The admission will be 25 cents, and refreshments will be served free. On Sept. 10, Mrs. Eva Fravel of Austin, will speak for us. H. M. French will be with us on September 17."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Mrs. Lichtig, secretary, writes: "Mrs. J. R. Francis opens her home, 40 Loomis street, to the ladies of the Sunflower Club, on Wednesday evening, Sept. 13, for a dime social. Every minute will be taken up with something interesting. Come early and stay late. Bring the young folks and join in the fun. The Sunflower Club never does things by halves."

J. Iliff Mettler writes: "Messages scattered broadcast among the people, coming from the spirit world, like those from Mrs. Davis of Kewanee, must result beneficially to the people of earth; besides there is less chance and less motive for fraud, and such mediums should be salaried to enable them to continue this important work. It looks like a plan originating with the spirit world for the benefit of the victims of the false teachings of Christianity."

Mrs. Mary B. Hill writes from Columbus, Wis.: "As the Sunday evening meetings in my home, called the Moon Lodge, have continued through the summer months, and kept up the usual amount of interest, I thought I would take a breath of Wisconsin air after continued work for three and one-half years without missing one Sunday evening's work. I will be home for my work, Sept. 7, at 320 Flournoy street, Chicago."

Catharine McFarlin writes: "I wish to say that my present address is 329 South Fifth street, LaCrosse, Wis., instead of Plainview, Minn. I have been serving the LaCrosse Spiritualist Church for the past four months, which has proven to be a very pleasant season. Any speaker cannot but love the Spiritualists of this church as they bring with them such peace and good will, which is an inspiration to any worker. Their greatest drawback, like most other Spiritualist societies, is the financial struggle they are put to to hold continuous meetings. But they are true blue and must eventually win. There were many others attended the meetings who were not Spiritualists, who proved to be delightful friends. There is a democratic air about this beautiful little city of 35,000 inhabitants which is inviting and harmonizing, such a 'homefolks' feeling. I would like to engage with some society for the months of November and December, as I am free to do so now. Anyone wishing my line of work can communicate with me at the above address."

S. M. Richardson writes from Clear Lake, Iowa: "I see my subscription expired with the number received yesterday, and I hasten to renew, as I should be lost without The Progressive Thinker as the physical-spiritual chart and compass of my old age, now past 87 years. I think many times what a pessimist Bobby Burns was when in one of his poems he pens this stanza: 'I've seen yon weary winter's sun twice forty times return, and every time it's added proof that man was made to mourn.' In contrast with that I will say that I have seen you weary winter's sun more than twice forty times return and every time it has added proof (to me) that man was made to learn, and among all the sources of learning there is none that quite equals that obtained in the columns of The Progressive Thinker. Long may it continue in its good work."

Lottie Leavitt writes from Clinton, Iowa: "The Philosophical Society of Spiritualists of Clinton, Iowa, held its meetings in the K. of P. hall until about June 1, when by the courtesy of the M. V. S. A. they were held in the pavilion at the beautiful Mt. Pleasant Park on Sundays at 3 p. m., until July 24, which concluded the meetings of the local society until after the close of the camp-meeting. Mrs. Alice C. Barry, speaker and message bearer, has served us very faithfully and well for almost two years. She has done much to elevate the cause of Spiritualism in this community by her true life and earnest work for the uplifting of humanity. During her stay here she has made many friends both in and outside of the Spiritualist society, who are very enthusiastic in her praise. Mrs. Barry is a lady of charming personality and has few equals in presenting the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism. She was employed by the M. V. S. A. as a message bearer during the camp-meeting here and gave perfect satisfaction and won the unanimous praise of all who came in contact with her. On the last day of the camp session she was ordained as a minister of Spiritualism, W. F. Peck, president of the M. V. S. A., officiating."

Amos Packer, in answer to the exposure of the trumpet medium, Mr. Finney, says: "I was present at one of Mr. Finney's seances when a light was struck, and I plainly saw the trumpet as it lay poised in air horizontally within a foot of the ceiling. I saw it turn end down and descend to the floor. As I sat where Mr. Finney and the trumpet were both in front of me, I saw him at one and the same time, seated with a lady holding both his hands. Now if the exposer can furnish any light on how such things are done without spirit power, I will be more than pleased to hear from him. I uphold no frauds, but when such honorable and true mediums as A. A. Finney are to be exposed it will require some thing more than guess work."

Mrs. Sylvia E. Carey writes: "The audience at the Kenwood Spiritual Church spent a very uplifting Sunday evening, August 27, and in the afternoon meeting we had with us Dr. Cross and wife. The Doctor gave some beautiful thoughts on Spiritualism. Our speaker for the evening was Dr. J. MacFarland, who gave us an inspirational biblical lecture. He received the close attention of his audience. He surely is a grand, good man, and we hope to have him with us again in the near future. The ladies of the church will give a harvest dance and sociable on the evening of Sept. 29, at Kenwood Hall. Everybody knows what a grand, good time they had at our last dance. We will make it pleasant, and insure you a good time if you come, and join in the merry-making. We hold services every Sunday afternoon at 3 and evening at 8 o'clock, at our hall, 4308-10 Cottage Grove avenue. Mrs. Grace Aitken, our medium, gives messages at each meeting, assisted by Mr. J. S. Von Broecklin and others. Come and learn the truth. All welcome. Good music. Skeptics invited."

P. Pearson writes from Ponca City, Okla.: "In my article on 'Musical Vibrations' in paper of Sept. 9, occurs some typographical errors that I wish corrected so my classification can be rightly understood. In the second paragraph, seventh line occur the figures 32,331; it should read 32.331, the last three figures being decimals. In the 14th line, same paragraph, 4,138,440 should read 4,138.440, the last three figures being decimals. In the fourth line, third paragraph, 440, the last three figures should be decimals; also in the 14th line in fourth paragraph 652, the last three figures should be decimals. Above low C on the electric field decimals are dropped."

Mrs. Laura B. Payne, president of the Texas State Spiritualist Association, writes from Winfield, Kans.: "I am on my way home to Fort Worth, Texas, after quite an extended tour through through Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Missouri, Nebraska and Iowa. I will fill some ten or twelve engagements between here and Fort Worth, Texas, arriving there in time for our state convention which will be the last of September. I have many good things to say concerning our cause. Any mail addressed to 811 Taylor street, Fort Worth, Texas, will reach me."

Mrs. Squire writes: "We have been refitting Hope Hall, making it more commodious. Our church doors are now open to our friends and the public. Come into Macedonia and help us to spread the gospel of truth. Services Sunday evening, 7:30, at 220 Western avenue, near Van Buren. A little later we will have afternoon service."

Mrs. Hamilton Gill has now returned to her home, 522 W. Monroe street, Chicago. She holds circles every Sunday and Thursday evening at 8 o'clock; also a special circle for ladies every Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Private readings daily except Saturday. Mrs. Gill visited Grand Ledge, Haslett Park and Island Lake, Mich., camp-meetings and had a delightful time.

A circle will be held at the residence of Mrs. Squires, No. 220 Western avenue, on Wednesday evening, Sept. 13. Tests by Mrs. Dr. Caird, of Lynn, Mass.

Mrs. Gates writes from Winfield, Kans.: "Laura B. Payne, state president of Texas Spiritualist Association, has been with us and delivered three lectures, which were fine. Each one was handled beautifully and understandingly. If we had known of these things long ago we would as a people been far ahead of where we are to-day. She left here Tuesday morning for Tulsee, Indian Territory, to fill an engagement. We are all anxiously waiting for a time when we may have her in our midst again. We, like many orthodox, are waiting for the second coming of the Christ; but we consider each mortal being a Christ within himself."

D. G. Hill writes: "The opening services of the fall and winter sessions of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, on Sunday, Sept. 3, were satisfactory. A large audience was present to enjoy the talks given by the different workers present. The afternoon service consisted of a lecture by our sister, Mrs. Alice Sexsmith, with short talks by several in the audience; in the evening a lecture by Mrs. Nora E. Hill, and messages by the mediums present. Meetings each Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street, between Washington and Park avenue. All cordially invited. Remember the open door. Our speaker for Sunday evening, Sept. 17, will be the Hon. Ex-Judge W. L. Snell."

C. A. Sollinger writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "After struggling for more than sixteen years, the Spiritualists of Cleveland, through the untiring efforts of the present officers and members of the Ladies' Spiritual Temple Fund Society, are going to have a home for themselves. They have bought the former Trinity Baptist church located on Fullerton street, between Broadway and Marceline avenue. It has been renovated from cellar to steeple, and will be open to the public, and dedicated to the teaching and preaching of the philosophy and phenomena of Modern Spiritualism, to the upliftment of mankind and seekers of truth. Brother Dell A. Herrick has accepted to assist on that occasion, free of charge, with other speakers yet to hear from. Prof. L. Quedenfeld and his three sons will furnish the musical program. The undersigned will give German address. Bro. C. W. Haines, second vice-president of the Ohio State Association, will preside as chairman. The program is not arranged yet, but the ladies invite all Spiritualists as well as others who seek the truth, whether living in Cleveland or elsewhere to participate with them, and assist in the dedication of this temple, making Sunday, October 1, a memorable never-to-be-forgotten day in the history of Spiritualism in Cleveland. Doors will be open free to all."

H. Smith writes: "The opening services at Van Buren Opera House of the Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature, Sunday evening, Sept. 3, were well attended. The hall was beautifully decorated with sunflowers, etc. Mrs. M. Schumacher, the pastor, welcomed the appreciative audience. A beautiful floral basket of red and white roses was presented to her as a token of esteem, in returning to serve the society after three months of vacation. Sister N. Kusserow, in handing the basket of flowers to the pastor, said, 'Hail, sister, hail; home again for the good.' Her remarks of appreciation brought sunshine to each one present. Her spiritual messages were convincing. A series of spiritual lectures will be given on Soul Development, by the pastor. Dr. L. C. Koehler, ex-minister, will assist. Services held each Sunday evening at Madison street and California avenue, 7:30. All are cordially invited."

Mrs. Maggie Henry writes: "On Sunday evening at Spiritual Mission Chapel (Old 77) we had a very intellectual audience. Our speaker, F. M. Stoller, read for the scripture lesson a portion of the 12th chapter of I. Corinthians. After a short scientific explanation of the different phases of mediumship his guides answered the scientific and philosophical questions asked by the audience, many of them being very interesting. They also answer personal questions, followed by spirit messages and psychometric readings, either by Mr. Stoller or some other medium."

Mr. A. Merkel, vice-president, writes: "An elaborate anniversary and party was given in honor of the Mrs. M. Schumacher, pastor of the Spiritual Church Students of Nature, at her home, Sept. 2. Among the many gifts was a handsome hand-painted china set, presented by our pianist."

Mrs. Anna Duncan writes: "We are here in Tampa, Fla., a small band struggling for recognition against adverse conditions. We hold our meetings in a small hall where discourses are given by our president, J. F. Ireland, who is a close student of the philosophy, and we enjoy his recitals very much. He is ably assisted by our vice-president, Mrs. J. J. Ender. Your correspondent is musical director, and at present secretary. I am also engaged as pianist and organist at Lake Helen camp for the coming season. We are trying to negotiate with J. Madison Allen to come here. That estimable lady, Carrie Firth Curran, sowed some good seed here, which will bear fruit. The Progressive Thinker is certainly doing a grand work. The Psychical Research Society meets every Sunday evening in I. O. O. F. hall at 8 o'clock. All interested are invinted. J. F. Ireland, president; Mrs. Anna Duncan, secretary."

Miss Elizabeth Harlow has been illuminating Chicago and vicinity with her lectures, lecturing here, at Genoa, and at the Sunflower picnic. She has been engaged for another year at Columbus, Ohio.

Ida May Cook of Spring Hill, Kansas, resigns her office in the Spiritualist League, organized at Topeka, Kansas. She says it "denounces all phases of physical mediumship." We are told it only denounces the fraudulent part of the phenomena, and is ardently in favor of the genuine.

Beason Gray writes from Jackson, Michigan: "I am pleased to announce through the columns of your valuable paper, that at present the Spiritualists of Jackson, Mich., are enjoying a genuine revival. On Sunday, Sept. 3, Oscar A. Edgerly began a month's engagement with our society. From reports of his work elsewhere we had been led to expect much, but we can truly say, that our expectations have been far exceeded by our realizations. On Sunday, Sept. 3, his guides delivered two discourses of wonderful eloquence and power, enthusing our audience to the highest pitch of appreciation. On Friday night Mr. Edgerly gave a test seance for the benefit of the society, and while he declares he does not pose as a test medium, still we must acknowledge that we have never had a better exhibition of test mediumship from our rostrum, tests that have the true ring of genuineness from start to finish. We feel justified in saying that we anticipate a spiritual feast during the remainder of the month, and we shall try to engage Mr. Edgerly for a longer period as soon as he has the time available."

Oscar A. Edgerly's address during September is No. 811 South Jackson street, Jackson, Michigan.

FROM N. S. A. HEADQUARTERS.

Matters of Interest and Importance.

To the Editor:—It gives me pleasure to extend the cordial greetings of the N. S. A. to yourself and all connected with your valuable journal, our sincere thanks for all the help and encouragement you have ever given to our organization.

It is also with pleasure that we report to you and to the readers of your columns that the N. S. A. has never been so prosperous or able to do as much good as in the present year, as the annual report of its secretary to the next convention will show.

In regard to the thirteenth annual convention of the N. S. A., which will be held at the First Unitarian Church of Minneapolis, Minn., Eighth street and Mary Place, Oct. 17-20, inclusive, we are glad to say that promises of the best of convocations are held out to us, and we believe that Minnesota will surpass herself in the efforts made to give Spiritualism the grandest boom it has ever had in that section. Our list of speakers and mediums for the evening entertainments, which are to be free to the public, bears the names of many of our foremost workers; among those expected are: Rev. Dr. Austin, Will J. Erwood, Prof. W. F. Peck, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, Oscar Edgerly, Mesdames Lillie, Fixen, McCoy, Gaule-Ridinger, Ressegue and others.

The musical program under the direction of Mr. Paul Zumback, will be a splendid addition to the evening work.

The Lyceum movement will be ably represented by the National Lyceum Superintendent, John W. Ring, who has much of interest and importance to report, and who has done a grand work for the children's lyceum in his official capacity.

The headquarters of the N. S. A. during convention will be the Nicollet Hotel, Minneapolis; all delegates and visitors wishing rooms at that hostelry during convention, can secure the same at reduced rates by writing to the proprietors, asking for terms given the National Spiritualists Association during convention dates.

Special railroad tickets will be issued on the certificate plan at one fare and a third for round trip; all wishing the same should ask for certificate tickets of National Spiritualists Association convention to Minneapolis. Their ticket agents will give information. Full fare is to be paid going; one-third on return trip. Each certificate must be signed by N. S. A. secretary, also endorsed by special railroad agent at convention the last day, Oct. 20, and 25 cents paid to the secretary for endorsing of the agent, this being the rules of the railroad companies.

The annual reception given to visitors and delegates will be held at the Unitarian church, Monday evening, October 16. All are welcome.

We desire to extend the grateful appreciation of the N. S. A. to the managers of all camps that granted an N. S. A. day during the last camp season; first and last these camps have been valuable aids to the National Association in its good work. The N. S. A. secretary had the privilege of representing this association the present summer at Onset, Mass., on N. S. A. day, and cannot adequately express her appreciation of the attention given to her plea for aid. Dr. Geo A. Fuller, chairman of the camp and president of the Massachusetts State Association, presided and made an eloquent speech in behalf of the grand work of the National Association and for organization among Spiritualists, pledging Massachusetts State Association anew to our cause and to the N. S. A. Mr. J. B. Hatch also spoke earnestly and forcibly of the N. S. A. and its objects, while many other prominent workers echoed these sentiments. The result of this meeting netted one hundred and three dollars to the N. S. A., many bills being quietly placed in the collection baskets, while a number of friends gave their subscriptions to swell the sum before the meeting closed. Among the many whose generosity and efforts went to make the Onset day a successful one for the N. S. A., Mr. and Mrs. Butterfield and Mrs. M. C. Weston may be mentioned, while the indefatigable Mrs. C. L. Hatch must be remembered for her cheerful assistance.

To one and all, greetings of love.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.

German Meetings at Lily Dale.

Now that the season is over, the work done and all going to their respective homes again, we would say a few words in regard to the German meetings held at Lily Dale.

These meetings have been successful and we look forward to a very good time and greater success next season. We thank the management of the City of Light Assembly for their kindness shown to us, and we thank all the friends for their kind thoughts and appreciative words, and all the German friends for their attendance, as also those who have assisted in the musical fund, which will enable us to start in next year with a good musical program. These meetings were conducted by Mrs. Elsie Stumpf, assisted by others. Her work was good, the lectures interesting and instructive and her spirit messages brought comfort and joy to the hearts of those that received them. Mr. Gustav Thiese, as chairman, did his best, so did Prof. Arthur Uvedale as musical director.

Now, dear friends, one and all join in making this work a greater success next season, by letting your friends know about these meetings at Lily Dale. Mrs. Stumpf is open for engagements in English or German. Mr. Gustav Thiese, Akron, Ohio, chairman; Mrs. Elsie Stumpf, Brooklyn, N. Y., medium and treasurer; Mr. Henry J. Hoffman, Toledo, Ohio, secretary. COR.

Harmony Grove Camp, Cal.

The camp-meeting just closed at Harmony Grove, Escondido, Cal., was one of unusual interest, material profit and spiritual development. The association has at last succeeded in becoming the owner of all the buildings, camp equipments and permanent improvements, so that its further financial standing and success are assured. The attendance was large, the several lectures, circles, literary entertainments ets., were well attended and productive of great good.

Among the speakers and message bearers who served us faithfully and acceptably, Mesdames Ella W. Marchant and Lily M. Thiebaud of San Bernardino, Mary C. Vlasek of Los Angeles, Millie Horder and Judge Sidney Thomas of San Diego, are worthy of special mention, and the association takes pleasure in expressing its grateful appreciation to each and all of them.

The morning services on Sunday, August 13, were set apart exclusively to the memory of our sister, Mrs. Etta Foster, one of the oldest members and most faithful workers in the association, and who was dearly beloved and will be sadly missed by all. The enclosed tribute to her memory was adopted by the association and formed the center around which clustered all the utterances of the different speakers.

J. L. DRYDEN.

In Memoriam.

Since our last annual encampment a shadow from the death angel's wing has fallen across the pathway of our association and has left traces of sorrow and tears upon the cheeks of some of our members.

On the night of November 9, 1904, the white angel messenger called Death, entered the home of our brother, Ezra Foster, and in response to the joyful summons, "Come up higher," two angels, instead of the one that had entered, passed out of that happy home into the solemn stillness of the life beyond.

Mrs. Etta Foster, the beloved wife, mother, sister and friend, at the end of an earth pilgrimage of sixty-nine years crowned with an unselfish and useful life-work, heard the welcome summons and quietly passed to the higher expression of life.

Sister Foster was the youngest daughter of Capt. Bailey Potter, who served his country with distinction in the war of 1812, and beneath whose humble roof at West Gardner in the far-off state of Maine, our sister first beheld the material light.

As members of the Harmony Grove Camp-meeting Association, of which she was an honored, faithful and beloved member from its organization, we hereby publicly express our deep sorrow and regret because of her physical absence, and also express our high appreciation of the many good qualities, and the beautiful character which she possessed. And we gladly bear tribute to the noble, unselfish life, the high spiritual endowments, and the sweet, elevating influences which her life constantly shed abroad as a benediction upon all with whom she mingled.

We hereby express our sympathy with the bereaved husband, children, grand children and friends who have been deprived of the loving care, companionship and kindly ministrations of the loved one; and while we cannot but deplore our own and their material loss, we rejoice because of her great spiritual gain.

Although hidden from our mortal eyes, and although we shall miss her dear motherly presence in the form in our assemblies and circles, and shall listen in vain for her spoken words, we know that it is only a thin veil that intervenes, and her interest in our efforts to advance the cause of truth which she loved so dearly, will be as deep as while she was present with us in the form.

"Think not about the grave; how should it hold
That essence pure, eternal and divine?
Lift not your gaze beyond the stars that shine
Far in the cloudless blue, serenely cold.
Nay, listen; you shall hear
The old glad words of greeting. You shall hold
The hands death's pressure left so icy cold,
And know that she is near—not far, but near,
Closer than earth can hold its loved is she."

The Northern Michigan Meeting.

Sunday, August 20, marked the closing of the sixth annual meeting of Spiritualists of Northern Michigan. It was an ideal day, as the three preceding ones had been since camp opened.

Mrs. Cora Morrill closed our camp work for 1905, with two grand discourses. They were most fitting, for all in sound of her voice to ponder on, to act upon, until we should meet again, knowing full well, if strictly adhered to for that time, they would be for all time, for words spoken, lessons learned, could only result in the bettering of every life. And we can only hope, that when we convene again we will have all profited by the teachings set forth. To the mind of the writer it was the most successful in the history of the camp, both spiritually and financially; not that the audiences were any larger, but more came into the fold acknowledging the truth of our philosophy, by receiving verifications which filled their whole being with satisfaction by the phenomena.

August 13, in the bright sunshine the cottage of the secretary, the first private cottage to be erected on the grounds, was dedicated by Mrs. Morrill, in beautiful words of "Home," and then named "Pine Crest Cottage," by the son Carl, who departed earth life, Oct. 18, 1887.

A. A. Finney, that grand trumpet medium, through his guides did much to clinch the philosophy of Spiritualism by the phenomena, making us all very grateful for his having come into our midst.

The memory of this camp will be a bright spot for our minds to dwell upon the coming year.

FINE BRAIN VIBRATIONS.

So Attuned That the Higher Order of Spirits Can Act Upon Them—Babe Amazes Doctors by Knowledge of Anatomy—Five-Year-Old Lad Holds Floor at Medical Meeting.

Glibly prattling of the petella and medulla oblongata, little 5-year-old Mark Delafield Mallory, of Santa Rosa, Cal., held the floor at a recent meeting of the Sonoma County Medical Society for more than an hour and kept the questioning physicians who gathered around him, gasping with wonder. Wee Mark is not a member of the society, although his father, Dr. G. W. Mallory, is, and the lad was not reading a thesis or advancing a theory. But from the way he discussed the muscular system of man, from the occipitalic to the tendon achillis or made off-hand mention of the floating ribs, the costal cartilage, the clavicle or the fibula, he might easily have been a second year medical student at least. HIMALYA
(THE KOLA COMPOUND)

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific proving that

HAY-FEVER
—AND—
ASTHMA can be CURED.

Mr. W. H. Kelley, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma by Himalya, after 16 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Wordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. B. L. Gleason, 126 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Bainbridge, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 16th, 1906, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write today to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York.

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

Mrs. Kayner will soon go to Kansas to resume her work, also to Texas, and would like to make engagements en route. She was called to Indiana owing to the death of her mother, Mrs. E. V. Wilson. She can be addressed at 619 Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill., care of Mrs. Born.

E. W. Baldwin writes: "Of all the most interesting and profitable symposiums, the last is subject for deep growth of thought. The others each had two sides, which kept the interest up. This has two sides."

After a two months' engagement with the First Society of Spiritualists, J. C. F. Grumbine returns to his platform in Faelten Hall, 30 Huntington avenue, Boston, where he resumes work Sept. 10. His new address is Algonquin Road, Chestnut Hill Station, Boston, Mass. See adv. on last page.

W. D. Noyes writes from Minneapolis, Minn.: "After a pleasant sojourn at Wonewoc camp, and a long rest in nature's garden, we feel better able to again take up our spiritual work of healing and messages from our loved ones. We will conduct a public spiritualist service every Sunday evening at the A. O. U. W. Hall, 15 South Seventh street. We are located at 1222 Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis, Minn."

Mrs. Gartelman writes that a picnic will be held at Reissig's Grove, Riverside, on September 10, by the First German Spiritualist Society of the West Side. Admission, 25 cents.

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "The opening of the afternoon and evening services of the Rising Sun Mission on Sunday, Sept. 3, at Star Lodge Hall was very satisfactory as to attendance, etc. The hall had been newly carpeted and refurnished, and presented a very home-like appearance. Our president, in the afternoon spoke on immortality, and in his discourse presented some very valuable thoughts. Spirit messages were given by Sister Gifford, who just returned from Clinton camp, also by Brother Thompson. In the evening, Sister Fravel gave a very interesting talk, her subject being 'Home Again.' Her guides handled the subject with great consideration and predicted an outpouring of spiritual awakening for the winter months, which is a forerunner of what we may expect when we occupy our new temple. The singing of our choir drew the attention of those present. Tests were given by Sisters Weaver and Trafton Seven new members were enrolled on our membership book, with prospects of more. Services will be held every Sunday afternoon at 3 and evening at 8, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 South Western avenue. Our speaker for Sunday, Sept. 17, will be that veteran worker and Spiritualist, Dr. J. H. Randall. Our next social will be held Saturday evening, Sept. 16, at Brother Avery and Sister Sinn's home, 515 E. Fullerton avenue, near Halsted street. Come and bring your friends and have a good time."

Dr. J. H. Randall lectures October 10 and 24 for the Kenwood Church, Mrs. Grace Aitken, psychic and message-bearer. He lectures for the Rising Sun Mission, Star Lodge Hall, Oct. 17, and will make engagements for dates in the future, and may be addressed at 1058 Washington, Blvd., Chicago.

I. N. Richardson, a leading Spiritualist of Delphos, Kansas, writes: "I leave this day for the coast. I will visit Los Angeles, San Francisco, Alameda, and my esteemed friend, Ex-Senator R. A. Dague. From there I go to Portland, Oregon, to join my wife and son."

"Personally, out of the many contradictory theories, I take that to be most probable which holds the centralization of the nervous system to be a condition of consciousness; and that is wanting in the lower classes of animals. The presence of a central nervous organ, of highly developed sense-organs, and an elaborate association of groups of presentations, seem to me to be required before the unity of consciousness is possible."—Ernst Haeckel on Consciousness.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Mrs. DeWolf Kiser, a favorite in Chicago, is temporarily located at 851 W. Harrison street.

The Grand Rapids Spiritualist Society has purchased a lot for the erection of a temple, on which it has paid nearly $2,000 and meetings are held on the lot every Sunday. Virginie Barrett of South Bend, Ind., is serving the society during the month of August and large audiences attend the meetings and her work is highly appreciated. The Ladies' Aid of the society are putting all their efforts into work for the temple and are aiding the society in every possible way. The Ladies Aid takes the form of a literary club. With Mrs. John Hoskin as president the society is prospering and progressing in a financial and literary way as it never has before. Mrs. Barrett desires to make engagements with societies for fall and winter. Address her for the present at 333 West Colfax avenue, South Bend, Ind.

Henrietta Licatig, secretary, writes: "The picnic arranged by the Sunflower Club was held as announced, Monday, Sept. 4, on the beautiful grounds of the Minnetonka Club at Lake Bluff, Ill. Although the day was cloudy and threatening a goodly number of the faithful availed themselves of the opportunity to have an outing. Two cars were well filled, also the baskets which they brought along. Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, who as a hostess cannot be duplicated, made everybody feel at ease as soon as they arrived. After the inner man and women were filled with the goodies which were devoured in the open air under the sheltering branches of the trees, a meeting was called to order and Miss Elizabeth Harlow, of Columbus, Ohio, addressed us on the question of the hour, 'The Labor Problem.' It is impossible in a few words to refer as we would like, to this masterly oration, so logical, so convincing, and so grand in its discussion by this finished speaker. Everyone present pronounced it the best they ever listened to. Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley followed with a short but very interesting talk, after which several mediums gave messages, among them being Mrs. Dr. Caird of Lynn, Mass., who is to make Chicago her home. Supper was served, and after much handshaking all declared that they had had the best time of their lives, and taking the 6:50 train were homeward bound much improved mentally and physically for having enjoyed the hospitality of Mrs. Laura G. Fixen."

Mrs. Dr. Barker writes from San Jose, Cal.: "Rev. Allen Franklin Brown and wife and Mrs. Anna Sweeney left San Jose last Friday for San Francisco; from there took the steamer Sunday morning for San Diego, where they will attend the California State Spiritualist Convention, as delegates from the First Spiritualist Union of San Jose, the convention being held September 1, 2 and 3. Mrs. M. E. G. Howe of San Francisco, filled the rostrum of the First Spiritual Union, Sunday, Aug. 27, in the absence of Rev. Brown. Mrs. Howe gave many beautiful tests and readings from flowers in a very pleasing manner. The house was well filled and all were much pleased with Mrs. Howe; hope to have her with us again in the near future. Mrs. Nettie P. Fox will speak for us during the present month. Wednesday evenings of each week Mrs. H. L. Bigelow has parlor meetings at her home. A number of the members of the First Spiritual Union gave Brother and Sister Weber a surprise Monday evening. There was an impromptu program and games, which made the evening pass quickly and pleasantly. The ladies served dainties which they had prepared and it was a late hour when the happy gathering bade goodbye to Mr. and Mrs. Weber, leaving them alone to ponder over what had happened."

The Unity League dedicated its new hall lately at 201 North Williams street, Dayton, Ohio, in a splendid service, beginning at 2 p. m., and lasting till 10:30 at night. A grand feeling of unity and harmony prevailed throughout the entire day, and all who participated were enthusiastic in their realization that it was good to be there. There were no long addresses, nor tiresome essays, but short and crisp extemporaneous speeches by a large number of earnest men and women, making a real symposium of bright and helpful thought and sentiment. The opening number was a fine performance on the piano by Mrs. W. V. Nicum, "The Shepherd Boy," followed by a choice musical selection by Miss Churchhill, of Eaton. The Unity League was organized several months ago to provide a free public forum for the discussion of religious, scientific, social, philosophical and ethical matters and as an organization is unattached to any body of creeds or dogmas. Persons of all faith and attachment are invited to attend the meetings of the league, which are held on Sunday nights, present their views or participate in the informal discussion that ordinarily attends the presentation of a subject. The meetings are consequently very interesting and prolific of much genuine good.

Eva L. Stewart writes: "On last Sunday evening, September 3, the Hyde Park Occult Society had the pleasure of listening to a lecture by Dr. D. Stearns White. Mrs. Jennie Staner Adams, Mrs. Henrietta Lichtig and Mr. H. S. Fraser gave messages, all recognized. We were also entertained by a recitation by Miss Marguerite Sherman of St. Louis. She is only in her sixteenth year and is a remarkable elocutionist and would put to shame many of larger experience. Her recital held the audience spellbound and was loudly applauded. I forgot to mention Mrs. Kingsberry, who has just come to the front, and this being her third time upon the rostrum, she gave us a fine talk, and then read a poem which was well rendered. Sept. 12, we will give a benefit social for Brother H. S. Fraser, at which time we invite all mediums who would like to help him, to be present and kindly donate their services for his benefit that evening. He is a worthy young man, and we will be doing a good deed by our contributing to his welfare. Everyone should come. The admission will be 25 cents, and refreshments will be served free. On Sept. 10, Mrs. Eva Fravel of Austin, will speak for us. H. M. French will be with us on September 17."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Mrs. Lichtig, secretary, writes: "Mrs. J. R. Francis opens her home, 40 Loomis street, to the ladies of the Sunflower Club, on Wednesday evening, Sept. 13, for a dime social. Every minute will be taken up with something interesting. Come early and stay late. Bring the young folks and join in the fun. The Sunflower Club never does things by halves."

J. Iliff Mettler writes: "Messages scattered broadcast among the people, coming from the spirit world, like those from Mrs. Davis of Kewanee, must result beneficially to the people of earth; besides there is less chance and less motive for fraud, and such mediums should be salaried to enable them to continue this important work. It looks like a plan originating with the spirit world for the benefit of the victims of the false teachings of Christianity."

Mrs. Mary B. Hill writes from Columbus, Wis.: "As the Sunday evening meetings in my home, called the Moon Lodge, have continued through the summer months, and kept up the usual amount of interest, I thought I would take a breath of Wisconsin air after continued work for three and one-half years without missing one Sunday evening's work. I will be home for my work, Sept. 7, at 320 Flournoy street, Chicago."

Catharine McFarlin writes: "I wish to say that my present address is 329 South Fifth street, LaCrosse, Wis., instead of Plainview, Minn. I have been serving the LaCrosse Spiritualist Church for the past four months, which has proven to be a very pleasant season. Any speaker cannot but love the Spiritualists of this church as they bring with them such peace and good will, which is an inspiration to any worker. Their greatest drawback, like most other Spiritualist societies, is the financial struggle they are put to to hold continuous meetings. But they are true blue and must eventually win. There were many others attended the meetings who were not Spiritualists, who proved to be delightful friends. There is a democratic air about this beautiful little city of 35,000 inhabitants which is inviting and harmonizing, such a 'homefolks' feeling. I would like to engage with some society for the months of November and December, as I am free to do so now. Anyone wishing my line of work can communicate with me at the above address."

S. M. Richardson writes from Clear Lake, Iowa: "I see my subscription expired with the number received yesterday, and I hasten to renew, as I should be lost without The Progressive Thinker as the physical-spiritual chart and compass of my old age, now past 87 years. I think many times what a pessimist Bobby Burns was when in one of his poems he pens this stanza: 'I've seen yon weary winter's sun twice forty times return, and every time it's added proof that man was made to mourn.' In contrast with that I will say that I have seen you weary winter's sun more than twice forty times return and every time it has added proof (to me) that man was made to learn, and among all the sources of learning there is none that quite equals that obtained in the columns of The Progressive Thinker. Long may it continue in its good work."

Lottie Leavitt writes from Clinton, Iowa: "The Philosophical Society of Spiritualists of Clinton, Iowa, held its meetings in the K. of P. hall until about June 1, when by the courtesy of the M. V. S. A. they were held in the pavilion at the beautiful Mt. Pleasant Park on Sundays at 3 p. m., until July 24, which concluded the meetings of the local society until after the close of the camp-meeting. Mrs. Alice C. Barry, speaker and message bearer, has served us very faithfully and well for almost two years. She has done much to elevate the cause of Spiritualism in this community by her true life and earnest work for the uplifting of humanity. During her stay here she has made many friends both in and outside of the Spiritualist society, who are very enthusiastic in her praise. Mrs. Barry is a lady of charming personality and has few equals in presenting the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism. She was employed by the M. V. S. A. as a message bearer during the camp-meeting here and gave perfect satisfaction and won the unanimous praise of all who came in contact with her. On the last day of the camp session she was ordained as a minister of Spiritualism, W. F. Peck, president of the M. V. S. A., officiating."

Amos Packer, in answer to the exposure of the trumpet medium, Mr. Finney, says: "I was present at one of Mr. Finney's seances when a light was struck, and I plainly saw the trumpet as it lay poised in air horizontally within a foot of the ceiling. I saw it turn end down and descend to the floor. As I sat where Mr. Finney and the trumpet were both in front of me, I saw him at one and the same time, seated with a lady holding both his hands. Now if the exposer can furnish any light on how such things are done without spirit power, I will be more than pleased to hear from him. I uphold no frauds, but when such honorable and true mediums as A. A. Finney are to be exposed it will require some thing more than guess work."

Mrs. Sylvia E. Carey writes: "The audience at the Kenwood Spiritual Church spent a very uplifting Sunday evening, August 27, and in the afternoon meeting we had with us Dr. Cross and wife. The Doctor gave some beautiful thoughts on Spiritualism. Our speaker for the evening was Dr. J. MacFarland, who gave us an inspirational biblical lecture. He received the close attention of his audience. He surely is a grand, good man, and we hope to have him with us again in the near future. The ladies of the church will give a harvest dance and sociable on the evening of Sept. 29, at Kenwood Hall. Everybody knows what a grand, good time they had at our last dance. We will make it pleasant, and insure you a good time if you come, and join in the merry-making. We hold services every Sunday afternoon at 3 and evening at 8 o'clock, at our hall, 4308-10 Cottage Grove avenue. Mrs. Grace Aitken, our medium, gives messages at each meeting, assisted by Mr. J. S. Von Broecklin and others. Come and learn the truth. All welcome. Good music. Skeptics invited."

P. Pearson writes from Ponca City, Okla.: "In my article on 'Musical Vibrations' in paper of Sept. 9, occurs some typographical errors that I wish corrected so my classification can be rightly understood. In the second paragraph, seventh line occur the figures 32,331; it should read 32.331, the last three figures being decimals. In the 14th line, same paragraph, 4,138,440 should read 4,138.440, the last three figures being decimals. In the fourth line, third paragraph, 440, the last three figures should be decimals; also in the 14th line in fourth paragraph 652, the last three figures should be decimals. Above low C on the electric field decimals are dropped."

Mrs. Laura B. Payne, president of the Texas State Spiritualist Association, writes from Winfield, Kans.: "I am on my way home to Fort Worth, Texas, after quite an extended tour through through Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Missouri, Nebraska and Iowa. I will fill some ten or twelve engagements between here and Fort Worth, Texas, arriving there in time for our state convention which will be the last of September. I have many good things to say concerning our cause. Any mail addressed to 811 Taylor street, Fort Worth, Texas, will reach me."

Mrs. Squire writes: "We have been refitting Hope Hall, making it more commodious. Our church doors are now open to our friends and the public. Come into Macedonia and help us to spread the gospel of truth. Services Sunday evening, 7:30, at 220 Western avenue, near Van Buren. A little later we will have afternoon service."

Mrs. Hamilton Gill has now returned to her home, 522 W. Monroe street, Chicago. She holds circles every Sunday and Thursday evening at 8 o'clock; also a special circle for ladies every Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Private readings daily except Saturday. Mrs. Gill visited Grand Ledge, Haslett Park and Island Lake, Mich., camp-meetings and had a delightful time.

A circle will be held at the residence of Mrs. Squires, No. 220 Western avenue, on Wednesday evening, Sept. 13. Tests by Mrs. Dr. Caird, of Lynn, Mass.

Mrs. Gates writes from Winfield, Kans.: "Laura B. Payne, state president of Texas Spiritualist Association, has been with us and delivered three lectures, which were fine. Each one was handled beautifully and understandingly. If we had known of these things long ago we would as a people been far ahead of where we are to-day. She left here Tuesday morning for Tulsee, Indian Territory, to fill an engagement. We are all anxiously waiting for a time when we may have her in our midst again. We, like many orthodox, are waiting for the second coming of the Christ; but we consider each mortal being a Christ within himself."

D. G. Hill writes: "The opening services of the fall and winter sessions of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, on Sunday, Sept. 3, were satisfactory. A large audience was present to enjoy the talks given by the different workers present. The afternoon service consisted of a lecture by our sister, Mrs. Alice Sexsmith, with short talks by several in the audience; in the evening a lecture by Mrs. Nora E. Hill, and messages by the mediums present. Meetings each Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street, between Washington and Park avenue. All cordially invited. Remember the open door. Our speaker for Sunday evening, Sept. 17, will be the Hon. Ex-Judge W. L. Snell."

C. A. Sollinger writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "After struggling for more than sixteen years, the Spiritualists of Cleveland, through the untiring efforts of the present officers and members of the Ladies' Spiritual Temple Fund Society, are going to have a home for themselves. They have bought the former Trinity Baptist church located on Fullerton street, between Broadway and Marceline avenue. It has been renovated from cellar to steeple, and will be open to the public, and dedicated to the teaching and preaching of the philosophy and phenomena of Modern Spiritualism, to the upliftment of mankind and seekers of truth. Brother Dell A. Herrick has accepted to assist on that occasion, free of charge, with other speakers yet to hear from. Prof. L. Quedenfeld and his three sons will furnish the musical program. The undersigned will give German address. Bro. C. W. Haines, second vice-president of the Ohio State Association, will preside as chairman. The program is not arranged yet, but the ladies invite all Spiritualists as well as others who seek the truth, whether living in Cleveland or elsewhere to participate with them, and assist in the dedication of this temple, making Sunday; October 1, a memorable never-to-be-forgotten day in the history of Spiritualism in Cleveland. Doors will be open free to all."

H. Smith writes: "The opening services at Van Buren Opera House of the Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature, Sunday evening, Sept. 3, were well attended. The hall was beautifully decorated with sunflowers, etc. Mrs. M. Schumacher, the pastor, welcomed the appreciative audience. A beautiful floral basket of red and white roses was presented to her as a token of esteem, in returning to serve the society after three months of vacation. Sister N. Kusserow, in handing the basket of flowers to the pastor, said, 'Hail, sister, hail; home again for the good.' Her remarks of appreciation brought sunshine to each one present. Her spiritual messages were convincing. A series of spiritual lectures will be given on Soul Development, by the pastor. Dr. L. C. Koehler, ex-minister, will assist. Services held each Sunday evening at Madison street and California avenue, 7:30. All are cordially invited."

Mrs. Maggie Henry writes: "On Sunday evening at Spiritual Mission Chapel (Old 77) we had a very intellectual audience. Our speaker, F. M. Stoller, read for the scripture lesson a portion of the 12th chapter of I. Corinthians. After a short scientific explanation of the different phases of mediumship his guides answered the scientific and philosophical questions asked by the audience, many of them being very interesting. They also answer personal questions, followed by spirit messages and psychometric readings, either by Mr. Stoller or some other medium."

Mr. A. Merkel, vice-president, writes: "An elaborate anniversary and party was given in honor of the Mrs. M. Schumacher, pastor of the Spiritual Church Students of Natura, at her home, Sept. 2. Among the many gifts was a handsome hand-painted china set, presented by our pianist."

Mrs. Anna Duncan writes: "We are here in Tampa, Fla., a small band struggling for recognition against adverse conditions. We hold our meetings in a small hall where discourses are given by our president, J. F. Ireland, who is a close student of the philosophy, and we enjoy his recitals very much. He is ably assisted by our vice-president, Mrs. J. J. Ender. Your correspondent is musical director, and at present secretary. I am also engaged as pianist and organist at Lake Helen camp for the coming season. We are trying to negotiate with J. Madison Allen to come here. That estimable lady, Carrie Firth Curran, sowed some good seed here, which will bear fruit. The Progressive Thinker is certainly doing a grand work. The Psychical Research Society meets every Sunday evening in I. O. O. F. hall at 8 o'clock. All interested are invinted. J. F. Ireland, president; Mrs. Anna Duncan, secretary."

Miss Elizabeth Harlow has been illuminating Chicago and vicinity with her lectures, lecturing here, at Genoa, and at the Sunflower picnic. She has been engaged for another year at Columbus, Ohio.

Ida May Cook of Spring Hill, Kansas, resigns her office in the Spiritualist League, organized at Topeka, Kansas. She says it "denounces all phases of physical mediumship." We are told it only denounces the fraudulent part of the phenomena, and is ardently in favor of the genuine.

Benson Gray writes from Jackson, Michigan: "I am pleased to announce through the columns of your valuable paper, that at present the Spiritualists of Jackson, Mich., are enjoying a genuine revival. On Sunday, Sept. 3, Oscar A. Edgerly began a month's engagement with our society. From reports of his work elsewhere we had been led to expect much, but we can truly say, that our expectations have been far exceeded by our realizations. On Sunday, Sept. 3, his guides delivered two discourses of wonderful eloquence and power, enthusing our audience to the highest pitch of appreciation. On Friday night Mr. Edgerly gave a test seance for the benefit of the society, and while he declares he does not pose as a test medium, still we must acknowledge that we have never had a better exhibition of test mediumship from our rostrum, tests that have the true ring of genuineness from start to finish. We feel justified in saying that we anticipate a spiritual feast during the remainder of the month, and we shall try to engage Mr. Edgerly for a longer period as soon as he has the time available."

Oscar A. Edgerly's address during September is No. 811 South Jackson street, Jackson, Michigan.

FROM N. S. A. HEADQUARTERS.

Matters of Interest and Importance.

To the Editor:—It gives me pleasure to extend the cordial greetings of the N. S. A. to yourself and all connected with your valuable journal, our sincere thanks for all the help and encouragement you have ever given to our organization.

It is also with pleasure that we report to you and to the readers of your columns that the N. S. A. has never been so prosperous or able to do as much good as in the present year, as the annual report of its secretary to the next convention will show.

In regard to the thirteenth annual convention of the N. S. A., which will be held at the First Unitarian Church of Minneapolis, Minn., Eighth street and Mary Place, Oct. 17-20, inclusive, we are glad to say that promises of the best of convocations are held out to us, and we believe that Minnesota will surpass herself in the efforts made to give Spiritualism the grandest boom it has ever had in that section. Our list of speakers and mediums for the evening entertainments, which are to be free to the public, bears the names of many of our foremost workers; among those expected are: Rev. Dr. Austin, Will J. Erwood, Prof. W. F. Peck, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, Oscar Edgerly, Mesdames Lillie, Fixen, McCoy, Gaule-Ridinger, Ressegue and others.

The musical program under the direction of Mr. Paul Zumback, will be a splendid addition to the evening work.

The Lyceum movement will be ably represented by the National Lyceum Superintendent, John W. Ring, who has much of interest and importance to report, and who has done a grand work for the children's lyceum in his official capacity.

The headquarters of the N. S. A. during convention will be the Nicollet Hotel, Minneapolis; all delegates and visitors wishing rooms at that hostelry during convention, can secure the same at reduced rates by writing to the proprietors, asking for terms given the National Spiritualists Association during convention dates.

Special railroad tickets will be issued on the certificate plan at one fare and a third for round trip; all wishing the same should ask for certificate tickets of National Spiritualists Association convention to Minneapolis. Their ticket agents will give information. Full fare is to be paid going; one-third on return trip. Each certificate must be signed by N. S. A. secretary, also endorsed by special railroad agent at convention the last day, Oct. 20, and 25 cents paid to the secretary for endorsing of the agent, this being the rules of the railroad companies.

The annual reception given to visitors and delegates will be held at the Unitarian church, Monday evening, October 16. All are welcome.

We desire to extend the grateful appreciation of the N. S. A. to the managers of all camps that granted an N. S. A. day during the last camp season; first and last these camps have been valuable aids to the National Association in its good work. The N. S. A. secretary had the privilege of representing this association the present summer at Onset, Mass., on N. S. A. day, and cannot adequately express her appreciation of the attention given to her plea for aid. Dr. Geo A. Fuller, chairman of the camp and president of the Massachusetts State Association, presided and made an eloquent speech in behalf of the grand work of the National Association and for organization among Spiritualists, pledging Massachusetts State Association anew to our cause and to the N. S. A. Mr. J. B. Hatch also spoke earnestly and forcibly of the N. S. A. and its objects, while many other prominent workers echoed these sentiments. The result of this meeting netted one hundred and three dollars to the N. S. A., many bills being quietly placed in the collection baskets, while a number of friends gave their subscriptions to swell the sum before the meeting closed. Among the many whose generosity and efforts went to make the Onset day a successful one for the N. S. A., Mr. and Mrs. Butterfield and Mrs. M. C. Weston may be mentioned, while the indefatigable Mrs. C. L. Hatch must be remembered for her cheerful assistance.

To one and all, greetings of love.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.

German Meetings at Lily Dale.

Now that the season is over, the work done and all going to their respective homes again, we would say a few words in regard to the German meetings held at Lily Dale.

These meetings have been successful and we look forward to a very good time and greater success next season. We thank the management of the City of Light Assembly for their kindness shown to us, and we thank all the friends for their kind thoughts and appreciative words, and all the German friends for their attendance, as also those who have assisted in the musical fund, which will enable us to start in next year with a good musical program. These meetings were conducted by Mrs. Elsie Stumpf, assisted by others. Her work was good, the lectures interesting and instructive and her spirit messages brought comfort and joy to the hearts of those that received them. Mr. Gustav Thiese, as chairman, did his best, so did Prof. Arthur Uvedale as musical director.

Now, dear friends, one and all join in making this work a greater success next season, by letting your friends know about these meetings at Lily Dale. Mrs. Stumpf is open for engagements in English or German. Mr. Gustav Thiese, Akron, Ohio, chairman; Mrs. Elsie Stumpf, Brooklyn, N. Y., medium and treasurer; Mr. Henry J. Hoffman, Toledo, Ohio, secretary. COR.

Harmony Grove Camp, Cal.

The camp-meeting just closed at Harmony Grove, Escondido, Cal., was one of unusual interest, material profit and spiritual development. The association has at last succeeded in becoming the owner of all the buildings, camp equipments and permanent improvements, so that its further financial standing and success are assured. The attendance was large, the several lectures, circles, literary entertainments ets., were well attended and productive of great good.

Among the speakers and message bearers who served us faithfully and acceptably, Mesdames Ella W. Marchant and Lily M. Thiebaud of San Bernardino, Mary C. Vlasek of Los Angeles, Millie Horder and Judge Sidney Thomas of San Diego, are worthy of special mention, and the association takes pleasure in expressing its grateful appreciation to each and all of them.

The morning services on Sunday, August 13, were set apart exclusively to the memory of our sister, Mrs. Etta Foster, one of the oldest members and most faithful workers in the association, and who was dearly beloved and will be sadly missed by all. The enclosed tribute to her memory was adopted by the association and formed the center around which clustered all the utterances of the different speakers.

J. L. DRYDEN.

In Memoriam.

Since our last annual encampment a shadow from the death angel's wing has fallen across the pathway of our association and has left traces of sorrow and tears upon the cheeks of some of our members.

On the night of November 9, 1904, the white angel messenger called Death, entered the home of our brother, Ezra Foster, and in response to the joyful summons, "Come up higher," two angels, instead of the one that had entered, passed out of that happy home into the solemn stillness of the life beyond.

Mrs. Etta Foster, the beloved wife, mother, sister and friend, at the end of an earth pilgrimage of sixty-nine years crowned with an unselfish and useful life-work, heard the welcome summons and quietly passed to the higher expression of life.

Sister Foster was the youngest daughter of Capt. Bailey Potter, who served his country with distinction in the war of 1812, and beneath whose humble roof at West Gardner in the far-off state of Maine, our sister first beheld the material light.

As members of the Harmony Grove Camp-meeting Association, of which she was an honored, faithful and beloved member from its organization, we hereby publicly express our deep sorrow and regret because of her physical absence, and also express our high appreciation of the many good qualities, and the beautiful character which she possessed. And we gladly bear tribute to the noble, unselfish life, the high spiritual endowments, and the sweet, elevating influences which her life constantly shed abroad as a benediction upon all with whom she mingled.

We hereby express our sympathy with the bereaved husband, children, grand children and friends who have been deprived of the loving care, companionship and kindly ministrations of the loved one; and while we cannot but deplore our own and their material loss, we rejoice because of her great spiritual gain.

Although hidden from our mortal eyes, and although we shall miss her dear motherly presence in the form in our assemblies and circles, and shall listen in vain for her spoken words, we know that it is only a thin veil that intervenes, and her interest in our efforts to advance the cause of truth which she loved so dearly, will be as deep as while she was present with us in the form.

"Think not about the grave; how should it hold
That essence pure, eternal and divine?
Lift not your gaze beyond the stars that shine
Far in the cloudless blue, serenely cold.
Nay, listen; you shall hear
The old glad words of greeting. You shall hold
The hands death's pressure left so icy cold,
And know that she is near—not far, but near,
Closer than earth can hold its loved is she."

The Northern Michigan Meeting.

Sunday, August 20, marked the closing of the sixth annual meeting of Spiritualists of Northern Michigan. It was an ideal day, as the three preceding ones had been since camp opened.

Mrs. Cora Morrill closed our camp work for 1905, with two grand discourses. They were most fitting, for all in sound of her voice to ponder on, to act upon, until we should meet again, knowing full well, if strictly adhered to for that time, they would be for all time, for words spoken, lessons learned, could only result in the bettering of every life. And we can only hope, that when we convene again we will have all profited by the teachings set forth. To the mind of the writer it was the most successful in the history of the camp, both spiritually and financially; not that the audiences were any larger, but more came into the fold acknowledging the truth of our philosophy, by receiving verifications which filled their whole being with satisfaction by the phenomena.

August 13, in the bright sunshine the cottage of the secretary, the first private cottage to be erected on the grounds, was dedicated by Mrs. Morrill, in beautiful words of "Home," and then named "Pine Crest Cottage," by the son Carl, who departed earth life, Oct. 18, 1887.

A. A. Finney, that grand trumpet medium, through his guides did much to clinch the philosophy of Spiritualism by the phenomena, making us all very grateful for his having come into our midst.

The memory of this camp will be a bright spot for our minds to dwell upon the coming year.

FINE BRAIN VIBRATIONS.

So Attuned That the Higher Order of Spirits Can Act Upon Them—Babe Amazes Doctors by Knowledge of Anatomy—Five-Year-Old Lad Holds Floor at Medical Meeting.

Glibly prattling of the petella and medulla oblongata, little 5-year-old Mark Delafield Mallory, of Santa Rosa, Cal., held the floor at a recent meeting of the Sonoma County Medical Society for more than an hour and kept the questioning physicians who gathered around him, gasping with wonder. Wee Mark is not a member of the society, although his father, Dr. G. W. Mallory, is, and the lad was not reading a thesis or advancing a theory. But from the way he discussed the muscular system of man, from the occipitalic to the tendon achillis or made off-hand mention of the floating ribs, the costal cartilage, the clavicle or the fibula, he might easily have been a second year medical student at least. HIMALYA
(THE KOLA COMPOUND)

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific proving that

HAY-FEVER
—AND—
ASTHMA can be CURED.

Mr. W. H. Keller, 3174 5th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 25th, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma by Himalya, after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Closson, 122 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes, Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never had an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write today to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York.

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

And lastly, our latest premium book, "Letters From the Spirit World," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea.

All these TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.75 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE,

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

F. S., Winnipeg: Q. Was there a proclamation of Atheism during the French Revolution, made by the leaders of the Republic or representatives of the people?

A. Deputy Depont in a speech said: "I am free to avow, that I for my part am an atheist." His words were received with silent approval.

But it is a mistake that there was a formal acceptance of atheism by the nation. The priesthood had joined with the rulers as always, and assisted in keeping the people in ignorance and poverty. The reaction was terrible, and scorn and hate were reflected on religion, which had supported the brigands of court and cloister. But the French must have a religion. The old had scarcely been overthrown when the wildest element of the revolution enthroned a "new." It was the "Religion of Reason." Chaumette led a procession, vast, drunk, delirious with blood, escorting the Goddess of Reason, borne on a palanquin. She had been selected from the opera, Demoiselle Condeille, and was arrayed in a sky-blue mantle, with a red liberty-cap with a garland of oak leaves. She was carried to the cathedral of Notre Dame, seated on the high altar and worshiped, the "National Convention chanting the Hymn to Liberty." This was not atheism. It was an acknowledgment of the existence of God, by symbolizing him in the goddess. Reason became only another name for Jupiter, Jehovah, God.

The application given by the clergy gives its only value to this charge against the French revolution. They assert that the reign of terror was caused by the national belief in atheism. The very reverse is the truth. It was the terrible suffering of the people, forced on them by rulers in the name of religion, which filled them with hatred and sent them, not of atheism, but to the overthrow of the existing system of government and religion to which they referred all their sufferings, and the establishment of a new. It was a wild, misdirected brute energy, as far away from reason as from the established church; a madness of fever, which time only could allay.

R. B.: Q. Is it true that a mother's love is the same as "divine love"? To me it seems that the mother's love for her children is selfish and the opposite of divine love.

A. Perhaps there is no word in the language given a greater variety of meanings than love. It may signify the most exalted unselfishness of an angel, or the sensuality of a devil. This want of clearness of definition leads to endless discussion, and obscurity of thought. Love in its essence is unselfish. It is like the sun which radiates with unvarying constancy, yet asks no return. Love exacts no recompense, demands no obligation, is devotion. This conception should be conveyed by the word, and if other meaning is desired a qualifying term should indicate the difference. We do not see how love is strengthened by the word "divine," for it is of all attributes the most exalted, and in any idea formed of God must be a leading quality.

In its ultimate analysis, a mother's love, which causes the endless sacrifice of herself, comes near to the "divine," or the most exalted. The mother bird folds her helpless nestlings under her wings while the storm beats over her, is as self-devoted as the martyr on the cross, enduring the pangs of death for the sins of others.

Overlying this devotion may be a veneer of selfishness, pride, ambition, expectation, but its intrinsic quality is not concealed.

F. S.: Q. 1. Who is Anna Eva Fay, and whence her power to read questions on slips of paper in the pockets of her interrogators, and of finding or directing people to lost persons or articles?

2. Last spring a person called Lotta was exhibited here, was apparently hypnotized and then placed in a box, out of which she rose in response to passes by the hypnotizer, into mid-air, apparently with no material support, a wooden hoop being passed around her body to show that no wires or other supports were used. How was this done?

3. How were the feats accomplished which Mrs. Annie Abbott performed some years ago, apparently resisting the muscular power of several strong men, with little effort, by some mysterious power?

A. The much-advertised Fay came from obscurity posing first as a "medium," and then as exposer. Finding mystery a drawing card, her managers gave no explanation, leaving the public to draw its own conclusions. The Spiritualists could accept the performances as spiritual and those who did not believe in that system could call it clever magic. If she had, or still has, any mediumistic power, it is covered up and vitiated by adroit deception. Her assistants have the program of each evening's performance prepared, and she is nothing more than any other "professor" of legerdemain. It is not possible to give the method pursued, by one in front of the footlights, any more than it would be to tell how Kellar produces his mysterious tricks, but when understood all these tricks are so simple as to be almost childish.

We cannot explain the suspension of "Lotta" in mid-air, but whenever a known law of nature, is apparently suspended, we cannot be too careful in drawing conclusions. While levitation has been repeatedly manifested by mediums, by spirit power, it has never been accomplished before a promiscuous audience, and from the delicacy of the conditions essential, never can be.

All these public exhibitors have their paraphernalia, and stages arranged for their tricks, which are in every respect different from true spirit manifestations.

The performances of Annie Abbott were explained at the time she was before the public, in this department. Her "muscular power" was simply skill in making her antagonists exert theirs at greatest disadvantage, and in opposition to each other. It may be pertinently asked, Why should Spiritualism be supported by legerdemain and tricks of magic, even admitting they are at times the efforts of spirits? Is not the cause whose grand object is to spiritualize mankind, degraded by mountebanks? Not one of these exhibitors will allow the routine of their performances to be disturbed. No one would be allowed to push a table or chair under suspended Annie Abbott. Why use a hoop? Because in the hands of the manager, the audience can be deceived. No one will be answered by Fay unless there is preparation beforehand. Spiritualism has suffered great loss by these charlatans who have more or less openly practiced under its name. In this it has not been alone, for the beginnings of all religions have been saturated with the arts of magicians, pretenders and charlatans. The true seers were followed by a train of pretenders and false prophets. The true is constantly revealed against a black background of deception.

FIRST VISIT TO LILY DALE.

An Ohio Worker Gives Her Thoughtful Impressions.

Ten days spent at the City of Light Assembly were fraught with both profit and pleasure. It being my first visit there, I was of course enchanted with the appearance created there. As it has been so many times described through these columns, I will refrain from saying anything about the grounds, but will speak of the spirit that permeates the place.

Hardly had we stepped from the train (there were four in our party) when exclamations of gladness greeted us as one by one friends lined up to bid us welcome. Conspicuous because of his modesty was Harrison Hunt, the "boy orator" of Conneaut, Ohio, whose outstretched hand and smiling face at once made us feel at home.

During my stay I met with the pro and con of nearly every known phase of mediumship, and if my impressions are correct I believe there is a tendency there to inaugurate a thorough sifting of the wheat from the chaff.

The lyceum, which I attended each session during my stay, is a most important feature; the conductor, Miss Carrie Howard, proved to be the right person in the right place in every sense of the word, she reaches the children in a way that is helpful to all who have the good fortune to be present.

Longley's beautiful songs seem to have a touch of real heaven in them when sung by that sweet young singer, Edna Grant, whose sweet simplicity lends angelic charm to every note, leaving profound impression upon her hearers.

The German meetings are a helpful addition, as many people who can make out the import of a test or message when given to them in English and yet would lose the essence of a lecture, thus the presentation of our philosophy to Germans in German, is most gratifying to them.

The band concerts were veritable feasts to the lovers of music, and the many pleasurable attractions too numerous to mention serve to make the days at this camp most busy ones.

But in spite of all this, there are still those who grumble, and the question arises: Does a flowery talk about the "home over there," an individual message, a personal test, a slate-writing, a seance light or dark, constitute all there is of Spiritualism? Evidently there are some people calling themselves Spiritualists who believe this is or ought to be all, and they are dissatisfied that the management engage other than strictly Spiritualist speakers to lecture at the auditorium.

Here let me say that I believe it is high time that our people wake up (some of them) to the realities of our cause. Spiritualism not only covers the above named modes of communication between the seen and the unseen, but it spreads its banner wide, and enfolds humanity in its various stages of progression, and helps the struggling masses to rise by extending its fellowship to all who labor in the reform movements of our age, be that reformer political, social, religious, moral, mental, or spiritual; all of these are expressions of spiritual truth, and we hail with gladness a press and a platform that is broad enough to hold them all.

The mission of Spiritualism is not alone to materialize spirits, but to spiritualize material people, that they may realize the truly spiritual.

Spiritualism has no one hobby to which to bind its constituents, but it opens to us great fields of knowledge, and with every step forward we have a clearer view of the vastnesses before us.

To aid this world-wide progression, the management of the City of Light are sparing no pains, and instead of petty criticisms they should have the most helpful thoughts of every Spiritualist at large.

Altogether our stay at Lily Dale was interesting, delightful and educative—what more could we ask for in ten days? ELIZABETH SCHAUSS.

New Era Camp, Oregon.

Just keep the New Era Camp-meeting for the year 1906 in mind and don't forget the fact that New Era is in Oregon.

Another fact for you to remember—Rev. G. C. Love is again president, and he is going to work all the year in order, if possible, to make that camp-meeting better than the one just ended. Spiritualists of the Pacific coast, send him your best thought for the success of that meeting and begin getting yourselves ready to come to the next year's camp-meeting.

There is just reason for saying the last camp-meeting was ably managed, had the best of lectures, and honest mediums to follow them, and all who attended the meeting spoke in highest praise regarding the work in all its various phases.

The music in charge of Mrs. G. C. Love and Mrs. Hector Campbell produced the grandest conditions for both lecturers and mediums, while Rev. G. C. Love, the president, sang "The Handwriting on the Wall" in a manner that caused him to repeat it many times during the session of camp work.

All the orthodox idea is taken out of that beautiful song in the way Mr. Love sings it, and it is coming to the front again as a Spiritualist song, and it appeals to the people in a way that inspires grand thoughts of the power of a spirit. OCCASIONAL.

DELPHOS CAMP, KANS.

Laudatory of the Prominent Workers at the Camp.

The 27th annual camp of the First Society of Spiritualists and Liberals, closed its 17 days session on August 27.

With each succeeding year this camp has grown in prominence and stability, until now there is no camp in the West that wields a greater influence or a more exalted exposition of Spiritual philosophy, harmonizing the well being of physical existence.

It has ever been watchful as well as mindful of deception practiced under the guise of spiritual phenomena, and to that end have its officers labored to procure none but trustworthy talent, true to the precepts of which Spiritualism, in its purity, stands a formidable truth which no contending force can overthrow or dethrone its power.

The camp this year has been an exceptional one from many standpoints. As a financial venture it has eclipsed all previous records. From a spiritual point of view it has elicited an interest as never before. The practical food which was dispensed by the zealous workers from the rostrum, was greedily devoured by hungry souls seeking knowledge.

The demonstrative work came with such volume and overwhelming evidence as to silence the most positive and embarrassing skeptic upon the grounds.

The writer feels in duty bound to give each faithful worker a short pen picture of their abilities as they appealed to his understanding, and while he does not feel competent to portray the full value of each, yet we trust a pardoning thought will find favor with those of whom he writes.

First on the program of speakers, we introduce A. Scott Bledsoe. Mr. Bledsoe, we believe, is a native Kentuckian, and his whole soul is afire with the realities of life. His masterful logic as it falls from his lips fills his listeners with an elixir so forceful, so positive, as to brush aside the hesitating darkness of doubt, and in spite of prejudicial feelings they grasp the light and are carried to a realm of condition which they knew not of. Mr. Bledsoe has no peer upon the spiritual rostrum as a practical logician, expounding truths that reach more people whose minds are in great need.

The next on the program who claims attention is Mrs. Etta Bledsoe, wife of A. Scott Bledsoe. It is no extravagant statement when we say that Mrs. Bledsoe is possibly the finest and most spiritually attuned inspirational speaker now lecturing before the people. Her whole demeanor when delivering a discourse is that of a being divinely illumined. Her eyes glow with a love light; her countenance gives forth an expression that bespeaks a power of which no human sculptor could dare hope to impart to his fondest dreams. Each announcement of when she would a higher sphere of action. Mrs. Kayner won the hearts and affections of all who came in contact with her; kind, motherly, a noble soul; leading the life of a pure and refined spirit encumbered by earthly ties, she challenges the admiration of all true men and women by exemplary life. Mrs. Kayner's abilities lie in test work. She is in many respect a marvelous medium. Not tainted by the lust for money, she is as honest as the great cause which rules the destinies of the worlds. Her fire test on the closing Sunday of the camp was a sensational revelation of spirit control to many, and the committee selected to exercise a watch to see that no impositions were practiced were simply dumfounded. Many were the sad hearts made glad by the comforting words spoken through the medial powers of this noble woman.

Our next is Mrs. Edith McCrosson, of Columbus, Ohio. Mrs. McCrosson is a spiritual enigma, a human flower, blooming in the soul garden of affection. Her lightness of heart carries her along over the dark chasms of despair, piercing the clouds from which fall the rays of sunshine and beauty. Mrs. McCrosson's work is on a high and spiritual sphere. Her mediumship ranks among the best. Her readings gave excellent satisfaction. While she is yet unknown to the general public, her energy and push will lead her onward to a greater work.

We now come to Miss E. E. McCarthy of Denver, Colo. Miss McCarthy stands alone, she is the impersonation of occultism, and if transcendentalism be a truth one might exclaim that one of the ancient masters had reappeared in this personality. Miss McCarthy is not easily comprehended; she is a strange spirit wandering among a class of people that cannot grasp her intellectual acumen. She climbs the heights of occult lore, delves deeply into mysticism, courts the phantasies of Persian magic, and with her mother wit flays her antagonists with the fluency of an adept.

Miss McCarthy won the appreciation of the whole camp; she did splendid work in the line of tests, both in public and private, and those who came to know her are bettered for having met her.

We now come to our closing chapter, Mrs. Inez Wagner, of Topeka, Kansas, trumpet and pellet medium. Mrs. Wagner is without a parallel as a trumpet medium. Her work was so satisfactory and so much interest was manifested that she could not accommodate the crowds that applied for admission to her circles. She gave a test seance to a circle of twelve, eight being skeptics, the other four being chosen by Mrs. Wagner (the writer being one of the number). In this seance the skeptics were permitted to make their own conditions, she submitting to the following test conditions: The committee of skeptics in charge procured mosquito netting and completely enveloped her by wrapping it about her, then two men each side of her, sitting on the ends of the netting, and to still further preclude fraud they cut strips of court plaster and fastened over her mouth. The circle was then seated, the light blown out, and after singing a few hymns the manifestations began. This test circle capped the climax. The doubting Thomases could no longer attribute fraud upon the part of Mrs. Wagner. They became silent, and now their mental energies are at work trying to solve the problem of spirit manifestation. There is not a shadow of doubt about the genuineness of Mrs. Wagner's mediumship. The voices come loud and strong through the trumpet, and he who is sincere can, if he so desires, learn the truth of life's continuity by attending Mrs. Wagner's seances.

CHICAGO SPIRITUALISTS LEAGUE

Commences its Meetings for the Season of 1905-6.

A fairly good audience for the very limited advertising that was done made up the opening meeting of the Chicago Spiritualists League, which was held in Handel Hall, No. 40 E. Randolph street, Saturday evening, September 2.

Dr. George B. Warne, president of the League, presided.

The services were opened by the congregation singing, with Mrs. E. Foote as leader at the piano, the tune "America," with the words:

"Sweet sister spirits come,
And from your beauteous home,
To earth descend.
Come cheer us with your love,
And lift our thoughts above;
O'er land unknown to rove,
Your guidance lend."

Our old but clear-minded patriarch, Dr. Hewitt, pastor of the Church of Psychic Forces, made a very impressive and uplifting prayer. This was followed by a solo by Mrs. Elizabeth A. Reizinger, which she rendered in a manner that called forth the hearty applause of her audience.

Dr. Warne in his happy manner of presenting persons to an audience, introduced Miss Elizabeth Harlow as the lecturer for the evening. She announced her subject as "The Realm of the Unknown." For nearly an hour she handled this subject in a way to command the earnest attention of her listeners. She has a clear voice, and a personal presence that is magnetic, and there is every evidence that she is moved by spirit power.

The leading thought of the lesson as near as I could analyze it, that was given, The star of Bethlehem modernized, is the star of progress, and it is progress that carries us forward into the great unknown. Mankind are pushed into the great unknown whether they have a will to enter it or not. It is human destiny to advance from the indifferent, the good, and the better ever to the best ideals conceivable. It is the right of each soul to make choice of the ideal life and activity it would materialize. It is not so much the quantity in numbers of men wanted to make Spiritualism grow, as the quality. And Spiritualism is here out of the great unknown that was, and is for our benefit, our progress and our happiness; and a force unseen is bringing more and more of its hidden glories for man's moral and spiritual nature evolution into that condition in which God may be seen in the human face and felt from the human soul.

Miss Harlow held very closely the attention of her audience from the commencement to the end of her discourse, and was heartily applauded at the finish.

Mrs. Wm. Hilbert, Mrs. Julia Lincoln and Mrs. Mary Weaver engaged the attention of the audience about fifteen minutes each in giving readings and messages, with which many of the people present seemed very much pleased. The meeting was closed by a benediction by Miss Harlow.

The next public meeting of the League will be held in the same place Saturday evening, October 7. Good talent has been engaged, and the public is cordially invited to attend.

OHIO MISSIONARY.

Lake Brady and the Wentworth Association of Spiritualists.

It was my privilege on August 26 and 27 to address the Wentworth Association of Spiritualists at their 36th annual grove meeting, between Antwerp and Hicksville, Ohio. It was the largest Spiritualist meeting I ever addressed, there being more than one thousand persons in attendance, nine hundred and three having paid entrance fee at the gate on Sunday.

The Wentworths are a large family and are the pioneer Spiritualists of that part of the Buckeye State; the younger generation are justly proud of the work of their elders and are doing all they can to keep the work moving on.

The day was beautiful and the woods of tall and stately trees seemed just the right place in which to give free and radical expression to the truth so dear to us all.

The perfect order and attention manifested by that vast audience was an inspiration in itself, seated as they were on planks, tree stumps, wagons, and even on tree limbs, some very comfortable, others very uncomfortable, during the fifty minutes of my address on "The Power of Thought," "Truth," "Liberty," all of which subjects had been furnished by people in the audience; hardly a stir was noticeable. The same attention was accorded Mrs. Belle Fuller of Grand Rapids, Mich., who gave general good satisfaction as messagebearer.

The music for the day was furnished by a mixed chorus composed of the younger members of the Wentworth society.

On August 13 it was my pleasure to occupy the rostrum at Lake Brady camp, where I met a very appreciative audience, among whom were many friends whom I had met on previous occasions. It was refreshing to meet with them all and to catch the "welcome" smile upon their faces, as well as to become acquainted with the constantly increasing numbers of newcomers.

The management at Lake Brady is endeavoring to feed the hungry souls of men with a truth that is backed by unerring principles. Truly their efforts are commendable, and they are reaching multitudes in their way, being situated just opposite the Brady Summer Resort, the tent that serves as auditorium is at once conspicuous to those who arrive on the grounds, curiosity has led many a one to cross the road to see "what is going on over there," and out of it has grown interest and with further investigation have become Spiritualists; thus the camp is useful and helpful. Long may it prosper!

MISSIONARIES' REPORT.

For the Quarter Ending August 31, 1905.

June was our vacation month and we spent that time at our home in Jamestown, N. Y. It was a pleasant and happy experience.

When we arrived home we were both tired and sick, but the rest and change, together with the treatment furnished us by Mrs. Dr. Matteson of 248 North Division street, Buffalo, N. Y., restored us to the state of health necessary to the continuance of our work.

During July and August we visited Urichsville, O., Elwood, Ind., Millsburg, Mich., and filled engagements at the following named camp-meetings: Chesterfield, Ind., Snowflake camp, Central Lake, Mich., Vicksburg, Mich., and Ashley, Ohio. We organized one new society and held 46 meetings.

Chesterfield camp-meeting with its many mediums for various phases of phenomena was doing business on a large scale; many investigators and others were being supplied with the "bread of life" and perhaps more, the bread of life immortal. Many Spiritualists were partaking of the same kind of nourishment and everybody was in the happiest mood.

The lectures and messages were of the best. The conferences were very interesting as well as educational, and when Brother Collins (a former minister of the "Church of God") "let go" in conference, everybody "got happy." Oh, what joy Spiritualism brings to those who have believed and preached a future life, as it enables them to prove it.

Everything was first-class at Chesterfield, and the "pilgrims" felt that their visit was all too short. Chesterfield showed its good will and sympathy in the work of the N. S. A. by allowing us to take a collection for the Mediums' Relief Fund which netted the handsome sum of $22.

We next visited Snowflake Camp, Central Lake, Mich., our daughter Marie accompanying us. We have but little time to visit our children and they have but little opportunity to visit us, as we are so constantly on the wing, and we greatly appreciated this opportunity to spend one whole week with the dear girl. We did enjoy it, and so did she.

Snowflake Camp has improved in the last year. New cottages have been built, streets laid out, lots surveyed, etc. New streets were being cut through the woods to the lake and everything was being done to push the work at this beautiful camp.

The attendance on Sunday was very good. The air was lovely and cool here, while in New York, Chicago and other places the heat was intolerable and sunstroke prevalent. The nights at Snowflake were cool, and we slept comfortably under blankets. There was no one suffering from heat at this place. Many people come to this part of the state of Michigan to avoid hay fever and asthma. A collection was taken for the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A.

The Vicksburg camp was well attended this season. I think there were more people in attendance on Sundays than there has been for some years past. Thomas Grimshaw was the chairman and proved himself one of the best.

Miss Jeannette Fraser, the little woman who is filled with the love for our sacred cause, and inspired with the zeal that guarantees success, is the owner of the beautiful grounds, and the manager of the camp. She employs the best talent obtainable regardless of the expense, which is one of the secrets of its success. Every year new improvements are added to make the camp more beautiful, attractive and comfortable. Here old friends come together to enjoy the sweetest blessings of "this dear old world."

Vicksburg programs advertised a N. S. A. day at which time Brother Grimshaw and the missionaries officiated. A collection was taken to assist the N. S. A. in its work.

At Ashley camp we found the old friends at their several posts of duty. They received us with the same familiar smile and hearty handshake as of yore. These camp grounds were never so lovely as at the present time. The foliage seems more dense than ever before. Trees are planted each year and are coming on to take the places of the old ones as they shall pass away. In like manner the camp-meeting is converting new members who are growing in spiritual knowledge preparatory to the filling of the places that will soon be left vacant by the older ones as they shall pass on to the better land.

"Lake Tiberius" was much clearer and perhaps not quite so rough as in former years. No shipwrecks were reported, and no one was drowned during the camp-meeting; though the banks of the lake were lined with men, women and children from morning till night, day after day. The fishing was exceptionally good at Ashley this year. Mrs. Kibby spent a good share of her time fishing, and it was reported that she caught one hundred fish in one day.

The conferences were a feature of importance in the good work of the camp. Regular meetings every day and three meetings on Sunday is the rule at Ashley. There was the largest attendance at Ashley this year of any year of the five that we have served that association.

I want to mention the "Odovine" mineral well that is on these grounds. Its water is used by many people in this vicinity. People come with teams and fill jugs and bottles and take away with them. Many reports of different diseases that have been cured by drinking this water are current. This water is free to all now. The camp managers hope to be able to erect a sanitarium here at some future time.

The camp-meetings have had a successful year. Spiritualism in all its branches of work is succeeding beautifully. It was never more in favor with the people. It has never made such rapid growth, and especially in the direction of permanency in organization, as it is making to-day.

Spiritualism is winning the day and we are happy. Spiritualists, you ought to be happy, you need to be happy, you are happy, and the way to keep happy is to subscribe for this paper and through it keep posted on the growth and advancement of our great cause.

DROWNS AS PREDICTED.

Young Man Loses His Life After Joking Reference to Prophecy of Several Years Ago.

By the overturning of a canoe, William J. Schiffman, 21 years old, son of Dr. W. W. Schiffman and nephew of Dr. Rudolph Schiffman, prominent citizens of St. Paul, Minn., was drowned in White Bear Lake, September 3. Everett Brown, a companion, was rescued alive, but is in a serious condition. A strange fact is that young Schiffman's mother had been told several years ago that her son would be drowned in September, 1905. This prophecy had been referred to jestingly at the breakfast table when the boy announced his intention of going canoeing.

The Warfare of Science With Theology.

A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom. By ANDREW D. WHITE, LL. D., late President and Professor of History at Cornell University. In Two Volumes. 8vo. Cloth, Five Dollars. For Sale at This Office.

In these two large volumes are combined information that the reader could not find in the libraries of the world in fifty years. It shows the constant and determined opposition of Theology to the advancement that has been made in every branch of Science. To the Student it is indispensible. Every Free Thought Speaker should have it. It should circulate in every community. It goes into minute details, citing in all cases the authority, showing the persistency of Theology in fighting new and advanced ideas in Science.

"THE WARFARE OF SCIENCE WITH THEOLOGY" is undoubtedly the most complete, careful, conscientious, able and bravely impartial history of the subject ever written. The exactness and reliability of its facts and citations are unquestioned. Its vast scholarly research is amazing. It contains just the information the student and thinker needs, and so indexed and tabulated that it is handy as a dictionary, when one wishes to refer to some special point or topic.

These two large volumes, containing about 900 pages, will be sent to any address on receipt of the price, Five Dollars.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as o Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo, Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

"THE UNKNOWN"

—BY—

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. "War Is Hell."

Universe than was Zeus of the Greeks, or Jupiter of the Romans. It was the command of Jesus that when ye pray, say "Our Father who art in Heaven;" and the illustrious Theodore Parker used to close his pathetic, uplifting prayers, "And now, to our Father and our Mother, too, will we ascribe all the honor and the glory forever."

2. Cease from all procreative increase, based upon selfish gratification—based upon that Adamic impulse, common alike to insects, animals and the masses of unthinking men. The Adamic man will some time and somewhere be necessitated to die to generation, that he may be made alive in the illumined Christ, who was and is the resurrection and the life.

Kindly do I beseech you, oh, mortals, to cease begetting children under the influence of stimulants, perverted passions, and the war waves of infuriated battles. Roosevelt's suggestion of "many children" should be modified to read—"fewer children and superior ones."

3. Cease honoring and glorifying the brutal bravery of generals, majors and captains, who publicly strut along the streets in the gilded trappings of army equipages.

Shame be it to pronounce these men brave. There is no true moral bravery in war. This war-passion belongs to the realm of untamed animal life. Beasts naturally fight. A man, a pugilist, who will stand up and fight is as brave as a dog. Dogs fight because they are dogs. Personally I would run before I would fight with fist, club or revolver. It takes a brave—a truly brave man to run before he will fight. Any street cur almost will fight.

"Follow peace with all men," was the Christly command. Parents teach your children the principles of peace. Teach them that it is better to be harmed than to harm another; better to be killed than to purposely, murderously kill a brother man, for the consequences of this life's conduct extend beyond the grave, and heaven is attained only through holiness.

4. Cease the daily feastings upon the bodies of dead animals, especially the corpses of cattle, sheep and hogs, because men naturally grow to be like what they feed on, the foods making the blood, the blood making the body, and the body affecting the mind. The animal, flesh-eating nations are the fighting, conquering nations of the earth. Feed a young bear upon vegetables, grains and fruits and nuts, and he will grow up as docile almost as the flocks in the fields. Animals are often diseased, but being dumb cannot tell of their pains. Cattle suffer largely from tuberculosis and swine from trichinae, and the eating of such animal flesh not only diseases the human body but excites the war passions.

It is not from any over-strained idealism, but from an abiding actualism that this statement is made. Though in my 85th year, I am healthy, strong, vigorous—and why? Because I obey nature's laws, which are God's laws. "First, that which is natural," said Paul, "afterwards then that which is spiritual." I rise early in the morning, take a short walk, use no liquors nor wines, no tobacco, no coffee nor tea, and eat no animal flesh; and whether in my native or foreign lands, I dare to voice these, my convictions, and to practice them.

5. Disband all boys' brigades. They breed and encourage war. Cease reading trashy, excitable novels above love by moonlight, elopements, sentimental anarchy, and disobedience to the higher powers. The young grow to become like what they think about and read about, and much of this newspaper literature about fortunes made by speculation, of lynchings, of murders, of thundering of cannon and of great standing armies, are all demoralizing because exciting thought, and riveting the attention upon the painful tragedies, unprincipled frauds and fiendish barbarisms of the world.

6. Cease burdening women with the horrors, sufferings and crimsoning crimes that just as naturally flow from war as waters flow towards the ocean. Woman is more moral, more refined and spiritually-minded than man, hence her perpetual, and almost universal, voice for peace. Queen Victoria was ever averse to the Colonial wars. Often woman's tender voice of love subdues where force fails. Because of woman's intuitive sensitiveness, and natural kindness of heart, coupled with a clear intellect, she should not only exercise the right of suffrage, but should more potently make her influence in the family circle and the political arena in favor of justice, equality and peace, awaiting her time for a seat in Congress halls.

7. Cease yearly to resurrect the blood-stained war-ghost of Yorktown and Bunker Hill. This war-inciting ghost should have been "laid" buried, years ago in a grave too deep for resurrection. There should be no more boasting verbiage about "whipping the British." There should be no more drumbands of "Yankee Doodle," toy guns, nor pestiferous fire-crackers to purposely remind us of the old Revolutionary War. "Let the dead bury the dead," were the fervid words of the Christ. True patriotism does not consist in noise and bloodshed; but in justice, aglow with mercy and with equal opportunities for all. Genuine republics that live in the future, must call for, must demand justice and peace as among their supreme vocations. Consider that we are living in the fruitful present, sowing for others to reap, and that our principles materialized in our lives to-day, will—necessarily must—mightily mold the to-morrow of the future. Hushed then, be the song of "The Star Spangled Banner;" hushed be the God Save the King," the French "Marseilles" and all national war songs. Supplant them with songs of moral heroism, songs of home-life and farm-life, of hygiene and health, of inventions, of discoveries, aspirations, soul subjections, inviting Arcadias, Easter mornings and golden prophecies of the time

"When wars shall cease and ancient feuds shall fail,
Returning Justice lift aloft her scale;
Peace over the world her olive-wand extend,
And white-robed innocence from Heaven descend."

Standing not long since by Grant's tomb on the Hudson, I saw chiseled upon the impressive structure, the brief, yet grand, inscription—"Let us have peace." The words charmed, thrilled me, as would a message to humanity from purer, higher heaven. When the Nazarenian Rabbi was about to leave his disciples to prepare a place for them in the Father's House of many mansions, he said: "My peace I give unto you—my peace I leave with you." What a treasure, the peace of the Christ!

Tarrying a few days in this hillside city of peace, Mt. Lebanon, we are reminded of Mt. Carmel, and Herman, and Olive, and of the prophet's words: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings that publisheth peace. * * Thy watchmen shall lift up their voice together, shall sing when the Lord shall bring again Zion. * * And the Government shall be upon His shoulders. * * His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, and Prince of Peace."

Under a similar flow of inspiration, when those early believing disciples were "all of one accord, there came a sound from heaven like a rushing wind, and there appeared tongues of fire, and they began to speak with other tongues. * * Many wonders and signs were done by the Apostles. * * And all that believed had all things in common."

Thought, in connection with wisdom and persistent energy, is creative. To have better conditions we must think them—make them. There will never be an actual state of brotherhood and love and peace unless those who see the significance of this better way should go to living it at whatever hazard or cost. The life lived is the best proof of any philosophy.

Is it said that "all things in common" and the Sermon on the Mount are impractical? Atheistic materialists would naturally so think, but the refutation of this foolish thought lies before your eyes. These houses and barns, these flocks, herds upon the hills, these harvest fields and choice household comforts, all—all prove the practicability of the Pentecostal teaching. To say, then, that the principles of peace and "all things in common" are "beyond our reach" is absolutely untrue. They have been reached, and may be reached by all those who see diviner symbols in the dove and the olive branch than in the sword and the spear, and who prefer the spirit to the flesh. It is the spirit, and the spirit only, that giveth life, and by living in the spirit, new ideals and loftier moral altitudes are ever being attained. When Mount Soafa would not come to Mohammed at his bidding, he exclaimed, "then will I go to the mountain." These words—"will go"—tell of an irresistible energy. Reformers in this competitive age need the fire of unflagging energy and persistent devotion to the dissemination of their principles. Churchmen need the quickening of conscience. They are partially paralyzed, floundering in the sea of fashion and fame. Wisely sung the Quaker poet:

"We want a Christ again
To burn the truth fresh upon the forehead.
A Christ to walk among the wrangling Pharisees,
A Christ to drive the money-changers from the temple,
And bring the gospel of purity and peace back again."

Do not indulge the thought that non-resistent, non-fighting peace people are a placid, non-muscular people. They are not. Conscious of the right, and with the Hague arbitration in their minds, and the Christ principles in their heart, they stand in unruffled calm upon the rock eternal. "Quit ye like men"—"put on the whole armor of God," "fight the good fight of faith," were the stirring Apostolic words. The burning question that conscience, with an eye on the future, asks, is this—"Which is the way of life? Is it along the gay highway? Is it along social jungles and fashionable barbarisms, or in the way of obedience to the higher law of brotherhood and peace, each loving and living for the good of all?"

Human life at best is only a brief pilgrimage—a few steps from the cradle to the casket. Whither am I bound? The kingdom of God, that is the kingdom of infinite possibilities, is within you. Study them—develop them. It is not so much what you were, as what you are and what you intend to be. Look not mournfully upon the dead past. Let not your eyes turn to the horizon, but up to the noonday splendors of the meridian—the mountain top of the perfect life. Socrates, walking barefooted in ancient Athens was a thousand times richer than Croesus in his chariot.

The proud Roman Tiberius wrote thus: "Conscript fathers, I am the most miserable man on earth;" while Solano, a poor, humble subject with a heart full of charity and faith, said, "I am the happiest man on earth, for I am always planning to get that I may give."

It is absolutely impossible to produce the saintly soul along any line of mere self-interest. Sinking the selfish self is the first step towards the heavenly life. The acorn must fall ere it can sprout and grow. Nothing that is given, is given away. Our true lives are found in enriching others. God is infinitely rich and happy because He is eternally giving. The giving makes rich, and the equal sharing increases the possession.

We may well close with these words of a sister poet:

"I will arise and rejoice to-day
In the world's glad loving and giving,
And will sing a song in my heart alway
For the untold richness of living,

For the comfort of Hope, and the beauty of Love,
For the faith that faileth us never;
For the Peace on Earth and Good-will toward men,
And the Star that shineth forever!"

Woolley Park Camp.

Woolley Park camp-meeting closed its session for 1905, on August 27th, with the largest attendance of the season.

During E. W. Sprague and wife's ministration, assisted by Mrs. Margaret Stewart of Piqua, and Mrs. A. E. Kibby of Cincinnati, it is believed much good has been done in bringing the truth to many.

Mr. Sprague is logical and forceful in his discourses, and as a true Spiritualist he sends conviction to the hearts of his hearers. The N. S. A. made no mistake in selecting him as its missionary and representative. The closing week of camp was a busy one. The usual daily meetings were held, except Thursday, which was given over to the G. A. R. veterans.

Woolley Park is a desirable and a restful retreat for the overworked business men, women and children. Here may be found rest for tired heads and hands and much natural beauty in tree, shrub and flower.

There is here fine water to slake the thirst, also a fine magnetic spring for the healing of many diseases which is said to be very beneficial to all who use the water—a fine outlook for a first-class sanitarium.

All who attended Woolley Park, on leaving the grounds, voted it a pleasant and long-to-be-remembered place of rest and activity.

ONE OF THE CAMPERS.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mrs. E. V. Wilson, known as "Farmer Mary," passed to spirit life on Monday morning, August 28, at 6:40 o'clock, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lois Jellies, at Valparaiso, Ind. Mrs. Wilson was a life-long Spiritualist. Mr. Geo. H. Brooks of Wheaton, Ill., held Spiritualist services at the grave.

Passed to spirit life, Aug. 29, Mr. L. G. Comparet, at the National Soldiers' Home, California, after a lingering illness of many months' duration, at the age of 75 years. He was true in his devotion to the cause of Spiritualism, and a faithful reader of The Progressive Thinker since its earliest publication. The writer officiated at the grave, in addition to the usual military services.

MRS. M. EMILIE KRATZ.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Passed to spirit life, at Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 24, 1905, at 6:30 a. m., Heroy Milton Zinzow, infant son of Frank E. and Sophia A. Zinzow, aged 3 months and 20 days. Beautiful words of consolation were given through the lips of Mrs. Anna Mehrtens, under inspiration of an uncle of Mrs. Zinzow, who has been in spirit life over fifty years. Although tears of sadness from the parents were shed at the time of parting, yet they shall turn to gladness when bright and beautiful the spirit of their loved one will return to them with words of comfort and love.

LOUISE G. LOEBEL.

In National City, California, Aug. 27, 1905, Charles H. Worster, aged 65 years, a native of New Hampshire, but an old resident of this place, passed to spirit life. He had been a staunch Spiritualist for the past forty years. Truly a good man, a loving husband and an indulgent father has gone to his just reward and left a vacancy no other can fill. May the truth of our philosophy be their strength and comfort through all time.

JANE MULLEN.

I am now called to chronicle the departure of our good friend, David Church Coleman, who passed to the higher life, July 2, 1905, in his 71st year, from his home in the village of Vallejo, Cal., where he was at the time in the service of the government at Mare Island Navy Yard. He was a veteran soldier in the civil war and also a veteran soldier in Spiritualism, a subscriber for The Progressive Thinker, and a true conscientious man. He leaves a widow to mourn his departure and to keep his memory green with affection.

SPIRITUAL HARP A collection of Vocal Music for the Choir, Congregation and Social Circles. By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; E. H. Bailey, Musical Editor. New edition. Culled from a wide field of literature with the most critical care, free from all theological bias, throbbing with the soul of inspiration, embodying the principles and virtues of the spiritual philosophy, set to the most cheerful and popular music (nearly all original) and adapted to all occasions, it is doubtless the most attractive work of the kind ever published. Its beautiful songs, duets and quartets, with piano, organ or melodeon accompaniment, adapted both to public meetings and the social circles. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 14 cents.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.
Historical and critical review, with replies to an objection. By G. W. Brown, M. D. Price, 15c.

"fight the good fight of faith," were the stirring Apostolic words. The burning question that conscience, with an eye on the future, asks, is this—"Which is the way of life? Is it along the gay highway? Is it along social jungles and fashionable barbarisms, or in the way of obedience to the higher law of brotherhood and peace, each loving and living for the good of all?"

Human life at best is only a brief pilgrimage—a few steps from the cradle to the casket. Whither am I bound? The kingdom of God, that is the kingdom of infinite possibilities, is within you. Sunapee Lake Camp, N. H.

Sunapee Lake Camp-meeting closed last Sunday, in a rain storm. August 21, at 7:30 p. m., seance in hall, by Annie Banks Scott. She did well, and the tests were all recognized.

August 22, at 2:30 p. m., seance by Annie Banks Scott, with success.

August 23, at 2:30 p. m., lecture by Sadie L. Hand, which was well received. At 7:30 p. m., seance in the hall, by Annie Banks Scott.

August 24, at 2 p. m., conference; at 2:45 p. m., tests by Mrs. Scott; at 7:30 p. m., seance in hall, by Sadie L. Hand.

August 25, at 7:30 p. m., seance in hall, by Annie Banks Scott.

August 26, at 2:30 p. m., lecture by home talent, Mr. Thomas Burpee, who spoke for thirty minutes; he was well liked by the audience and they spoke well of the lecture, and we hope to hear him again. He was followed by Annie Banks Scott with tests.

It commenced raining Saturday night and has rained all day. The meeting was called to order by President John Gage, who presented Mr. Burpee for the second time to talk to us. He talked well to a good audience. They said it was one of the best lectures that had been heard on the grounds for a long time. At 1:15 p. m., seance in hall, by Annie Banks Scott; at 2:30 p. m., lecture in hall by Sadie L. Hand, and this was the closing day of Sunapee Lake camp-meeting for 1905. The music was in charge of Miss Ida H. Bond of Worcester, Mass., assisted by Mrs. Mellin.

The first Sunday was a rainy day. Mrs. Hand gave good work all through and also Mr. Whitney, who followed her later in the week, and he was followed by Dr. Emerson, who is known from Maine to California. Then came Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, who is known and liked by all, and then came Annie Banks Scott. She is a good test medium. She made a host of friends here, and our home talent is all right, and we hope to hear from him more in the future. We have had good success this year at Sunapee Lake Camp.

LORENZO WORTHEN,
Secretary.

Verona Park Camp, Maine.

The camp-meeting at this place opened August 13, and continued three Sundays, with a good attendance and successful meetings. Katie M. Ham of Haverhill, Mass., who has been here two previous seasons, occupied the first two Sundays, and gave some wonderful tests. Two wealthy families, one from Baltimore, Md., and one from Hartford, Conn., who had never attended a spiritual meeting of any kind, and who knew nothing of the phenomena, were present at one of the meetings and received remarkable and convincing proofs of continued life from their dear ones on the other side. Their souls seemed overflowing with joy at the unexpected and loving messages. They clung around Mrs. Ham for an hour after the meeting, asking many questions pertaining to the spiritual philosophy.

Edgar W. Emerson is another one of our popular speakers, and one that grows more popular the longer he stays.

The following are the executive officers elected for the ensuing year: President, A. F. Smith, Bangor; vice-president, Mrs. M. C. Donnell, Bucksport; secretary, Freeman W. Smith, Rockland; treasurer, Peter Abbott, Verona.

The meeting for next year will begin August 12, and will continue three Sundays. This place is the popular playground for the city of Bangor. Excursion boats and regular passenger boats land at our wharf several times daily from up and down the river. Our fine hotel and beautiful grounds make this an ideal place for picnic parties and excursions. The grounds are yearly becoming more and more popular. Lots are being sold and new cottages erected. The future looks cheering for a substantial growth and development.

CLINTON CAMP, IOWA.

Notes of the Camp-meeting at Mt. Pleasant Park.

Sunday, August 27, witnessed the closing of the camp-meeting of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualist Association, which was in progress four weeks. The program for the last week was especially interesting, it being enriched by the presence and work of three of the foremost workers in the spiritual cause, namely, W. J. Colville, Miss Elizabeth Harlow and Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley.

At 5:30 p. m., final services were held in memory of Dr. J. C. Phillips, who passed out suddenly on Thursday of last week. Mrs. Nora E. Hill of Chicago spoke the last words of respect and sympathy. Our choir rendered appropriate music. Mr. Coe of Chicago, sang a beautiful solo, and the body of the old Doctor, who had been a familiar figure on Mt. Pleasant Park for several years, was cared for by friends until Monday morning, when it was taken to Davenport, Iowa., where it was cremated, in accordance with the wishes of the Doctor before his transition. The body was taken to the crematory by four of the Doctor's friends: Dr. Eskelson, Mr. Coe, Mrs. J. C. Blodgett and Mrs. Elizabeth Harding.

On Sunday evening closing exercises were held in the pavilion, consisting of music and ten-minute speeches by several of our prominent workers, first of whom was W. J. Colville whose work during the week was so greatly appreciated. Miss Elizabeth Harlow, Dr. Geo. B. Warne, President W. F. Peck and others gave soul-stirring talks that will remain in our memory throughout the coming year.

On Monday the executive board held a final meeting, and among other things in the transaction of business, appointed committees for the coming year, the chairmen of which are as follows: Auditing, E. L. Kilby, Ottumwa, Iowa; finance, ——; music, Mrs. Christine Cooper, Clinton, Iowa; speakers and mediums, Mrs. E. J. Owen, Clinton, Iowa; lights and sanitary, W. M. Kellog, New Boston,. N. G. Olmstead was appointed superintendent of grounds.

Altogether this season's camp-meeting was most enjoyable, and at its close the M. V. S. A. feels to congratulate itself on the success of its efforts for the cause of Spiritualism.

Monday, August 28, a company of needy mothers and children arrived from Chicago, sent out by the Bureau of Charities for a week's outing. The M. V. S. A. gives them the use of our beautiful park, with tents, cots, beds and bedding, and the use of the dining hall, while the churches of this city supply provisions, cooks and dining-room service. The company of ten mothers and forty children are in charge of two superintendents, Messrs Hora and Wheeler, assisted by Misses Courtney and Fisch, all of Chicago, and members of our association and committees from the down-town churches vie with one another in making this outing one of extreme pleasure and benefit to these denizens of Chicago's crowded districts. This is the first experiment we have made in this line of humanitarian work, and trust it will not be the last.

The Old Settlers of Clinton county held their annual reunion at Mt. Pleasant Park, August 31. About six hundred people were in attendance.

Other societies hold frequent picnics here, notably the Mystic Workers of the World, who held their national convention here on July 27, and the Catholic picnic on July 4, both of which drew large numbers to our park from the city of Clinton and surrounding country.

The spirit of toleration and brotherly feeling is making its way in the world at large, and Spiritualist and churchman alike feel its vivifying influence. Let the good work go on.

DREAM PROVES A REALITY.

Woman Imagines She Is Being Strangled and Robbed—On Awakening Finds Money She Had Saved for Years Is Gone—Burglars Caught.

Paris, France, Aug. 19.—A trial at the Seine assizes yesterday revealed the story of the singular dream of Mme. Ella Boivine. She is 80 years of age, and keeps a little fishing tackle shop not far from the canal at St. Denis. She resided alone in two small rooms, did a good trade, and possessed a comfortable fortune. She was not afraid of burglars, as she did not believe anybody would suspect her of having money. One morning she was not seen bustling about her little shop, whereupon one of her neighbors entered her place and roused her.

The old woman declared that she had passed a bad night, that she had had a nightmare. "I dreamed that I was being strangled," she added. "I saw three men enter my shop with the intention of robbing me, and I felt their hands on my throat. The pillow fell on my face, and, of course, I imagined that I was being suffocated."

"But are you sure that your dream is not a reality?" asked the neighbor, who glanced around the room.

"Eh?" cried the old woman.

The neighbor told her that the window had been broken, and that all the drawers had been forced. In fact, three burglars had forced an entrance and had stolen gold, scrip, and jewels. One had seized Mme Boivine by the throat with the intention of strangling her, and as she fainted he believed her dead and left, after covering her face with a pillow.

The burglars were arrested twenty-four hours afterward, and were tried at the Seine assizes yesterday. One was sentenced to seven, another to fifteen, and the third man to twenty years' hard labor.

A CALL FOR TEACHERS.

There is a large field for healers and teachers in small towns. After a little study of "Healing Currents from the Battery of Life" (by Walter DeVoe), students start groups for study and realization of the healing power.

So helpful is this book that as many as 21 copies have been sold to a group formed to hear it read. Manifestations of healing are common where students unite to study and practice the instructions given in this wonderful book. Many are willing to pay for instruction in healing truth, but there is need of energetic persons to get them together.

Those who can successfully form groups in their own town among their friends will find enjoyable and profitable work doing the same in other towns.

Order a copy now and spread the glad tidings. Price $2. Special terms to those who can sell a number of copies through personal effort or letters.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32. CHICAGO, ILL., SEPT 23, 1905. NO. 826

STRONGLY EXPRESSED.

The New God of the Modern Theism.

We perceive that Spiritualist papers contain about as much Theism to the square foot as other papers. The writers of such literacure are converts from the churches, not yet entirely free from bondage to religious error, and seldom write an article for the press without some "God" in it—must have a god of some kind—by force of habit—have it in everything—educated that way.

They do not know what the word means, yet make it mean anything they wish—a liberty not taken with any other word in our language; and these various affirmations, meanings and connections, by comparison, make a horrid jargon of confusion, trash, rot and nonsense. There is nothing too absurd or fallacious for men to affirm of gods; and there are as many different god ideas as god believers.

When they aver "God is love—love is God," what god do they have in mind? Evidently the Christian god, because this is a quotation from the holy bible—reiterated by the "Divine Dunces" for centuries—not a fact that can be proved, but a religious dogma to be believed.

There is ten-fold more bible evidence to prove this god is hate, wrath, malevolence, than there is to prove love. The Christian god is the worst of all gods; well proven in history. If there is any love in him it is love of praise, authority, dominion, war, bloody sacrifice.

Thus saith the Lord: I come not to send peace on earth but a sword;" which has been carried into practical effect.

It is all well enough for people to have intellectual and moral ideals of love, goodness, truth; but God is the worst substitute for these words—it is anything else but love or truth—the most senseless, confused, uncertain word in our language.

The modern Theists have repudiated Jehovah, so they say, (sign of progression) nevertheless their god-idea sprung originally from teaching received in church or Sunday-school; and it is now so changed and improved that the attributes of Jehovah have disappeared. Gods change as men's minds change.

The god they now recognize and talk and write so much about is not any god of mythology. These gods have specific names and realms and are well defined, notwithstanding they are imaginary beings.

The modern Theists declare that the new modern deity is not a personal god. That is a mistake, proven by themselves, by their own words. They write it with capital G to make it a proper noun and want it understood that they have in mind a particular God. It is a thing of male gender, a "He—Him—Father"—marks and proofs of personality. Moreover, if men are the image, offspring, counterpart of this god, as alleged, it is a personal god, because men are persons.

This does not include women on account of sex. Fortunately woman is not a member of godhood or godhead; and this is one reason why women are better, purer, more beautiful and lovely than men—in Christendom.

Most assuredly this modern god is personal, and an ideal personage, yet they refuse to name it or say which god it is, or commit themselves to a specific god; but simply write it with capital G and let it go at that. (A cunning fraud). That is about as sensible as it would be to always write Man with capital M and claim that it stands for a particular individual.

No person can affirm anything of a god and know that he or she states the truth. It is not a matter of fact—it is a matter of faith.

According to Mythology there are many gods. Cupid and Venus, god and goddess of love, are only ideal images or imaginary beings.

When you say "God is love" which god is it? We suspect your-god-webs-on-the-brain are built upon the shifting sands of Christian ignorance.

After the study of Theism for many years I can give a correct definition of God on my own authority, equal to theological authority, which is theory, assumption, inference, assertion, hypothesis; and I will set it up in competition to all opposing definitions. God is nonsense—nothing, illusion, folly, deception, chimera, hallucination, superstition, a mental image, a figure of imagination, an ideal being that has no existence in fact.

Now if the reader does not like my definition, here is another which I approve, founded on faith, and it agrees exactly with all phases, dogmas and departments of Theism. "God is undefinable, incomprehensible, unknown, infinite, unknowable, supernatural."

"LITTLE MYSELF-AS-I-USED-TO-BE."

Sometimes when the work of day is done;
When the ebbing light from the west is gone;
When the present loosens its fetters fast,
And the freed heart leaps to its longed-for past;
When the twilight gathers and the shadows grow deep;
Out from the silence will timidly creep
A dear little girl whom I clearly see—
Little Myself-As-I-Used-To-Be!

She talks of her school-days, her lessons, her toys;
Her daily duties, her daily joys;
Her holidays glad, when no work is done;
Vacation time with its frolic and fun;
Thanksgiving, and Easter; the Christmas-tide;
With stockings hung in the chimney side;
Laughing loud as she stands by my knee—
Little Myself-As-I-Used-To-Be!

Often she prattles of childish plays,
And the little friends of those bygone days.
Some are wanderers, some grown old,
With weariness, labor and sorrow untold;
Some in life's joy, their youth yet keep;
And some in the church-yard are fast asleep.
But she talks of them all, with childish glee—
Little Myself-As-I-Used-To-Be!

Oh, fair is the world in which she dwells,
Where goblins and witches yet weave their spells;
Where mirth and laughter all clouds dispel,
And troubles, like fairy tales, all end well;
Her days are all bright ones; her skies ever blue,
Her lovers are all faithful, her friends all are true.
Never a care nor a sorrow knows she—
Little Myself-As-I-Used-To-Be!

But sometimes—sometimes she lifts her eyes
To my face, with a kind of puzzled surprise
"What have you done," she asks of me;
"With my faith and my truth and my purity?
With the trustful love for God and your kind,
That I gave to you when you left me behind?"
These are the questions she puts to me—
Little Myself-As-I-Used-To-Be!
"Oh, dear little girl," I answer low;
"I lost them all, long years ago.
Amid life's bustle, its heat and its dust,
I lost your innocence, truth and trust;
And I found at an hour when I needed them most,
That your faith and your love were also lost.
Little remains that you gave to me—
Little Myself-As-I-Used-To-Be!"

"But we'll both creep out of this life, some day;
I—tired of work; you—tired of play;
And perhaps we'll find on that other shore,
Things we have mourned as lost before;
Simplicity, innocence, love and truth,
The trustful faith that belongs to youth.
And, clothed in these, through eternity
I'll be Myself-As-I-Used-To-Be."

—Mrs. Carrie Cosby Fulton.

WHEN BAND PLAYS SHE FAINTS.

Unique Effect Upon Herkimer, N. Y., Maid of Musical Delectabilities of Village Musicians.

Owing to something, whether an ailment in herself or the village band's playing, she cannot fully decide, Miss Mary Putnam of Herkimer, N. Y., becomes unconscious whenever the "band boys" begin their musical delectabilities within her hearing. It wasn't learned until recently, when she was found unconscious in front of her home.

Miss Putnam, after being restored by two hours' labor of a physician, said she had gone downtown to see a fireworks display, not knowing the band intended to discourse its sweet strains. As soon as she saw the band make ready she fled for home.

But she couldn't make it. She almost reached her house when the blast of the village band smote her and she toppled over.

Who can explain this phenomenon?

INQUIRER.

THE ORIGIN OF EVIL.

A Question Not Yet Fully Decided—Can It Be Traced to a God in Its Final Analysis?

Mr. Goldwin Smith's paper on "The Origin of Evil" very properly terms it "a part of the mystery of the universe as to which all that can be said is, It is a mystery still."

It is an old question, found in the world's oldest written records. Antiquity must have been gray when it was first mooted; yet doubtless it has been satisfactorily answered again and again and as often again forgotten in the ebb and flow of the ages, and the rise and fall of nations; for still, though men learn, they do not remember.

In the economy of the universe we cannot fail to observe that everything seems conjoined or related by doubles: Day and night, sunshine and shadow; the positive and negative electric and magnetic energies; the gravitation and levitation of the earth's substance operating between it and the sun by the law of mutual exchange; the ebb and flow of the tides; the heart of man, with its double cavities and pulsations—systole and diastole—and double vascular system respondent thereto.

So, too, in the moral and mental world, love and hatred, peace and war, good and evil. God and devil, are in eternal opposition to each other; yet in the ultimate of each and every encounter

Ever the right comes uppermost,
And ever is justice done.

Now, let us suppose present conditions changed. Let us abolish all contrasts; let us have all day without night; all sunshine and no shadows; all harmony in nature and no discord; no conflict of opinions among men; no sin, no sorrow, no pain or discomfort or body or mind; no regrets for the past, and no care, forethought, nor anxiety about the future. In all the daily life let only a languid iteration reign. How long would such a state be tolerated?

Good and evil are set before us in the world. To become healthy, happy and godlike in body and soul we must learn self-control at whatever cost of suffering and pain—must learn to choose the good and refuse the evil. "The hells of humanity," says Koresh, "are spheres of discipline, and are essential to development and progress. Through these hells humanity incorporates all the fallacies and evils of being for the purpose of experience and contrast." "When men," says this writer, "have progressed through experience of fallacy and evil, in the natural and spiritual spheres sufficiently to have incorporated all that is false and evil, and are thus enabled to contrast the evil with the good, that is, the opposite of evil, they then become the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. In the rejection of the evil and the appropriation of the good, man becomes the fruit of the Tree of Life."

And so reads the ancient record: "Yahve Elohim said: 'Behold the man (ha-Adam, the bi-une man) is become as one of us to know good and evil.' Why this plural expression, "one of us"? It deserves attention.

But as to the origin of evil: It will perhaps startle some readers to find that there are very direct and positive declarations in the Scriptures setting forth that God Himself is the author of evil. In the prophet Isaiah, xiv. 7, we read: "I form the light and create darkness; I make peace and create evil. I, the Lord, do all these things." And in Amos, iii. 6: "Shall there be evil in a city and the Lord hath not done it?"

Now, how can we reconcile the origin of evil in God with the fact of the goodness of God? I suggest as an answer, if I have not alredy made sufficiently clear the principle that good and evil are correlates of each other, and appertain as much and as certainly to the Divine as to the human nature, constituting the voluntary and involuntary or polarized energies of the microcosmic as well as the vidual man.

INSPIRED THOUGH VERY YOUNG.

Two Little Girls Who Exhibit the Highest Plane of Mediumship—An Account of Them in the San Francisco Examiner.

For cleverness in composing rhyme and in drawing, two little Los Angeles girls, Eva and Anna Peiren, have been awarded prizes by the children's department of the Woman's Home Companion.

These little ones won easily, although there were competing hundreds of boys and girls, many of them older, from all parts of the country.

Little Eva is only 5 years old, but already has shown a startlingly wonderful talent for composing poetry, or rather rhyme, and gives promise of a brilliant future.

Young in Years, Advanced in Art.

Her sister Anna is "grown up," according to Eva's standards, having reached the mature age of nine years, and is no less talented than Eva, although along other lines. She makes drawings that almost anyone twice her age would be proud to claim. When Anna's mother told her about the offer of prizes for the best drawings she at once selected her subject from among those given and began her drawing. Eva didn't propose to have Anna win all the prizes, and finding that there was one offered for the best rhyme by a child, tossed her pretty curls and said she guessed she'd win that.

Instead of entering the competition for children under twelve, as her mother suggested, this little miss of five calmly declared that she would try for the prize offered for children over twelve, as she liked the subjects better.

Dedicated to the Rag Doll.

So for Anna's drawing of "The Rag Doll" she composed these lines without any help from any one:

"First time I saw my Lulu,
She was sitting in a chair,
Because my dear old Santy
Had come and put her there,
Her hair was painted yellow,
Her eyes as blue as blue could be,
And so big and round and funny,
But not a bit could she see.
But I took her in my arms,
And I loved her right away,
And I've got what's left of Lulu,
In my treasure box today."

The little ones live with their parents Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Peiren, at 823½ West Eighth street. In speaking of their talents yesterday Mrs. Peiren said:

"It seems natural for Eva to compose and for Anna to draw. Eva's talent amounts to an inspiration at times. She will not make or repeat rhymes to order and we cannot coax her to do it, but when she feels like it she will rattle them off. She does not remember them aftermards, and if I don't run and get a pencil, and take them down they are lost. Anna probably takes her talent from me. I paint a great deal, but as I have a young baby have no time to teach her. She has just picked it up herself."

Delights in Mud Pastry.

One does not always suspect little Eva of being a budding poet as, for instance, when she was asked what she would rather do than anything else, instead of saying, "Writing rhyme," she announced, "Make mud pies."

Both children are refreshingly natural and childish—not a bit like the ordinary forward child of this generation. After seeing them is inclined to think that if Ella Wheeler Wilcox had seen them first she would not have written:

"Where have they gone to, the little girls,
With their natural manners and natural curls?
Little old women in plenty I find,
Mature of manners and old in mind."

The prizes the Peiren children received were books.

SACREDNESS OF LIFE.

Pleading the Cause of the Innocent Creatures.

The nations rejoice that peace is declared between Russia and Japan. If we would hasten the time when peace shall be universal and permanent, we must teach the children by precept and example, the sacredness of life. Boys seem to think frogs and toads are their lawful prey, although the little creatures are great exterminators of vermin and insects.

The suggestion that has gone down through the ages from the bible account of the curse pronounced against the serpent for tempting Mother Eve, has been the cause of the death of many harmless snakes. It is not generally known that the magnetism of the snake will cure goiter, which at the present time is quite prevalent, and is pronounced incurable by many physicians. Take a live snake by the extremities and rub the tumor gently and thoroughly with the snake, then let it go alive. Two or three treatments are usually sufficient for a permanent cure. The same treatment quite likely would cure severe cases of rheumatism and other disorders. When we look upon all life which is not a pest, as sacred, and realize the good the magnetism of the snake can do, we will no longer look upon them with terror. The time may come when the snake will be protected by law for its medicinal qualities.

Each year the sportsman looks forward to the time when the deer season will open, not because he is in need of meat, but for the pleasure of killing the beautiful creatures. If it were not for our strict game laws the deer and wild fowls would soon be exterminated, the same as the buffalo has been, excepting the few which have found protection in government parks.

Hunters invade the home nature has provided for wild beasts, simply for the sport of killing them. We should teach kindness instead of cruelty.

"A necessary act incurs no blame.
Not so when in their proper bounds,
And guiltless of offense they range the air,
Or take their pastime in the spacious fields.
There they are privileged,
And he who hunts or harms them there
Is guilty of a wrong.
Disturbs the economy of nature's realm
Which, when she formed,
Designed them this abode.
The sum is this:
If man's convenience, health or safety interfere,
His rights are paramount, and must extinguish theirs."

BIRDS OF ILL OMEN.

Strange and Inexplicable Happenings in Connection With Birds of Ill Omen, Inducing One to Believe That For a Time They May Be Controlled by Prophetic Spirits Who Wish to Impart a Warning.

Besides the spectre of the "White Lady" [says Light] which appears at the Hofburg at Vienna, every time that misfortune is about to overtake the Imperial family of Austria, and which last appeared in the winter of 1898 before the tragedy of Meyerling, the apparition of a raven is always the harbinger of ill to the person to whom it appears.

On the day of the Emperor Francis Joseph's coronation in 1848, a score of ravens hovered over the city of Olmutz, and did not fly away until after the ceremony was over. When the same monarch's brother, Maximilian, and his consort were about to embark at Miramar to go to Mexico as Emperor and Empress of that country, a raven appeared, hovered above the heads of the Imperial couple during their last walk on the quay from which they were to embark, and afterwards perched upon the marble seat upon which they sat down, and from which it could not be driven.

When the Archduchess Maria Christina was married to Alphonso XII. of Spain, in 1875, a raven suddenly made its appearance and persistently followed the royal carriage to the cathedral. The bird of ill omen hovered over the church, and only disappeared when the ceremony had come to an end.

Two days before the Empress Elizabeth of Austria was assassinated at Geneva by the anarchist Luccheni, she had taken an excursion with her reader, Professor Barker, from the hotel at which she was staying, along the shore of the lake at Territet. Seating themselves on a rock which commanded a magnificent view of the Alps, Professor Barker began to read Marion Crawford's celebrated romance, "Corleone." The Empress had peeled a peach, and was offering half of it to the Professor, when suddenly a raven appeared, flew straight towards the Empress, and with a vigorous stroke of his wing caused the peach to fly out of her hand. Professor Barker, who had already heard at Vienna that the appearance of a raven to a member of the Hapsburg family was always the precursor of some great evil, rose hastily, pale with fright, ready to run. But the Empress began to laugh, and said: "Come, don't be frightened. I am not superstitious. If evil is to befall me, I shall not be able to avoid it. Besides, you know what I think about death. Death has no terrors for me. Death is the deliverance for which I have waited with impatience these ten years."

Barker replied: "The appearance of this bird of ill omen disturbs me immensely, all the more so as I had a dream last night concerning my deceased mother. God grant that I may be mistaken, but some great calamity is about to happen very shortly."

The Empress shrugged her shoulders, and replied: "I hope, my dear Professor, that you do not believe in dreams. However, nothing can frighten me any longer. I have become a fatalist. What is to happen will necessarily happen." Two days afterwards the Empress was stabbed by Luccheni.

Prince Meschtscherski, editor of the journal "Grashdanin," which appears at St. Petersburg, relates the following circumstance in his "Memoirs":

"I remember also that there was much talk at St. Petersburg about a black bird which appeared three days before the death of the Emperor Nicholas I. This strange bird chose, as its resting place, one of the windows of the Emperor's bedroom, gave forth from time to time lugubrious cries, at the same time flapping its wings, and did not leave the window until the moment of the Emperor's death."

GOD.

Infinite Mind! Thou without name or fame—
Supreme Inhabitant of time and space!
Eternal and undying!—first and last—
Immortal soul of future, present and past;
Divine epitome of great and small—
From all apart, and yet a part of all;
Unbounded source! Vast and Unfathomed mind!
Thyself unknown, nor by thyself defined.

How shall my spirit to thy presence go?
Thou art beside me, through all things below;
Thou art above me, with me every where—
Within, without, and in the ambient air,
That which I am, with whom I do exist,
That on whose strength my soul and flesh subsist—
My slave and master, me, myself and mine
Heart of my breast, life of my heart, and thine!
Immeasurable, unending, unbegun,
Incessant, indestructible, undone!
Deep as the space of which thou art the soul;
Vast as the powers of which thou art the whole.

All-monstrous mind—thou universal womb!
Creating, and consigning to the tomb.
Quintescent Spirit of all life and power,
Eternal guardian of our transient hour!
Soul of infinity, whence all descend,
And on whose life all finite things depend!
Mind of all minds! Soul of each carnal clod,
Dyaus Pitar, Jehovah, Zeus—God!

This poem was given to me by a friend, as coming from his brother, not giving the author's name.

And bright as roses by the road,
And near to me as song's sweet tune!

VISIONS OF THE DYING.

Convincing Proof of the Truth of Spiritualism.

The copious extracts which were published in The Progressive Thinker of February 25, under the caption of "Visions of the Dying," recognize a great truth, which is the most convincing proof of the philosophy of Spiritualism. In the same connection, The Progressive Thinker says, that "The saintly and pure of life, are always close to heaven. In the last moments of life they are, in many cases, permitted visions of another sphere. This has been abundantly proved by recorded exclamations of dying persons, who apparently have been translated to another life, and at the very instant of earthly dissolution been greeted by loved ones who have gone before."

There is hardly an intelligent adult person on the face of the earth, who has not had more or less convincing evidence that the dying are often conscious that they are surrounded by the spirits of those who have, before them, passed through the portals of death.

At such a supreme moment, the departing soul can have no possible motive or object to deceive. The most colossal Ananias who ever breathed, would most likely espouse the truth, in the hour of earthly dissolution. When the dying speak to their friends who have gone before them, it is because they fully believe that those friends are with them. The motives of the dying are removed from all criticism. The sincerity of their belief, that they are with the loved ones of heaven, cannot be questioned.

Are the dying mistaken? The proof is too abundant, clear and continuous to admit of the idea, that a mistake can be possible. Those only who approach the end of earth life, in the full possession of their mental powers and spiritual attributes, are welcomed by their angel friends as they leave the house of clay. The dying are not mistaken. With a clear spiritual sight they see

"The band of angels swift and bright,
That pass, but cannot wake your sight,
Down trooping from the clouded skies."

Now what is the glorious implication of the enormous mass of evidence which has been accumulating for centuries, which demonstrates that the dying do often commune with and see their friends, who have passed over the so-called dark river before them? If there is one single place, in the great universe of God, where the Here and the Hereafter meet, it is at the golden gate of death, where the emancipated spirit passes on from the stern struggle for human existence to the next sphere of life, prepared for the soul of man. The two worlds, so to speak, freely commingle at the altar of death.

There is nothing more natural than that our lived ones await us in the spirit world; and when the brief period of our earthly life draws to a close, and the merciful angel of death hovers near, they will gather around us to greet us upon our advent among them.

Is it any wonder that the dying become so spiritualized, when about to quit their earthly tenements, as to be able to see and commune with their heavenly friends who have come to welcome them to that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens?

Yes, at death the two worlds touch elbows. They meet, not on a physical but on a Spiritual plane. And the overwhelming evidence which we have of this happy meeting, solves the great questions of the immortality of the soul in favor of the immortality, and that the souls of the departed can and do, under favorable conditions, communicate with those still in the flesh.

LIFE AND DEATH.

How strange that life and death so near have been—
Thro' centuries since man on earth was sent;
Yet love has followed fear, and discontent
Has routed greed and spoiled the feasts of sin;
The dream of good his heart did always win,
And courage and high purpose to him lent,
And he to some diviner state was bent,
A voice sweet calling heard above earth's din!
Life looks on life and loves to have it so;
Death holds the charm of what perchance may be;
Life makes us glad with things we have and know,
Death fills our eyes with hope of what we'll see;
It is a round of rest and stirring strife,
A night and day, this show of death and life!

The Likeness of a Little Girl Appears on a Window Pane.

At the home of Mr. C. E. Rodgers, at Winona, Fayette county, W. Va., which was the scene of so much excitement some time ago over the forming of a woman's face on the window glass in a certain window of the house, people are now aroused over the picture of a child, a little girl which has appeared in one corner of the window.

It is remembered that about a year ago the picture of a woman mysteriously appeared on the glass to the extreme wonderment of every one, and stayed there until the glass was removed from the window. This mysterious phenomenon caused the greatest excitement throughout the country and excited a great deal of comment from the newspapers.

After a certain time the glass was taken out of the window, with the picture of the woman on it, and put away, because the people living in the house were greatly annoyed by visitors from all parts of the country who came there to see the wonderful formation on the window pane.

For a long time the window was left open without having new glass put in, it being feared the image would reappear, but just within the last few days it was decided to put in a new glass. The glass was accordingly placed in the window and now, to the wonder and astonishment of everyone, the face of a little girl has appeared in one corner. People are flocking from all parts of the country to gaze upon one of the greatest curiosities ever on exhibition.

ON THE DIVINITY OF JESUS.

Some Very suggestive Thoughts on the Subject.

To the Editor:—Please pardon me if I take up a little of your time with a few thoughts which came to me and insisted upon being written down.

We are constantly met with the statement that Jesus was the divine and only begotten son of God, and are reminded of all he has done for the human race. Christians point to him and triumphantly cry, "Only God could or would endure such suffering." And they say he left a home and a throne in highest heaven to bear all this for us.

Let us suppose for a few moments that all the Christians say of him is true; where is the great merit of it?

Christ, with his father, was worshiped by a few Israelites, and no others could come to God until Christ paved the way with his blood.

When was there ever a ruler who was not desirous of extending his kingdom? If God knows all things he knew that such an act as he contemplated doing would extend his kingdom immeasurably. So, out of the countless millions of the years of his life he took thirty-three and devoted them to man, whom he had created, and who, by the very fact of that creation, was entitled to the very best that God could do for him. We are told that a thousand years are but a day to God, and reckoned on that basis what a very small part of a day was devoted to the object of saving mankind. And let me say right here that there are countless instances of mortals who have devoted many days to the saving of just one life, and they did not expect to be worshiped eternally for it, either.

Christians say "Never man suffered as he did!" and then they tell of two others who suffered exactly the same death at the same time.

"But," they say, "he was bearing great mortal suffering, even the sins of all the world." And I ask, why should that thought cause him such intense suffering, when it was for that object and that alone that he came?

And of course he knew that it was only for a little while, and then his power and glory would be boundless.

Oh, the absurdity of the thought, that a God could put on mortality and suffer as a man would, and know all the time that he was God!

Would not the knowledge that he was God, and of all the good his suffering would bring about, take the keen edge off the most intense pain?

Was Jesus divine? Yes; and so is every man or woman who will let the best of him or herself out to help and bless the world.

I would not belittle onee act of Jesus' entire life, for so far as we have any record of it it was devoted to the uplifting of mankind, but let us forever throw aside the thought of him as a God, seeking worshipers, and think of him in that purer, higher light—a man devoting his life that his fellowmen might be made happier and better.

Let us follow the precious example he has left us, and bear always in mind that we are as much the children of God as he was, and that if we will, we may obtain as much help from our Father as he did. We may not all be able to do the same things that he did, but what of that? Each of us has his own work to do, and whether it be the discerning of spirits, healing of the sick, speaking with strange tongues, or only simply staying at home with our daily toil, let us do it with all our might, and our light, though smaller, will shine as brightly as did his.

THE RIDDLE OF THE AGES.

A Solution of the Problem of the Origin of Life.

Whatever the nature and source of the life principle, we can only know it as it manifests itself through matter.

These manifestations are observed, first, in the building of organized forms out of unorganized chemical compounds; second, in the producing of spontaneous movements in those organized forms.

These two classes of vital phenomena cover every manifestation of life force, and wherever these are observed there the life principle is at work.

If we think of reproduction we are only repeating the first process—that is, the building of organized form out of unorganized chemical compounds.

The parents are only the agents for assembling the chemical compounds in suitable environment where the life principle can build the organism.

If we think of nutritive assimilation, then the first process is only being repeated in an organism already formed.

Under the second division of life's manifestations, spontaneous movements, we have, first, the power to change the attitude or physical position by an impulse arising within the organism itself. This impulse may be excited by external stimuli, or by internal desire. And second, the receiving and transferring of nutritive material to various parts of the organism, either for its own nutrition or for the building of progeny.

In my experiments I take unorganized chemical compounds—that is, mineral compounds, and water, which is also an inorganic compound, and build up life-forms without the aid of similar antecedent life-forms, which could not happen without the presence and operation of the life principle.

These life-forms could not have grown to any size, however small, without manifesting in their production the fundamental principles of life's vital processes, namely, nutritive assimilation and spontaneous movement. Their existence alone is prima facie evidence of the presence of life. Moreover, I have frequently seen them change their physical position by spontaneous movements.

It is quite impossible to present in writing the conviction of a truth fixed in the mind by years of careful observation of related phenomena. To see a photograph of a plant or animal, or even to observe it through the microscope, does not fix that conviction upon the mind that is essential to the cordial reception of a new truth. Therefore I do not ask the reader at this time either to accept or indorse what is here presented as the principle of abiogenesis. I believe it to be a solution of the riddle of the ages—the beginning of life-forms on this planet of organic matter.—Dr. Charles W. Littlefield, in Harper's Weekly.

LIVING THE LIFE.

The Phrase May Have Many Significations.

Occasionally, among modern thinkers and writers, we meet with the expression, "to live the life." The phrase is indefinite and among those who use it, it may have many significations. To some what they call society, a round of frivolous and idle amusements; to others business pursuits and struggles for wealth and power appear as living the life of their choice. Apart from these there are several kinds of external manifestations of life which may seem more worthy of living. Sometimes with slightly greater precision it is of "the higher life" that we hear or read. But what constitutes the higher life is a question which may be met with a variety of answers.

It must always mean more of, or a fuller unfoldment of, a kind of life we already possess. The man who attempts a higher life, or desires to do so, must mentally compare it with the life he is at the time living. It is, at least in his conception, higher than his present mode of existence. This is a noble aspiration, even if not extended beyond the range of the mentality, the acquisition of intellectual knowledge and the virtues of civic and family relationship. The gifts of mind and social morality are precious. Their greatest, because permanent, value however, consists in their inability to satisfy the soul, which causes them to act as spurs to the attainment of more enduring good and fuller expression of power.

Either at this point or later a false view may be presented which will need to be corrected before further progress can be made. If we measure the higher life we seek by that lived by some other person we are sure to fall into grievous error. We must erect our own standard. If we abandon it for the standard of another, if we endeavor to shape our conduct or our thoughts after another's ideal, we shall lose the realization of our individual possibilities. If we imagine that we have attained to a higher elevation than some other in the spiritual life, we have sunk so much lower by the error of our judgment.

The soul that would climb the heights of spiritual perfection must keep her eyes fixed on things above and grasp every means she can perceive within her reach, by which she may raise herself to a loftier position. It is not the ground she has traveled over or the slips made on the way that concern her now. It is the next point above her to which she can attain. Not reminiscences of the path, but escape from it is the object of her toils, of her struggle, of her existence. It is not the lengthening distance from the next point above in which she is most interested. It is not whether her neighbor soul is passing her or being passed by her that concerns her. It is the progress she is herself making.

This does not mean that by a perfection of selfishness we must besiege heaven for our own admittance therein regardless of who may be excluded. It means that we may not expect to sneak in under the shadow of another or be carried in upon his shoulder.,

The true life has breadth as well as height. It has unlimited possibilities in the infinity and eternity in which it is. It is not our business now to judge where our neighbor is, but where we can get, and how we can get there. And somehow and sometime we discover that in getting there we have been an inspiration to some other to get there too.

HAD A VISION OF HEAVEN.

It Was So Beautiful—Singing and Sunshine, Light, Flowers and Beauty Indescribable.

I will relate a vision my mother had a week before her death. She was entirely conscious at the time and insisted it was a dream.

She said she felt herself rising toward the sky enveloped in a huge cloud. Looking up she saw a black-robed figure awaiting her. He assisted her from the cloud. When she asked where she was he said she was on the way to heaven.

They walked a short distance surrounded by clouds, he leading her gently on, when they reached a gate, over which was written, "Knock and it shall be opened unto you." She knocked, and the gate was opened by a white-robed figure. She said she wished to enter, when a voice within answered: "Not now, my child. Thy work on earth is not finished."

"I am so weak and tired," she pleaded. "I cannot go further."

"The Lord will give you strength," the voice answered, and the door was gently closed.

She sank exhausted. The man in black lifted her back to the clouds and disappeared. She found herself gradually being borne to earth.

The family at the bedside were startled, hearing her say: "I was at the very gates of heaven and God would not let me in." When asked what she saw inside the gate she could only say: "Oh, it was so beautiful—all singing and sunshine, light and flowers and beauty indescribable."

PERFECTION.

I plucked a purple pansy—
'Twas beautiful to see;
Its little face seemed filled with life,
And gently smiled on me.

I looked across the distance
Against the dark'ning sky,
And saw the great, tall mountains,
Where heavy clouds passed by.

Majestic in their outline,
And wonderful to see,
Their greatness brought a stillness,
A reverence o'er me.

For in this velvet pansy
Now slowly fading, there
I saw the same perfection—
The self-same holy care.

That fashioned the great mountains:
In all their mighty grace—
The hand that wrought the splendor
Marked well the pansy's place.

The life of each is perfect
In low or lofty place,
The God who raised the mountains,
Wrought out the pansy's face.

The Pertinent Views of a Prominent Spiritualist.

L. O. Hull of Ft. Wayne, Ind., is a prominent Spiritualist, and he feels deeply indignant at the imposition practiced upon him at the Chesterfield Camp and elsewhere.

The Progressive Thinker is the Only Spiritualist paper, probably, in the United States today that would give Mr. Hull an opportunity to be heard in his own behalf.

The fake mediums of the Camp made war on The Progressive Thinker, and that fact alone generated a bad influence, and the Camp did not pay expenses, there being a deficit of some $800. There will be a larger deficit next year than this, unless the Management keep off the ground those who exchange tests, and materializing mediums who use artificial toggery.

Last year a prominent Spiritualist of Anderson wrote to us that one-half the mediums on the grounds were doing fake work. Their war on The Progressive Thinker was marked, and now the Association is reaping what it sowed, and the end is not yet. The Progressive Thinker is in favor of ALL HONEST MEDIUMS. There is no getting around that. The fakes may be known at all the camps by their covert or open opposition to this paper, and where that is allowed a blight will strike any camp. It has begun to strike Chesterfield, and with the fake element predominant in the future as in the past, the blight will take deeper root, and no set of officers can prevent it, only by the weeding-out process.

I spent nearly three weeks at Chesterfield camp lately, and attended a seance where "materialization" was advertised. There were sixteen in the circle and the forms that came out (never more than one at a time) WERE NOTHING MORE NOR LESS THAN THE MEDIUM, a woman, in different disguises; the manager stood guard over her to prevent detection. The last form to come was dressed in the trappings and feathered headgear of an Indian chief, but the medium could not hide her shape; we could see the broad hips and rounded bust, and when two war-whoops were given in a woman's voice, THE FARCE WAS COMPLETE.

One woman seemed afraid, I said "Chief, I am not afraid of you; come and shake hands and I will go into the cabinet with you."

He fled into it alone and the seance ended.

We left and one man was very outspoken in the matter and early next morning he got word, that if we would say nothing about it, that our money would be refunded He replied, "We were not to be muzzled."

I visited quite a number of genuine mediums of different phases and witnessed phenomena under conditions where fraud and trickery were out of the question, and I contend that the management should allow no other kind to be given on the grounds; to do so, is to endorse it and become a party to the transaction, as all mediums are under its auspices.

To talk about "protecting our mediums" is all right and just, so far as it applies to genuine mediums; but the public is SORELY IN NEED OF PROTECTION FROM THE IMPOSTORS AND MOUNTEBANKS WHO DO THEIR VILE WORK UNDER THE NAME OF SPIRITUALISM. To protect them would be treason alike to genuine mediumship, to the camp and to Spiritualism itself.

To me the cause is sacred, and the man who is so low in the scale of being as to play on the heartstrings by personating our loved ones, is the vilest wretch that God ever permitted to darken the earth. THIS IS THE UNPARDONABLE SIN.

When an investigator encounters one of these impostors, what is the result? He goes away feeling in his heart, that all mediums are false and Spiritualism a delusion.

Four years ago, I spent the summer in the Alleghenies with my family; my wife and I went to Lily Dale camp-meeting and we went to a seance for "materialization." Winans was the medium; he came out dressed as a woman. We could see his iron gray moustache through the veil he wore. He towered nearly a head above the little old man who introduced him as his "spirit wife," and I wondered then if there was any limit to human credulity. Winans finally called me to the cabinet and said, "You don't believe this?" I replied, "no, indeed." He then said, "I want to magnetize you," and he patted me and made passes. I think he tried to hypnotize me, and failing, asked if I was afraid to go into the cabinet. I told him I was not, and he led me into it and dropped the curtain. He then said: "I am the control. The medium is in his chair entranced." He then took both my hands in one of his, and leaning his head away as far as possible put my hands over his face, saying, "This is the medium." I jerked my hands loose, took hold of him with one of them and felt the empty chair with the other and said, "There is no control; you are the whole show." He then whispered, "Say nothing about it, and I will give you writing," etc. I said, "I want none of such mediumship," and went away and reported him.

I notice lately that at one of his materializing seances a form came out and one of the sitters caught and held it, and when the lights were turned up, he had Winans, hard and fast in his clutches, with wigs and other disguises on his person.

What, then, do we see? A Spiritualist—think of it—tries to defend him and justify his conduct; actually tries to reconcile the facts with genuine mediumship, reason and common sense. He claims that it takes so much strength and effort on the part of spirits to materialize the forms that Winans very considerately spared them the trouble by doing the whole business himself. But you ask, "What about the wigs and other disguises?" He claims that it also taxes the strength of spirits to materialize them, too, so Winans furnishes them ready-made. This is certainly a great saving of spirit power.

But why conceal the wigs and other disguises? Why not hang them up in plain view in the seance room? Why advertise and accept pay for materialization and then not give it?

Winans' apologist claims too much; everything is done and furnished by Winans. There was really nothing left to be done by spirit power. He did it all himself, hence it was not a spiritual manifestation at all. That is the whole thing in a nut shell. Winans' defender has reasoned it to this conclusion, in which I heartily concur, although we reach it by widely different processes of reasoning.

I believe that the man who shuts his eyes, opens his mouth and swallows down everything done in the name of Spiritualism, has abandoned rational self-control.

The false medium is very wise; he advertises "materialization," and after you are seated in the circle and he is sure of your money, his manager will tell you that he does not know whether you will get materialization or personation; forms will come and go in a dim religious light and if you catch and hold one of them, you are sure to have the medium (?) who will tell you that this particular one was a personation; you are expected, however, as a rational human being to believe that all those you did not catch and hold were genuine materializations.

Is not this the very quintessence of fanaticism?

What do you think of it? And this thing is done in the name of Spiritualism which boasts that in it alone is found a scientific demonstration of a future life.

Don't you think it high time for us to cast out these frauds and impostors? I do, and this purification should come from within; better far to do it ourselves by showing up the frauds in our own ranks, than to have it done, as it surely will be done by the secular papers in sensational reports sent broadcast over the land.

Spiritualist condemn the church for shielding ministers who go wrong, but when a fraudulent medium is caught in the very act, some of them will make a wild and frantic effort to conceal the truth, and their silly, absurd and ridiculous excuses sound like "a story told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing," yet there are people who will swallow the stuff and like Oliver Twist, "long for more." To defend fraudulent mediums, therefore, is to make of truth an outcast; place a premium on hypocrisy and imposture; discourage honest, genuine mediumship and to degrade the very name of Spiritualism.

Thank God that The Progressive Thinker stands for purity in Spiritualism. IT HAS THE COURAGE OF ITS CONVICTIONS. IT DEFENDS THE GOOD AND TRUE MEDIUMS AND EXPOSES THE IMPOSTORS. THEREFORE IT HAS THE SUPPORT OF SPIRITUALISTS WHO STAND ON THE SOLID ROCK OF GOD'S ETERNAL TRUTH, WHILE THOSE WHO CLANK THE CHAINS OF ERROR AND FALSEHOOD ARE MADLY TEARING THEIR HAIR AND SHRIEKING ANATHEMAS AT IT.

"No rogue e'er felt the halter draw
With good opinion of the law."

Keep the good work going, Brother Francis, as we want none but genuine mediums, because phenomena is what gives to Spiritualism its vitalizing force; it is the portal through which we all pass into the temple. Without it, our grand philosophy would never get a hearing. All honor then to our true mediums, the evangels of Spiritualism—divinely appointed message bearers between the two worlds, and let us hope that the day is not far distant when their fair names will no longer be blackened by the impostors who do their vile work under the sacred name of mediumship.

Now, in conclusion, permit me to state that our camp-meetings are managed by some of the wisest and best men and women in our ranks, and if the public cannot go there and find genuine mediumship—and nothing else—in God's name where can we go for it. I hope to see the camp-meeting the "Mecca" of Spiritualism, where we can make yearly pilgrimages to commune with our loved ones, knowing in our hearts, that there at least we shall find genuine mediumship pure and undefiled.

MINNESOTA CONVENTION.

Report of the Eighth Annual Convention of the State Spiritualist Association of Minnesota.

To the Editor:—The sessions of the eighth annual convention of the State Spiritualist Association of Minnesota closed with the Sunday evening meeting, Sept. 10, in the Unitarian church. It is but just to say that this has been one of the most successful conventions we have had here in Minnesota, in point of attendance, and efficiency of work done. Many societies throughout the state were represented by able delegates and officers; with the result that perhaps a greater amount of harmony has been infused into the ranks of organized Spiritualism than has existed for some time.

Some changes have been made in the personnel of the executive board, but none that will not aid in prosecuting the work for the ensuing year with much vigor. Several new departures have been made this year, one of which was the throwing open to the public of the church doors, and the cordial invitation to the public to come and partake of the feast of good things.

Aside from the regular routine work of the Convention proper, a splendid program was prepared for the evening sessions; music and song abounded, and the work of all concerned was of such an order as to attract the highest praise from the audiences assembled. It is enough to say that the music was under the direction of the Zumbachs; this is a guarantee of its excellence. Also the musical program was greatly embellished by the work of Prof. Zoedler, Miss L. Swanson, and singers and musicians from the Minneapolis Dramatic Club.

The speakers were, Rev. Moses Hull, Will J. Erwood, Mrs. Carrie Tryon, and Mrs. S. M. Lowell. The mediums who brought the messages from the spirit friends who have "gone before" were, Miss Wickstrom, Mrs. Buehler, Mrs. John Sauer, Mrs. Talcott, Mrs. Mamie White, Mrs. Virginia Lyon, Mrs. Peake and Mrs. Francis Wheeler. Also Dr. and Mrs. Noyes, of New York, who have just come to Minneapolis, were active in the deliberations for the good or the cause.

Mr. Hull's work was very cordially received, as was that of the workers in general. Sunday evening at which Mr. Hull gave the closing address, he was greeted by the largest audience which has ever listened to one of our Convention speakers in the history of the association. This speaks eloquently of the esteem in which this faithful worker is held.

A set of very appropriate resolutions was unanimously adopted by the Convention; it is hoped they will meet with the approval of all who read them.

The interest in the work of the Convention has shown that Minnesota is determined to take hold of the cause as it has never done before, and will speak out in no uncertain manner in the near future. The greatest effort is to be made to instill into the minds of one and all the necessity of a more thorough and scientific study of the phenomenon of mediumship, to the end that the charlatanism which has crept into our ranks can be thoroughly and fully eliminated.

Space will not permit the proper mention of all the factors which combined to swell the success of this meeting. It is enough to say that everyone who attended the meeting left, feeling that they had been filled with spiritual and intellectual truths of the highest order.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows:

President, J. S. Maxwell; vice-president, J. P. Whitwell; secretary, Frank E. Irvine; treasurer, J. R. Foster; trustees, H. Hegdahl, G. W. Bush, Asa Talcott, Rolla Stubbs and C. P. Follett.

A glance over the resolutions appended hereto will give an idea of the work contemplated for this year. Not the least of our work is the steps taken to prepare for the National Convention which convenes here in the Unitarian Church, October 17, 18, 19, 20. The visitors will find that we have not been asleep, and will receive a royal welcome to this, our great Convention city.

Fraternally,
FRANK E. IRVINE,
Secretary.

Home Address, 563 St. Peter Street, St. Paul, Minn.

Report of Committee on Resolutions, Which Were Unanimously Adopted.

Your committee to whom was submitted the work of preparing a series of resolutions for this convention has endeavored to fulfill your instructions, and begs to submit the following as their report:

Whereas, Modern Spiritualism has for more than half a century been an active factor in promoting the progress of the world, and has won an important place among the religions of the world, has attracted the attention of men of science and erudition to the extent that it is no longer considered merely a "thing of amusement," but is recognized as "a great and all-important fact," therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the duty of this and every similar organization to use every legitimate means to place this movement upon a higher and more philosophical and intellectual plane, to the end that the attention of the thinking people of the world will be more forcibly attracted to our cause, by dint of its superiority.

Resolved, That while Spiritualism stands primarily upon certain occult phenomena, it has a philosophy which should command the attention of the thinkers, scientists and religionists of the world.

Resolved, That as Spiritualism has already established the fact that man in a conscious state survives the event called death, it should now pay more attention to the world's ethical and spiritual advancement.

Resolved, That as we cannot go back to the "flesh-pots" of the theological "Egypt" for our science and theology, so we cannot depend upon the circumscription of the popular schools of the day for the education needed to make integral workers of those who are to follow us in the Spiritualistic work.

Resolved, That in view of the work to be done we should establish schools for the education of workers; and to this end we thoroughly endorse and will with our means and influence do our utmost to sustain the Morris Pratt School.

Resolved, That we hail the work of the Russio-Japanese Peace Commissioners as a good sign of the approach of the time when "swords shall be beaten into ploughshares and spears into pruning hooks," and nations shall know no more war.

Resolved, That we are proud of the advanced position taken in this matter by President Roosevelt, and that the United States is to be congratulated on having a chief executive in whom other nations have so much confidence.

Resolved, That as mediumship is the gateway through which the intelligence of the continuity of life is wrought to humanity, and as such should not only be carefully guarded, but should also be scientifically and earnestly studied, we deplore the manifest tendency to make a fetish of mediumship to the extent that its proper mission has largely been defeated.

Resolved, That we urge every society and individual to adopt more thorough and scientific methods for the study and investigation of the various phases of phenomena and of those through whose faculties such phenomena are presented to the world.

Resolved, That while we fully uphold and commend all genuine spiritual phenomena and the agency through which such phenomena are brought to mankind, we are unalterably opposed to all simulations and base counterfeits, and we greatly deplore the degraded commercialism which gives rise to the charlatanism and fraudulent practices which bring odium upon the fair name of Spiritualism, and sorrow to the hearts of truthseekers everywhere.

Resolved, That in defense of true mediumship this association pledges itself to use every legitimate means to rid the cause of these barnacles whose cupidity incites them to foist their nefarious wares upon the unwary investigator and the sorrow-burdened relatives of those gone before.

Resolved, That as the liberating hand of death has cleft the chains of mortality which bound to earth our brothers and co-workers, Sanford Niles, Mr. L. T. Barker, Thomas McManus, Mr. Cosgrove, Mrs. Annie Hanson and Mrs. McLagan and allowed them to enter the "great beyond," we rejoice with them in their newly found liberty and advancement, and while we shall miss their physical presence, we are conscious of, and grateful for their manifest influence on, and interest in these deliberations on themes so dear to them.

Resolved, That as the only way to raise up a manhood and womanhood that shall stand an honor to our cause and a credit to the world, is to instill into the growing mind a proper concept of life, it is our bounden duty to establish wherever possible Progressive Lyceums wherein the rising generations may receive such instruction as will broaden the mind, develop the body and unfold the soul.

Resolved, That in order to make our lyceum work more effective it is the will of this convention that the incoming board shall make a special effort to secure the services of some person or persons thoroughly competent to instruct others for the important position of lyceum teachers, and to assist in the establishing of lyceums upon a substantial basis.

Resolved, That our thanks are due and are hereby extended to the Spiritualist papers generally and to the daily papers of Minneapolis for the advance notices, and courtesies bestowed upon us during the year just past.

Resolved, That our thanks are extended to our energetic and efficient officers, especially President Maxwell, Vice-president Whitwell, Secretary Follett and Treasurer Griffith, and to our worthy board of trustees, which so ably seconded the efforts of the officers.

Resolved, That it is the will of this convention that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the convention, and also that a copy be sent to each of the Spiritual papers.

Respectfully submitted,
WILL J. ERWOOD,
H. HEGDAHL,
VICTOR FERNSTROM,

DIEUDONNEE.

They called her Dieudonnee, the heaven sent,
And any looking at her serious face
And low, sweet brow, feeling the gentle grace
Of every word or act, would say she blent
Her nature and her name to one grand whole.
Calm-breasted wisdom was her well-loved guide
While purity and faith walked by her side,
And love was king within her innocent soul.

A waif cast from the slums of a great town;
The stigma of disgrace upon her birth—
(Yet water lilies strike their roots in earth,
And bloom no whit less purely for it,) down
Life's dusty road she walked with stainless feet,
Her patient eyes forever toward the day,
Nor turned to note the mud walls in her way
Unless with womanly compassion sweet,

That such should be. Her hands found work to do
Where others passed with cold averted glance,
Or gazed at carelessly with jest perchance,
Hers was the hand to lead stray feet anew
Beside the river of life. Her task complete,
Folding her pale, thin hands, without a tear,
She left earth, better for her presence here,
And laid her sheaf beside the Master's feet.

BEATRICE ST. GEORGE.

THE INCONSISTENCY OF IT.

Some Impressive and Pertinent Remarks in Regard to the Same.

Rabbi Hirsch of Portland, Oregon, in his address upon "The Educational Problem" at the National Woman Suffrage Convention recently held in that city, expressed himself strongly in favor of women having a vote in all public affairs. He said in part:

"It is a strange anomaly in American public life that we have given our schools so largely into the hands of women. They are expected to teach the children history and patriotism, yet are not considered competent to vote. While even in Russia or China a woman can be empress, and for forty years a woman on the throne of England showed what a Christian woman could do in that exalted position, yet here in America a woman cannot even be a constable.

"We must have women in the schools, and we must have all the children in the schools. Those of us who are not wholly lost to honesty admit that the way men have conducted public affairs needs improvement. Professor Munsterberg admits that we need a leisure class, and the only one in America is the women. Look at what they have have done in reforms, and in securing improved legislation in many lines. It is they who propose laws and pass them, and yet we say they are not capable to vote. We must have the term "people" recast in the public mind so as to include woman.

"I appeal for women in the schools. The woman, because she is a woman, is less easily corrupted than the man who has forgotten that he had a mother. If we disfranchise somebody, it had better be most of the men rather than the women.

"Every right goes with a duty. Women pay taxes and do public service, and hold up before us the standard of righteousness; and they ought to have a vote."

GROWTH OF SPIRITUALISM.

Influence of Christian Science and New Thought.

I was thoroughly convinced of the possibility of spirit return thirty years ago. I am not a medium, but through others have had evidence enough to convince any reasonable man. It seems to me, that within the past few years, proofs of spirit return have increased among the people not known as mediums or Spiritualists. Here are brief accounts of experiences that quite recently came to personal acquaintances of mine.

Yesterday a ship captain, now at home for a short time, told me of the experience of a friend who is also a master of a ship:

One night, while the captain was on deck smoking, and sitting in a quiet place in the early part of the evening, he distinctly heard his name, "George," spoken. No one was near him. He got up and went to the cabin and sat down in a meditative mood. Again his name was called, and he knew it was the voice of his wife whom he had left at home happy and well. Much later he retired to his bed. Before going to sleep, the voice said: "George, why do you not speak to me?" He replied, "What, dear one?" The answer was, "Dear George, no matter." On his arrival at Calcutta he received word that his wife had died the night the voice came to him. He was not a Spiritualist.

Less than a month ago a near neighbor of mine, an engineer on the Southern Pacific railroad, was killed in a smash-up. About four weeks before the accident, his wife was told by a medium-palmist that "her husband would be killed in the near future." Both engineer and wife were members of the Episcopal church.

Three months ago an intimate friend of mine went to the Yosemite, as chaperone for a company of young ladies. About two weeks after she left home, her husband, Col. W., quite suddenly was deeply impressed that his wife had been seriously injured in a stage-coach wreck. The impression proved to be correct. About the time the Colonel received the impression the stage coach was upset and his wife's leg was broken.

One day last week a gentleman, aged sixty, called on me from Southern California, and presented me with a letter of introduction from Editor S. My old time friend, the editor whom I have known thirty years, and who is a very prominent citizen of California, referred to my caller as a man of thorough reliability and unquestioned integrity (whom I will call Mr. C.). At the end of our interview, on business, Mr. C., remarked: "Mr. Dague, I was told by your friend, Editor S., that you are a Spiritualist." As I replied in the affirmative, he said, "well, I never knew nor cared anything about Spiritualism until less than two years ago. Then a friend invited me to attend a seance with him in Los Angeles. I went to please my friend. I took a seat in a half circle with fifteen or twenty others. The room was not dark, but the light was much subdued. There was a song or two sung; then the first manifestation came to me. What looked to me like a stalward Indian seemed to take shape right by my side. I was not alarmed but quietly watched the object forming. Then I saw a big Indian beside me. He quickly grasped the two sides of my chair and lifted me right up over the heads of the company and carried me around the room, my head a few inches below the ceiling. He finally returned me to my place in the circle, and other phenomena later took place. I was converted to a belief in Spiritualism in less time than Paul was converted to Christianity. Since that time I have been a clairvoyant, and now see spirit forms often when alone, or when in company.

One of my neighbors is a Mrs. M. She is a Christian Scientist and a refined, intelligent lady. In a late conversation she remarked to me: "Some time ago I was sitting in my parlor sewing. The sun was shining brightly. In front of me stood an empty rocking chair. Pretty soon the chair began rocking backward and forward. I looked to see if any door or window was open. None were open. The chair now suddenly stopped. Then it began rocking again, sometimes quite vigorously then slowly, then it would stop altogether, then begin again. A deep impression then came to me that my mother had passed away. Later, a telegram came from Ohio, my mother's home, that she had died a little before the chair phenomena occurred.

Now, before I conclude, allow me to say a word about Christian Science. I see, occasionally, a severe criticism of Christian Science, by Spiritualists. While I am not of that faith, and while I know that they are not without faults, still I think they are doing a good work. From orthodoxy to Spiritualism is a big jump—too long a leap for some people. A half-way station is necessary. The membership of the Christian Science church is made up very largely of late members of orthodox churches. Right in this town of 20,000 population, it is estimated that the Episcopal church alone lost fifty members who are now Christian scientists, or Mental Scientists. The other denominations lost members in proportion.

These "Scientists" deny the fall of Adam, total depravity, the blood atonement, endless hell, and the personality of God. They say, "Man is God, God is life—all life." They do not believe in the inerrancy of the bible. They do not teach that prayer should be of the supplicating, importuning, flattering, begging sort, but of emphatic affirmation, assertion or positive statement to the effect that "we are God, that we are immortal spirits now, that evil, so-called, is not an entity; that we are healthy, and pure, and sound, and good at the core, and that there is no real evil, or disease in us." They say these affirmations oft repeated and insisted upon, makes us positive in our attitude toward fear, and worry, and disease. Now, whether Spiritualists can fully agree with these "Scientists" or not on all things, I am sure they can agree with them on many propositions. I am fully persuaded that Christian Science and the various branches of "New Thought" holding to substantially the same doctrines are making tremendous inroads upon old played-out orthodoxy. The preachers of the old pagan doctrine of total depravity, eternal hell, a jealous, vindictive God, and a blood atonement, are alarmed at the rapid growth of New Thought, and are fighting it with all their power from ocean to ocean. In the "scrap," let Spiritualists ally themselves with the New Thoughters.

SPIRIT MESSAGES.

Through the Mediumship of Mrs. Nellie Davis, Kewanee, Ill.

Harlet Twitchell.

Well, I would like to send out a few words of encouragement this evening. I passed away at Redfield, Iowa, a number of years ago, and I realize there have been many changes as the years roll by. It is an old saying but a true one, "out of sight, out of mind;" and yet a time comes that brings back old memories, and while I have been gone quite a while, yet I feel I am thought of many times by those that do know what it is to appreciate spirit return. I want to reach my own family who I see are nearer to me in spirit than ever before. I mean by that they are with me in their thoughts, and they often wonder why mother can't come and make herself known more, if she found things as she expected. I have tried so hard to make you all know that I was still with you, and I sense the feeling as I draw near to you that I am misled. I wish I could talk to you in private, for there are some things I want to tell you about that it won't do to mention here. That is one reason I tried to come here, for this medium being a stranger to you all, I thought it would be more convincing to you.

Now I have tried as far as my power lies to say a word to all my friends, and when I say friends I mean many, for I considered all men my brothers and all women my sisters, especially those who had the intelligence to lay their prejudice and ignorance aside and were willing to reason upon whatever came in contact with them.

I never was a bigoted or superstitious person. But I did like a liberal person. I was much interested in the progress of Spiritualism and I am glad to see it still progressing. I am also glad to see Spiritualists banding themselves together and bringing Spiritualism more to the front both as a religion and a benefactor. No one has ever investigated Spiritualism honestly and sincerely, using his own judgment and throwing prejudice aside, who has not been convinced of the truth and comforts thereof.

I was sick quite a while and I had plenty of time to consider what religion meant, and what it was to have the sweet communion of those gone away. I had many of my own in spirit, so my journey was not a lonesome one, nor have I been lonesome in my new home. I have enjoyed myself better, and I feel that in getting rid of the physical form and getting into a garment that fits better, I am more able to accomplish the work I desire to do.

I did not mean to give a sermon. I have only done this to encourage our people, so they may know I found what I expected and even more. Good-bye now. My love to all. HARRIET.

Elsie Covell.

Dear Grandma:—I don't want you to cry, for I am all right, and I found mamma. Poor papa—I guess he can't help the way he does; if he could only come here with mamma and I we would show him how to live a better life. I don't want him to drink, and it makes mamma sad. She says for you to keep Charlie and don't let him go with papa any more. You were so good to me, Grandma.

I used to read to her out of this paper and I know she will see this. Good night, Grandma. Don't cry.

Gustavus Ames.

Well, my friends, this is all so new to me, I don't suppose I can send forth such eloquence as some do, but I am so anxious to reach my brother so he may know and feel that I still live. I am so glad to come. I have no doubt there are others that need to come, and perhaps I am taking up the time. I will just say a few words to Dolph and assure him of my constant love and watchfulness through all the years, and I know his life has not been one of sunshine, but the clouds are passing away and a great change is coming into his life in the next year. We will all help him. There are so many of the dear ones here with me, and Louise wants me to say for her that the sun lies just behind the clouds of life and he will have many bright days on earth.

I also want to say that Edna wishes to send her love and sympathy and to say that she knows what is going on and what has been, and wants me to tell you all she is satisfied. Of course it was hard for her at first leaving her dear ones, but she is happy now and says to thank you all for her. She wants to write sometime. She says to tell all that she is not sorry that she had to go now, and she would not come back if she could and go on with the earthly work.

Florella says to tell her brother that the trials he sometimes calls bad luck are only the setting of a bright sun, and if he would only give us an opportunity in private, we have so much we would like to say to him. We all send out this message with the spirit of love and we want it received with the spirit of thankfulness. We will all come again. We send love to all. Your spirit brother, GUSTAVUS.

Verification of Messages.

Dear Madam:—I was truly surprised to see a letter from our little Minnie White, who passed away about 20 years ago. Now I don't believe in Spiritualism, but I can't understand how else you could have known things so correctly as you did, and it has set me to thinking some. If you should hear again, please tell me about it. My husband is very much interested in it.

Respectfully yours,
MRS. JAMES R. WHITE.

Albany, N. Y.

Mrs. Davis:—I was more than pleased to read a letter in the paper from my sister, Lydia Comp, and will say it is true in every way. The expression, the names and all are correct, and she has been dead forty-five years, as she says. I am not a believer in this, but felt I wanted to tell you. Can you tell me how I can get that paper regularly. I had one sent to me.

Yours truly,
MRS. VIOLA MAY,

STARTLING FACTS,

OR

Deeds of Darkness Disclosed

This work devotes special attention to Auricular Confession and its relations to sacerdotal celibacy, convents, monasteries, morality and civil and religious liberty. It is intended to be an embodiment of facts and documentary evidence of the pernicious influence of the confessional; a trenchant showing up of Romanism, based upon standard Catholic authorities; an eye-opener concerning the methods and spirit, the moral turpitude and evil works of Romanism. Cloth, 75 cents.

A SYMPOSIUM.

Suggested by Dr. Alex. Caird, of Lynn, Mass.

Massachusetts steps to the front and demands a hearing. Alex. Caird, M. D., an influential Spiritualist, suggests a Symposium on an exceedingly important subject. It will be inaugurated in his special honor as a leading and highly respected Spiritualist of the Old Bay State, one who is constantly working for the spread of the Truth as manifested in Spirit Return. It will prove especially interesting, suggestive and valuable to every reflective mind.

The Important Question.

What Does Spiritualism Teach That Spiritualists Believe in Common?

Lyman C. Howe Specifies Numerous Important Points of Agreement.

Brother Caird, and the Editor of The Progressive Thinker seem to think that Spiritualists are at a wide divergence in belief. So they are. But not so much as to what Spiritualism teaches as the foreign fads that have been grafted on to it, because the stock is so strong and broad it will bear much abuse without serious hurt.

What does Spiritualism teach and who are the teachers?

It teaches by its facts and phenomena, by its messages from circles of wisdom, by its seers and philosophical interpreters, and by appeals to nature and the operations of evolution spiritually translated.

Some of the things it teaches are:

1. That all human beings are immortal and progress forever.

2. That death is an incident in the evolution of individuality, and does not change character.

3. Leaving the body with the limitations it imposes and entering into a larger sphere of relations and correspondences, with all the inner senses opened, the individual is newly situated in a world that answers to all the senses opened by death.

4. After death spirits enter into those societies most congenial to them and hence best adapted to their needs.

5. Their conditions, and hence their needs, are forever changing progressively, and hence they graduate from one plane to another, and from one society to another forever.

6. That spirits know what they did before death, and what they have learned since; but no human spirit is omniscient, and, if it progresses eternally, can never become perfect.

7. Spirits are interested in this world, and its inhabitants, to the extent of their humanitarian sympathies, and the desire to investigate its many problems, from the new situation that enables them to observe the inner causes that actuate human conduct, and also from personal interests in the friendships established here and not broken by death.

8. Spirits who teach through mediums are liable to err; first, because of imperfect mediumship; 2, because conditions often invite the action of incarnate minds which impress the sensitive with their ideas, prejudices and desires, and cause the medium to echo them as the teachings of a spirit; 3, the spirit may be confused in a first attempt to communicate; 4, a spirit may give for truth that which is only belief, as is often the case with mortals; 5, a spirit may wilfully lie.

Many other causes for discrepancies might be added if necessary.

9. All varieties of spirits exist after death and are liable to share in the communications we receive.

10. Many highly intelligent, moral, and humanitarian spirits have communicated and worked individual reforms, and given direction and inspiration, and crowned with success, great national movements, whose leaders were mediums unknown to the world, and perhaps themselves.

11. It is taught by all the wise and good from the spirit world that mediums should never surrender their reason and moral sense to any spirit or any God.

12. The spirit world—wherever it may be—is to the unfleshed spirit, as real, as substantial and as natural as this world is to our physical senses.

13. Happiness increases with progress.

14. Cause and effect—or the reign of law—are as real in the spirit world as in this.

15. Evil doing receives its reward by the action of causes that cannot be evaded, but never as the direct punishment of an arbitrary, despotic, anthropomorphic God.

16. This world is made better, the sum of human misery diminished, and the sum of human happiness increased by the influence of spirit communion.

17. Spirits inspire mediums to do humanitarian works, rescuing the fallen, saving the victims of alcoholism, curing insanity, intercepting suicidal intentions, and healing the sick by laying on of hands, or by clairvoyant diagnoses and prescriptions.

18. After allowing all that is claimed for fraud, there still remains a liberal margin of phenomena that must be credited to excarnate spirits. These are both intellectual and physical, showing the close approach of the two worlds and the near relation of the physical and the spiritual and of humanity in the flesh and out.

These are a few of the teachings of Spiritualism upon which I think Spiritualists are substantially agreed. There might be hundreds more presented if necessary. But these ought to be sufficient for a basis upon which to build a permanent and widely useful organization to outlive all others, and outdo all others, in the highest and best works of science, religion and human education and improvement.

To some of these there may be some hair-splitting objections, but it seems to me that to all these 18 statements of spiritual teaching nearly all rational Spiritualists will agree.

Conflicts Come From Without.

Many of the radical disagreements among Spiritualists are upon outside questions. We have no "believe or be damned," in our creed. On the contrary it is one of the cardinal teachings of Spiritualism that each individual should accept or reject any doctrine or teaching, whether it be of Christian faith or Spiritualism, by the authority of his own reason and moral sense.

Brother Caird says: "One can hardly find two professed Spiritualists that agree on all the different points of their belief."

Well, can you find two Christians who agree on all points? They differ as widely in their estimates of the bible as we do, and far more on the questions of a future life, endless misery, the wrath of God, bloody atonement, the birth of Christ and miraculous conception, his saving grace, the need of baptism, damnation of infants, original sin, total depravity, the end of the world, second coming of Christ, obligations of the Sabbath, and a hundred other questions regarded as vital to the church.

Spiritualists could not agree on the bible, for it does not agree with itself, and as we are taught to be guided by our reason, experience and moral sense, as no two are organized to see the varied issues and contradictions in the bible alike, of course the teachings of Spiritualism compel us to differ, if we obey the teaching.

To hold widely different views of the bible is to obey the teachings of Spiritualism, which says, let your own judgment decire, and not any creed or outside authority.

Reincarnation

is not a teaching of Spiritualism, even if some spirits seem to teach it. It antedates the birth of Modern Spiritualism by hundreds of years and is a graft from India.

We need not agree on the details of any teachings from the rostrum, or in spiritual literature. It is not desirable that we should. It would be a deadening palsy if we did. The friction of thought wakes intellectual vigor and moral stamina. But we may all agree to work together in organic order, and with zeal, for the education of the people, for mutual protection in the efforts to encourage the young, to improve social ideals and habits, to overcome vice, to establish a moral code predicated on human nature, its conditions, needs, aspirations, temptations, weaknesses, vicissitudes, and relations; to study physical and psychic causes and learn to apply them to methods of discipline, the cure of crime, social evils, and the treatment of all human ills. To secure successful organized work we must needs compromise our prejudices and personal ambitions, and become broad and elastic enough to reduce the friction to a minimum.

There is no cult that is better agreed on essentials by which to accomplish great good work than the teachings of Modern Spiritualism; none more fertile in the great ideals of life, the enduring principles of scientific religion, and the blessed revelations of immortality.

Brother Caird asks: "Has Spiritualism come to us solely to prepare us for another life?"

Yes! for whatever prepares us for another life—which is this life continued into another world—best serves the interests of this life. A glimpse of the future, stimulates hope, desire and resolution to use the present well. If we have time to devote to intellectual gymnastics, we may wrestle with reincarnation, Christian Science, Rosicrucianism, dreams, Theosophy, or any other finds that challenge us; but there is so much to occupy time and energy which offers some possible results to practical life and achievement that I cannot afford to wrestle with shadows for amusement.

Brother Caird, you have done well to open this question, and tap some of the springs of life, that we may taste the elixir that flows for intellectual nourishment. If you can inspire the Spiritualists with unselfish zeal and devotion, there will be no difficulty in the way of comprehensive organic union and a glorious spiritual work.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

Fredonia, N. Y.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN IDAHO.

It Is Rich There With Beneficent Results.

Mrs. Adelia B. Scott, the official hostess of the Idaho building at the Lewis and Clark Exposition, is a woman with an unusual history. She served on the school board of Idaho Falls for eight years, during five of which she was clerk of the board. She then served for two years as justice of the peace, and declined a renomination. But apparently the town was unwilling to dispense with her services, for on a vacancy in the office of justice of the peace occurring soon after, she was appointed to fill it by the county commissioners. Next the office of police judge became vacant, and she was appointed to fill it by the mayor. Last fall she was elected county treasurer of Bingham county on the Republican ticket, and about $350,000 has already passed through her hands. Mrs. Scott is the wife of a prominent business man of Idaho Falls, who has always believed in woman suffrage, and who is pleased to have her hold these positions of trust.

Mrs. Scott was born in Illinois, and had lived in Iowa, Colorado and Kansas before finally settling in Idaho. She says that the women of that state are less strictly bound by party ties than the men, and are more apt to vote for the best man, irrespective of party. She has seen no ruined homes or neglected children as a result of equal suffrage; and she says that the women of Idaho have much more influence with the legislators now than before they obtained the ballot.

"Hard Problems of Scripture."

A Reply to the Animadversions of R. A. Torrey.

Our author next turns to Genesis xxii, and denies that God commanded Abraham to slay his son. In answer to this, I will say that the chapter starts out by saying, that "God did tempt Abraham." In this instance there was no tempting devil. This was before the Persians had invented a devil. In those days God had to do his own tempting. It was in the Babylonish captivity that the Hebrews learned of a tempting devil. It was not until we get into the New Testament that the tempting business had been relegated to the devil. The first one upon which the devil tried his hand was Jesus, and in that case he was not very successful. James says: "Let no man, when he is tempted say, I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man."—James i:13. Thus it is proved that God has changed since God did tempt Abraham."

Our friend says, "God did not command Abraham to slay Isaac." It is true God did not command Abraham to slay Isaac, in just the words here used by Mr. Torrey, but he did command him to offer him on Mount Moriah, as a burnt offering. See verse 2. I fail to see how Isaac could be offered as a burnt offering without being killed.

In this case God learned something, and therefore changed his mind. Verse 12 says that God said to Abraham, "Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him, for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me." Here God learned a lesson concerning Abraham and therefore interfered and saved Isaac.

The reverend gentleman next takes up the case of Jephthah's daughter, found in Judges. He says, "We are nowhere told that Jephthah did burn his daughter."

That seems to an honest man a little like a quibble. Verses 30 and 31 tell us that Jephthah vowed a vow unto the Lord, that whatsoever came forth out of the door of his house to meet him when he returned in peace "shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering," and verse 39 says that "Jephthah did with the girl according to his vow."

Any twist of logic that would say that Jephthah did not offer his daughter as a burnt offering would render logic so uncertain and so fragile that it should be banished from our schools.

It is next argued that God did not command Jephthah to burn his daughter. Supposing that God did not command Jephthah to offer his daughter as a burnt offering, he was talking to the people of those days; he here lost a golden opportunity to tell Jephthah, and the people through him, that it was naughty to offer a daughter or any other human being as a burnt offering to himself or, for that matter, to any of the gods.

Offerings made to Jehovah, though they were slain were not always burnt. In I. Sam. xv:33, we read that "Samuel hewed Agag to pieces before the Lord in Gilgal." That means, offered him to the Lord in Gilgal. Gilgal was the place where Samuel went to offer sacrifices. See I. Sam. x:8; xi:14, 15.

Will Rev. Mr. Torrey deny that David, the man after God's own heart, caused seven of Saul's innocent sons to be hanged in the hill, before the Lord? Sam. xxi:3-9. That hanging of these men before the Lord has no other meaning than sacrificing them to the Lord.

Has not Mr. Torrey, in his attempt to defend God and his servants from the charge of making and accepting human sacrifices, as the saying is, "bitten off more than he can chew"?

Slaughter of the Canaanites.

This effort to justify the Old Testament God in the slaughter of the Canaanites, is, if possible, the weakest thing this defender of the Old Testament has ever attempted. The story of how other nations should be treated by "God's peculiar people," is told in many places in the Bible. A few cases will be here sighted. In Deut. vii:1-6, the Hebrews are to destroy other nations because they are "a holy nation," "a special people," "a chosen people." It was because they were the best people on the earth that they were appointed to be the worst people in the world—to do the worst deeds of horror that the historian was ever called upon to record. For full particulars as to how they were to make slaves of and "utterly destroy" all other nations, see Deut. xx:10-17. Here they were to destroy the people, old and young, and take all of their spoils unto themselves. In order to convince the reader that I am not misrepresenting the gentleman, I will make a somewhat extended quotation from pages 16 and 17:

"Now it is certainly appalling that any people should be put utterly to the sword, together with their old men and old women, and young women and children. But there is something more appalling, when one stops to think about this matter, and that is that the iniquity of any people should have become so full, their rebellion against God so strong and so universal, their moral corruption and debasement so utter and so perversive, even down to babes just born, as to make such treatment absolutely necessary in the interest of humanity. But this was precisely the case with the nations in question. Not from the Bible alone do we learn how unfathomable were the depths of moral pollution to which these nations had sunken. They had become a moral cancer that must be cut out in every fibre if the body was to be saved. * * * The command to exterminate the Canaanites was a command big with mercy and love." If these are manifestations of mercy and love, I pray some power to save me from either the mercy or the love of God. Give me the wrath and cruelty of devils instead. "It was mercy and love first of all to the Israelites. Unless the Canaanites were exterminated, they would be themselves exterminated."

Even Mr. Torrey cannot here undertake to defend these supposed-to-be God-given commandments, without, in a sense, acknowledging their wickedness. He acknowledges that it certainly is appalling that any people should be put to the sword, together with their old men and old women, and young women and children." But when he thinks of their "moral corruption and debasement, so utter and perversive, even down to babes just born," he becomes reconciled to God's judgments, which are unsearchable.

Is it not self-evident that this man is judging God through his prejudices, and not through his reason? How does he know that babes "just born," are filled with moral corruption and debasement?" Does not this smack a little of Calvinism? These infants "filled with moral corruption and debasement," do they not belong in the endless tormenting hell which John Calvin prepared for them? And, were not our Presbyterian clergymen rather fast when they went to Los Angeles, Cal., a year or two since and rescued these little "morally corrupt" fiends from the mercy and love of this God and took them out of the hell of Calvinism?

Now will Brother Torrey please tell us where the proof is of the "corruption of these babes "just born"? Will he even undertake to find other proofs than the ipse dixit of ministers of his own ilk who "limp to make excuse for their God"—I say, will he undertake to find the proof of the wickedness of the parents, and uncles and cousins of these "babes just born," who are to be thus ruthlessly slaughtered by God's "peculiar" and "holy people"?

If a "holy nation" can do such bloody and unjust work as this, I would like to ask, in the name of sense, what an unholy nation can do? Has not the twentieth century advanced a little too far to pay heed to such silly sophistries, even though they are handed out as excuses for the wickedness of this God and his people?

Friend Torrey sees this as other common-sense people do, and undertakes to palliate the matter as follows. "By the regenerating power of the Gospel, it is possible to correct this, but we must remember that the case we have to deal with was centuries before the gospel proclamation."

Is that so? Then, in the name of humanity, I ask why the gospel was not earlier? and why these Hebrews were not sent out with the gospel as missionaries instead of as robbers, slave catchers, and murderers of new-born babies? But the reverend gentleman is, as usual with him, mistaken. The gospel was proclaimed centuries before these people were born. Paul says, in Gal. iii:8, the gospel was preached to Abraham. Abraham was the greatest kind of a great-grandfather to these warriors. Why preach the gospel of Abraham and then kill and send these poor people, babes and all, to hell because they never heard it?

This chapter is finally concluded with the statement that "The extermination of the Canaanite children was not only an act of love to the world at large, it was an act of mercy to the children themselves. What awaited these children if they were allowed to live? Something vastly worse than death."

If this is God's "act of love and mercy," it is hoped that he will not send either love nor mercy this way. I do not wonder that this man says of God, "his judgments are unsearchable, and his ways past finding out." What a pity that this preacher did not find this out before he made his feeble attempt to explain them.

The solemn lesson which Rev. Mr. Torrey says came to the Israelites, through being made the executioners of God's wrath was rather hard on the ten commandments, was rather hard on the sixth commandment, which says "thou shalt not kill." It was teaching this already cruel people to be still more cruel and unjust.

Mr. Torrey repeats the old threadbare assertion, which has been made by the defenders of the Old Testament God for centuries, that the Canaanites were a very wicked people. Perhaps they were, but that would not justify the Hebrews in being more wicked. Let this reverend defender of the mistakes and the wicked things in the Bible, undertake to show the wickedness of these people, whom he slanders, while he justifies the wickedness of the Israelites in their crimes against them. When he does that I will find the Hebrews guilty of every crime, and filled with every loathsome disease he will find among the "seven nations" which were greater than they were.

"WOMAN'S RIGHTS,"

As Related to Courtship and Marriage.

In all past campaigns of pen and voice, for "Woman's Rights," it was always centering upon and limited to claims and complaints for her on account of ungranted and denied rights due her of a civic and political citizenship nature, and those that concern her status as to professional and industrial privileges; they were claims for her for a sort of political equality with man. And I do not minimize these phases of "woman's rights," nor wish to exclude them from the category of rights due her. But while there is a sort of armistice and lull in the public pressure of those claims for woman, I wish to add another phase of woman's rights, as related to courtship and marriage. I may fearfully miss the mark in making this claim for woman, and she may wholly disavow it, but I leave that to the hereafter, and if I have missed my aim I will simply get no game, and I will charge it to my rashness and ignorance. And now for the theme that woman should have equal rights in courtship and marriage with man.

And I will also promise that if woman's equality of rights herein is due her, it would be much more becoming and proper for the man to make the offer and state the woman's case for her than wait for and ask her to do it.

In the creation of the sexes there are found to be about an equal number of males and females—possibly a few more of the latter to supply the greater peril of maternity. And this numerical equality of the sexes also at once suggests the law of monogamy, and that of course also at once rules out the practice of polygamy. And it is, I think, about conceded by man that the woman should have all the civic, political, industrial and business rights that man has. And then it also necessarily follows that every woman—young or old—is entitled to a married life partner, and also, I take it, prefers that relation, and indeed needs it for the proper development of life.

And then assuming that woman prefers and is entitled to a suitable married life-partner, I ask the question, why should she be compelled to sit still and make no effort for such relationship?

There is no other matter that concerns woman's welfare or her relation to business, property, or anything wherein she cannot and does not occupy an affirmative and aggressive position in relation thereto, unless it be only in the single matter of courtship and marriage. But herein there is an omnipotent social barrier in the way. Now do not be shocked about this proposition, my dear reader, but think and reason abont it. Marriage, as related to the adult life, is the most important matter involved in human existence, and yet woman, under the mere ban of social sentiment, is deprived from making advances the same as man. That is, man may pick out a sweetheart, and let her know it; but woman cannot single out a lover and say so to him; that were horrid!

This social custom seems to be based on the idea that a marriage proposition by a man to a woman is a sort of courtesy, which it were rude and improper for a woman to make. But why is this objection on this subject which exists against her on nothing else?

And look at the seriousness of the engagement—what it involves. It involves a partnership of the highest type for a lifetime, of the two persons. It is the fulcrum of the family life; the culmination and fruition of the legitimate human love for woman as well as man; it is the one fact and event around which centers the ideal human existence, but yet the woman who would take any active steps to enter this primeval paradise would at once be ostracised from the social realm by her own sex even. It is for the highest interest of human society that each man and woman, at the proper age, shall find a mate. And this is also probably the wish of each man and woman; and then, if this is the desired result, will it be more likely attained if altogether left to fate and the man, or if the man and the woman were both allowed to be on the hunt and lookout for a mate?

This is about the largest business proposition that the world has on hand. It involves the chief events of life; and shall one of the partners be relegated to silence in the matter, or should the woman in this, like in other matters, be allowed to agitate the subject?

That is what I mean. And herein, as in all other matters that involve "bargains," it would not be expected that woman would just by violence, corner and corral an unwilling subject, but use her native arts and shrewdness. But the proposition is, whether she must simply sit still, and then when no one comes around to propose, call her an "old maid," as the reward of her imprisonment. In short, the man is allowed to look around for a wife, but not the woman for a husband, and the question is whether that is giving the woman her rights?

And again, no doubt under the present custom the woman often accepts offers of persons whom, they feel are not worthy of the partnership; but if the woman has to sit idly by and wait for proposals, she runs the risk in refusing an unworthy one to having no chance at all. For in this regard she—I mean many of them—are like beggars, who are not to be choosers. And then suppose we would reverse the problem a little season—just for three months—and let no man be allowed to propose matrimony to a woman, what a piteous moan would go up from the brethren for a change.

Then after that suppose we would extend this social ban to six months, and then a year; how the men would sit around in sack-cloth and ashes, ready to do unto others as they wish to be done by.

But if it so happens that man once proposes, then all the other propositions and details of the marriage contract may be properly discussed by the woman as well as the man; but the woman is barred, no matter how much she may fairly love a man, to make the initial proposition, for this can only come from the one side, even if the woman has waited from girlhood to old maidhood, in most deserving solicitude.

The married state is due to every woman, and each as a rule, desires to enter it. It is the castle and fortress of the permanent part of the human life. Shall the woman be permitted to secure it by the same means as the man, and as she also acquires other possessions, or be compelled to take her chances in silence?

Of course it is understood that I have no personal interest or "chances involved in the issue above presented; and if any of my sisters are shocked by the proposition made, let my innocence and ignorance be the excuse. But I would like the reasons why a woman cannot propose or look out for her own mate stated, so I can examine them to see if they are sound. For I wish to be right on all subjects, and more especially one so important as this.

MRS. NELLIE DAVIS.

A Medium Who Delivers Excellent Lectures While in a Trance.

To the Editor:—I saw the beautiful messages in your valuable paper, given through the mediumship of Mrs. Nellie Davis, and was much interested in them. I am slightly acquainted with this medium and know her to be true and honest. Through her mediumship I became convinced of the truths of Spiritualism. I enclose a clipping from the Neponset Messenger which will tell you of her mediumship, and am sure it will prove interesting to every reader of The Progressive Thinker.

JAMES R. CONVERSE, M. D.

The Medium, Mrs. Nellie Davis.

The lectures recently delivered here in Neponset by Mrs. Nellie E. Davis, of Kewanee, while in an unconscious trance has made this lady and the interesting phenomena occurring in her presence, the subject of general discussion. I therefore conclude that a brief sketch of her life and a plain, unbiased statement of facts in relation to the phenomena as witnessed by persons of intellect and undoubted integrity will prove interesting to the readers of the Messenger.

Mrs. Nellie E. Davis was born in Sheffield, Ill., Feb. 28, 1869. She is the daughter of Thomas Durack, of Mineral, at present, and for many years past the section boss at that place for the C. R. I. & P. R. R. She is the wife of Mr. Frank Davis, of Kewanee, who is a son of Mr. Hiram Davis, police magistrate, of Sheffield.

Mrs. Davis attended the district school at Mineral until thirteen years of age. Since that time she has been an industrious, hard-working woman, with but little time for reading and self-culture. She has three children whose ages range from eight to twelve years. She has lived all of her life in Sheffield, Mineral, Neponset and Kewanee. In all these places she has made many friends and no enemies. She is a truthful, conscientious and honorable woman, highly respected by all who know her. This I can say without fear of contradiction.

About two years ago it was first discovered that Mrs. Davis was a medium, and from that time to the present, seances have been held at her home or at some of the neighbors' in the immediate vicinity; as often as once or twice each week, attended by six or eight personal friends of undoubted intelligence and integrity, among which I have permission to mention and refer the reader, are: Nathaniel Tibbetts, supervisor of Kewanee, and wife; Chas E. Sturts, city attorney, and wife. I might mention other equally creditable persons who attended these seances; all of the same mind as to the character of the manifestations that occurred.

From these sensible and careful investigators during the past two years, I learn that Mrs. Davis, while in an unconscious trance, writes with both hands, two communications on entirely two different subjects; writes the German language, of which she is utterly ignorant. Writing between folded slates is produced and she also claims to see spirits and describes them, gives the date, cause and place of their death, often of those who have lived a long distance away and the names unknown to those present, that time and again have those present wrote to responsible persons at the place mentioned and in every instance have her statements been verified. I might mention still more astounding phenomena that have been witnessed at these seances but let this suffice. All the witnesses agree in saying that they have never noticed the least word or action on the part of Mrs. Davis that had even a tint of fraud or deception; that these seances were free, and that on several occasions she has returned money sent her by persons who had their sealed questions answered.

Her first attempt to speak to a public audience was at this place. She first delivered quite a long prayer in which with deep and earnest pathos she invoked the Divine Spirit to possess, uplift and aid her in presenting the grand truth of immortality as made manifest by spirit return. She then delivered an address presenting the claims of Spiritualism that was truly wonderful. Her well-rounded sentences were delivered in clear and distinct tones, without hesitation or embarrassment; full of deep, tender and earnest appeals to the moral and spiritual nature of her audience.

The following Wednesday Mrs. Davis delivered a lecture at the Town Hall. Her prayer on this occasion being a poem. Her lecture was decidedly different from her former one, in fact a more scholarly one. Going back to the 14th century, B. C., she mentioned the great religious reformers, such as, Confucius, Buddha and other zealous religious teachers that had appeared from time to time all along the ages down to the present. As she expressed it, "The golden thread of Divine light that has ever penetrated the darkness of earth, and lit up a pathway that has led to mental, moral and spiritual progress."

Had these grand and eloquent addresses, closing with a beautiful poem, been delivered in Apollo Hall to a cultured Princeton audience, it would have been impossible to have convinced them that the speaker was one of our country girls, who had acquired her limited education in a district school at the age of thirteen years, and that these were her first attempts to speak in public. That strange and unaccountable phenomena occurs in her presence is admitted by all who have had an opportunity of knowing the facts. The opinion of others who have not, will have no weight with sensible people.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

By James M. McCann. A complete and overwhelming refutation of the Bible story of the Deluge. Price, 15 cents.

A SYMPOSIUM.

Suggested by Dr. Alex. Caird, of Lynn, Mass.

Massachusetts steps to the front and demands a hearing. Alex. Caird, M. D., an influential Spiritualist, suggests a Symposium on an exceedingly important subject. It will be inaugurated in his special honor as a leading and highly respected Spiritualist of the Old Bay State, one who is constantly working for the spread of the Truth as manifested in Spirit Return. It will prove especially interesting, suggestive and valuable to every reflective mind.

The Important Question.

What Does Spiritualism Teach That Spiritualists Believe in Common?

Lyman C. Howe Specifies Numerous Important Points of Agreement.

Brother Caird, and the Editor of The Progressive Thinker seem to think that Spiritualists are at a wide divergence in belief. So they are. But not so much as to what Spiritualism teaches as the foreign fads that have been grafted on to it, because the stock is so strong and broad it will bear much abuse without serious hurt.

What does Spiritualism teach and who are the teachers?

It teaches by its facts and phenomena, by its messages from circles of wisdom, by its seers and philosophical interpreters, and by appeals to nature and the operations of evolution spiritually translated.

Some of the things it teaches are:

I. That all human beings are immortal and progress forever.

2. That death is an incident in the evolution of individuality, and does not change character.

3. Leaving the body with the limitations it imposes and entering into a larger sphere of relations and correspondences, with all the inner senses opened, the individual is newly situated in a world that answers to all the senses opened by death.

4. After death spirits enter into those societies most congenial to them and hence best adapted to their needs.

5. Their conditions, and hence their needs, are forever changing progressively, and hence they graduate from one plane to another, and from one society to another forever.

6. That spirits know what they did before death, and what they have learned since; but no human spirit is omniscient, and, if it progresses eternally, can never become perfect.

7. Spirits are interested in this world, and its inhabitants, to the extent of their humanitarian sympathies, and the desire to investigate its many problems, from the new situation that enables them to observe the inner causes that actuate human conduct, and also from personal interests in the friendships established here and not broken by death.

8. Spirits who teach through mediums are liable to err; first, because of imperfect mediumship; 2, because conditions often invite the action of incarnate minds which impress the sensitive with their ideas, prejudices and desires, and cause the medium to echo them as the teachings of a spirit; 3, the spirit may be confused in a first attempt to communicate; 4, a spirit may give for truth that which is only belief, as is often the case with mortals; 5, a spirit may wilfully lie.

Many other causes for discrepancies might be added if necessary.

9. All varieties of spirits exist after death and are liable to share in the communications we receive.

10. Many highly intelligent, moral, and humanitarian spirits have communicated and worked individual reforms, and given direction and inspiration, and crowned with success, great national movements, whose leaders were mediums unknown to the world, and perhaps themselves.

11. It is taught by all the wise and good from the spirit world that mediums should never surrender their reason and moral sense to any spirit or any God.

12. The spirit world—wherever it may be—is to the unfleshed spirit, as real, as substantial and as natural as this world is to our physical senses.

13. Happiness increases with progress.

14. Cause and effect—or the reign of law—are as real in the spirit world as in this.

15. Evil doing receives its reward by the action of causes that cannot be evaded, but never as the direct punishment of an arbitrary, despotic, anthropomorphic God.

16. This world is made better, the sum of human misery diminished, and the sum of human happiness increased by the influence of spirit communion.

17. Spirits inspire mediums to do humanitarian works, rescuing the fallen, saving the victims of alcoholism, curing insanity, intercepting suicidal intentions, and healing the sick by laying on of hands, or by clairvoyant diagnoses and prescriptions.

18. After allowing all that is claimed for fraud, there still remains a liberal margin of phenomena that must be credited to excarnate spirits. These are both intellectual and physical, showing the close approach of the two worlds and the near relation of the physical and the spiritual and of humanity in the flesh and out.

These are a few of the teachings of Spiritualism upon which I think Spiritualists are substantially agreed. There might be hundreds more presented if necessary. But these ought to be sufficient for a basis upon which to build a permanent and widely useful organization to outlive all others, and outdo all others, in the highest and best works of science, religion and human education and improvement.

To some of these there may be some hair-splitting objections, but it seems to me that to all these 18 statements of spiritual teaching nearly all rational Spiritualists will agree.

Conflicts Come From Without.

Many of the radical disagreements among Spiritualists are upon outside questions. We have no "believe or be damned," in our creed. On the contrary it is one of the cardinal teachings of Spiritualism that each individual should accept or reject any doctrine or teaching, whether it be of Christian faith or Spiritualism, by the authority of his own reason and moral sense.

Brother Caird says: "One can hardly find two professed Spiritualists that agree on all the different points of their belief."

Well, can you find two Christians who agree on all points? They differ as widely in their estimates of the bible as we do, and far more on the questions of a future life, endless misery, the wrath of God, bloody atonement, the birth of Christ and miraculous conception, his saving grace, the need of baptism, damnation of infants, original sin, total depravity, the end of the world, second coming of Christ, obligations of the Sabbath, and a hundred other questions regarded as vital to the church.

Spiritualists could not agree on the bible, for it does not agree with itself, and as we are taught to be guided by our reason, experience and moral sense, as no two are organized to see the varied issues and contradictions in the bible alike, of course the teachings of Spiritualism compel us to differ, if we obey the teaching.

To hold widely different views of the bible is to obey the teachings of Spiritualism, which says, let your own judgment decire, and not any creed or outside authority.

Reincarnation

is not a teaching of Spiritualism, even if some spirits seem to teach it. It antedates the birth of Modern Spiritualism by hundreds of years and is a graft from India.

We need not agree on the details of any teachings from the rostrum, or in spiritual literature. It is not desirable that we should. It would be a deadening palsy if we did. The friction of thought wakes intellectual vigor and moral stamina. But we may all agree to work together in organic order, and with zeal, for the education of the people, for mutual protection in the efforts to encourage the young, to improve social ideals and habits, to overcome vice, to establish a moral code predicated on human nature, its conditions, needs, aspirations, temptations, weaknesses, vicissitudes, and relations; to study physical and psychic causes and learn to apply them to methods of discipline, the cure of crime, social evils, and the treatment of all human ills. To secure successful organized work we must needs compromise our prejudices and personal ambitions, and become broad and elastic enough to reduce the friction to a minimum.

There is no cult that is better agreed on essentials by which to accomplish great good work than the teachings of Modern Spiritualism; none more fertile in the great ideals of life, the enduring principles of scientific religion, and the blessed revelations of immortality.

Brother Caird asks: "Has Spiritualism come to us solely to prepare us for another life?"

Yes! for whatever prepares us for another life—which is this life continued into another world—best serves the interests of this life. A glimpse of the future, stimulates hope, desire and resolution to use the present well. If we have time to devote to intellectual gymnastics, we may wrestle with reincarnation, Christian Science, Rosicrucianism, dreams, Theosophy, or any other fads that challenge us; but there is so much to occupy time and energy which offers some possible results to practical life and achievement that I cannot afford to wrestle with shadows for amusement.

Brother Caird, you have done well to open this question, and tap some of the springs of life, that we may taste the elixir that flows for intellectual nourishment. If you can inspire the Spiritualists with unselfish zeal and devotion, there will be no difficulty in the way of comprehensive organic union and a glorious spiritual work.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

Fredonia, N. Y.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN IDAHO.

It Is Rich There With Beneficent Results.

Mrs. Adelia B. Scott, the official hostess of the Idaho building at the Lewis and Clark Exposition, is a woman with an unusual history. She served on the school board of Idaho Falls for eight years, during five of which she was clerk of the board. She then served for two years as justice of the peace, and declined a renomination. But apparently the town was unwilling to dispense with her services, for on a vacancy in the office of justice of the peace occurring soon after, she was appointed to fill it by the county commissioners. Next the office of police judge became vacant, and she was appointed to fill it by the mayor. Last fall she was elected county treasurer of Bingham county on the Republican ticket, and about $350,000 has already passed through her hands. Mrs. Scott is the wife of a prominent business man of Idaho Falls, who has always believed in woman suffrage, and who is pleased to have her hold these positions of trust.

Mrs. Scott was born in Illinois, and had lived in Iowa, Colorado and Kansas before finally settling in Idaho. She says that the women of that state are less strictly bound by party ties than the men, and are more apt to vote for the best man, irrespective of party. She has seen no ruined homes or neglected children as a result of equal suffrage; and she says that the women of Idaho have much more influence with the legislators now than before they obtained the ballot.

"Hard Problems of Scripture."

A Reply to the Animadversions of R. A. Torrey.

Our author next turns to Genesis xxii, and denies that God commanded Abraham to slay his son. In answer to this, I will say that the chapter starts out by saying, that "God did tempt Abraham." In this instance there was no tempting devil. This was before the Persians had invented a devil. In those days God had to do his own tempting. It was in the Babylonish captivity that the Hebrews learned of a tempting devil. It was not until we get into the New Testament that the tempting business had been relegated to the devil. The first one upon which the devil tried his hand was Jesus, and in that case he was not very successful. James says: "Let no man, when he is tempted say, I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man."—James i:13. Thus it is proved that God has changed since God did tempt Abraham."

Our friend says, "God did not command Abraham to slay Isaac." It is true God did not command Abraham to slay Isaac, in just the words here used by Mr. Torrey, but he did command him to offer him on Mount Moriah, as a burnt offering. See verse 2. I fail to see how Isaac could be offered as a burnt offering without being killed.

In this case God learned something, and therefore changed his mind. Verse 12 says that God said to Abraham, "Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him, for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me." Here God learned a lesson concerning Abraham and therefore interfered and saved Isaac.

The reverend gentleman next takes up the case of Jephthah's daughter, found in Judges. He says, "We are nowhere told that Jephthah did burn his daughter."

That seems to an honest man a little like a quibble. Verses 30 and 31 tell us that Jephthah vowed a vow unto the Lord, that whatsoever came forth out of the door of his house to meet him when he returned in peace "shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering," and verse 39 says that "Jephthah did with the girl according to his vow."

Any twist of logic that would say that Jephthah did not offer his daughter as a burnt offering would render logic so uncertain and so fragile that it should be banished from our schools.

It is next argued that God did not command Jephthah to burn his daughter. Supposing that God did not command Jephthah to offer his daughter as a burnt offering, he was talking to the people of those days; he here lost a golden opportunity to tell Jephthah, and the people through him, that it was naughty to offer a daughter or any other human being as a burnt offering to himself or, for that matter, to any of the gods.

Offerings made to Jehovah, though they were slain were not always burnt. In I. Sam. xv:33, we read that "Samuel hewed Agag to pieces before the Lord in Gilgal." That means, offered him to the Lord in Gilgal. Gilgal was the place where Samuel went to offer sacrifices. See I. Sam. x:8; xi:14, 15.

Will Rev. Mr. Torrey deny that David, the man after God's own heart, caused seven of Saul's innocent sons to be hanged in the hill, before the Lord? Sam. xxi:3-9. That hanging of these men before the Lord has no other meaning than sacrificing them to the Lord.

Has not Mr. Torrey, in his attempt to defend God and his servants from the charge of making and accepting human sacrifices, as the saying is, "bitten off more than he can chew"?

Slaughter of the Canaanites.

This effort to justify the Old Testament God in the slaughter of the Canaanites, is, if possible, the weakest thing this defender of the Old Testament has ever attempted. The story of how other nations should be treated by "God's peculiar people," is told in many places in the Bible. A few cases will be here sighted. In Deut. vii:1-6, the Hebrews are to destroy other nations because they are "a holy nation," "a special people," "a chosen people." It was because they were the best people on the earth that they were appointed to be the worst people in the world—to do the worst deeds of horror that the historian was ever called upon to record. For full particulars as to how they were to make slaves of and "utterly destroy" all other nations, see Deut. xx: 10-17. Here they were to destroy the people, old and young, and take all of their spoils unto themselves. In order to convince the reader that I am not misrepresenting the gentleman, I will make a somewhat extended quotation from pages 16 and 17:

"Now it is certainly appalling that any people should be put utterly to the sword, together with their old men and old women, and young women and children. But there is something more appalling, when one stops to think about this matter, and that is that the iniquity of any people should have become so full, their rebellion against God so strong and so universal, their moral corruption and debasement so utter and so perversive, even down to babes just born, as to make such treatment absolutely necessary in the interest of humanity. But this was precisely the case with the nations in question. Not from the Bible alone do we learn how unfathomable were the depths of moral pollution to which these nations had sunken. They had become a moral cancer that must be cut out in every fibre if the body was to be saved. * * * The command to exterminate the Canaanites was a command big with mercy and love." If these are manifestations of mercy and love, I pray some power to save me from either the mercy or the love of God. Give me the wrath and cruelty of devils instead. "It was mercy and love first of all to the Israelites. Unless the Canaanites were exterminated, they would be themselves exterminated."

Even Mr. Torrey cannot here undertake to defend these supposed-to-be God-given commandments, without, in a sense, acknowledging their wickedness. He acknowledges that it certainly is appalling that any people should be put to the sword, together with their old men and old women, and young women and children." But when he thinks of their "moral corruption and debasement, so utter and perversive, even down to babes just born," he becomes reconciled to God's judgments, which are unsearchable.

Is it not self-evident that this man is judging God through his prejudices, and not through his reason? How does he know that babies "just born," are filled with moral corruption and debasement?" Does not this smack a little of Calvinism? These infants "filled with moral corruption and debasement," do they not belong in the endless tormenting hell which John Calvin prepared for them? And, were not our Presbyterian clergymen rather fast when they went to Los Angeles, Cal., a year or two since and rescued these little "morally corrupt" fiends from the mercy and love of this God and took them out of the hell of Calvinism?

Now will Brother Torrey please tell us where the proof is of the "corruption of these babes "just born"? Will he even undertake to find other proofs than the ipse dixit of ministers of his own ilk who "limp to make excuse for their God"—I say, will he undertake to find the proof of the wickedness of the parents, and uncles and cousins of these "babes just born," who are to be thus ruthlessly slaughtered by God's "peculiar" and "holy people"?

If a "holy nation" can do such bloody and unjust work as this, I would like to ask, in the name of sense, what an unholy nation can do? Has not the twentieth century advanced a little too far to pay heed to such silly sophistries, even though they are handed out as excuses for the wickedness of this God and his people?

Friend Torrey sees this as other common-sense people do, and undertakes to palliate the matter as follows. "By the regenerating power of the Gospel, it is possible to correct this, but we must remember that the case we have to deal with was centuries before the gospel proclamation."

Is that so? Then, in the name of humanity, I ask why the gospel was not earlier? and why these Hebrews were not sent out with the gospel as missionaries instead of as robbers, slave catchers, and murderers of new-born babies? But the reverend gentleman is, as usual with him, mistaken. The gospel was proclaimed centuries before these people were born. Paul says, in Gal. iii:8, the gospel was preached to Abraham. Abraham was the greatest kind of a great-grandfather to these warriors. Why preach the gospel of Abraham and then kill and send these poor people, babes and all, to hell because they never heard it?

This chapter is finally concluded with the statement that "The extermination of the Canaanite children was not only an act of love to the world at large, it was an act of mercy to the children themselves. What awaited these children if they were allowed to live? Something vastly worse than death."

If this is God's "act of love and mercy," it is hoped that he will not send either love nor mercy this way. I do not wonder that this man says of God, "his judgments are unsearchable, and his ways past finding out." What a pity that this preacher did not find this out before he made his feeble attempt to explain them.

The solemn lesson which Rev. Mr. Torrey says came to the Israelites, through being made the executioners of God's wrath was rather hard on the ten commandments, was rather hard on the sixth commandment, which says "thou shalt not kill." It was teaching this already cruel people to be still more cruel and unjust.

Mr. Torrey repeats the old threadbare assertion, which has been made by the defenders of the Old Testament God for centuries, that the Canaanites were a very wicked people. Perhaps they were, but that would not justify the Hebrews in being more wicked. Let this reverend defender of the mistakes and the wicked things in the Bible, undertake to show the wickedness of these people, whom he slanders, while he justifies the wickedness of the Israelites in their crimes against them. When he does that I will find the Hebrews guilty of every crime, and filled with every loathsome disease he will find among the "seven nations" which were greater than they were.

MOSES HULL.

"WOMAN'S RIGHTS,"

As Related to Courtship and Marriage.

In all past campaigns of pen and voice, for "Woman's Rights," it was always centering upon and limited to claims and complaints for her on account of ungranted and denied rights due her of a civic and political citizenship nature, and those that concern her status as to professional and industrial privileges; they were claims for her for a sort of political equality with man. And I do not minimize these phases of "woman's rights," nor wish to exclude them from the category of rights due her. But while there is a sort of armistice and lull in the public pressure of those claims for woman, I wish to add another phase of woman's rights, as related to courtship and marriage. I may fearfully miss the mark in meeting this claim for woman, and she may wholly disavow it, but I leave that to the hereafter, and if I have missed my aim I will simply get no game, and I will charge it to my rashness and ignorance. And now for the theme that woman should have equal rights in courtship and marriage with man.

And I will also promise that if woman's equality of rights herein is due her, it would be much more becoming and proper for the man to make the offer and state the woman's case for her than wait for and ask her to do it.

In the creation of the sexes there are found to be about an equal number of males and females—possibly a few more of the latter to supply the greater peril of maternity. And this numerical equality of the sexes also at once suggests the law of monogamy, and that of course also at once rules out the practice of polygamy. And it is, I think, about conceded by man that the woman should have all the civic, political, industrial and business rights that man has. And then it also necessarily follows that every woman—young or old—is entitled to a married life partner, and also, I take it, prefers that relation, and indeed needs it for the proper development of life.

And then assuming that woman prefers and is entitled to a suitable married life-partner, I ask the question, why should she be compelled to sit still and make no effort for such relationship?

There is no other matter that concerns woman's welfare or her relation to business, property, or anything wherein she cannot and does not occupy an affirmative and aggressive position in relation thereto, unless it be only in the single matter of courtship and marriage. But herein there is an omnipotent social barrier in the way. Now do not be shocked about this proposition, my dear reader, but think and reason about it. Marriage, as related to the adult life, is the most important matter involved in human existence, and yet woman, under the mere ban of social sentiment, is deprived from making advances the same as man. That is, man may pick out a sweetheart, and let her know it; but woman cannot single out a lover and say so to him; that were horrid!

This social custom seems to be based on the idea that a marriage proposition by a man to a woman is a sort of courtesy, which it were rude and improper for a woman to make. But why is this objection on this subject which exists against her on nothing else?

And look at the seriousness of the engagement—what it involves. It involves a partnership of the highest type for a lifetime, of the two persons. It is the fulcrum of the family life; the culmination and fruition of the legitimate human love for woman as well as man; it is the one fact and event around which centers the ideal human existence, but yet the woman who would take any active steps to enter this primeval paradise would at once be ostracised from the social realm by her own sex even. It is for the highest interest of human society that each man and woman, at the proper age, shall find a mate. And this is also probably the wish of each man and woman; and then, if this is the desired result, will it be more likely attained if altogether left to fate and the man, or if the man and the woman were both allowed to be on the hunt and lookout for a mate?

This is about the largest business proposition that the world has on hand. It involves the chief events of life; and shall one of the partners be relegated to silence in the matter, or should the woman in this, like in other matters, be allowed to agitate the subject?

That is what I mean. And herein, as in all other matters that involve "bargains," it would not be expected that woman would just by violence, corner and corral an unwilling subject, but use her native arts and shrewdness. But the proposition is, whether she must simply sit still, and then when no one comes around to propose, call her an "old maid," as the reward of her imprisonment. In short, the man is allowed to look around for a wife, but not the woman for a husband, and the question is whether that is giving the woman her rights?

And again, no doubt under the present custom the woman often accepts offers of persons whom, they feel are not worthy of the partnership; but if the woman has to sit idly by and wait for proposals, she runs the risk in refusing an unworthy one to having no chance at all. For in this regard she—I mean many of them—are like beggars, who are not to be choosers. And then suppose we would reverse the problem a little season—just for three months—and let no man be allowed to propose matrimony to a woman, what a piteous moan would go up from the brethren for a change.

Then after that suppose we would extend this social ban to six months, and then a year; how the men would sit around in sack-cloth and ashes, ready to do unto others as they wish to be done by.

But if it so happens that man once proposes, then all the other propositions and details of the marriage contract may be properly discussed by the woman as well as the man; but the woman is barred, no matter how much she may fairly love a man, to make the initial proposition, for this can only come from the one side, even if the woman has waited from girlhood to old maidhood, in most deserving solicitude.

The married state is due to every woman, and each as a rule, desires to enter it. It is the castle and fortress of the permanent part of the human life. Shall the woman be permitted to secure it by the same means as the man, and as she also acquires other possessions, or be compelled to take her chances in silence?

Of course it is understood that I have no personal interest or "chances involved in the issue above presented; and if any of my sisters are shocked by the proposition made, let my innocence and ignorance be the excuse. But I would like the reasons why a woman cannot propose or look out for her own mate stated, so I can examine them to see if they are sound. For I wish to be right on all subjects, and more especially one so important as this.

MRS. NELLIE DAVIS.

A Medium Who Delivers Excellent Lectures While in a Trance.

To the Editor:—I saw the beautiful messages in your valuable paper, given through the mediumship of Mrs. Nellie Davis, and was much interested in them. I am slightly acquainted with this medium and know her to be true and honest. Through her mediumship I became convinced of the truths of Spiritualism. I enclose a clipping from the Neponset Messenger which will tell you of her mediumship, and am sure it will provo interesting to every reader of The Progressive Thinker.

JAMES R. CONVERSE, M. D.

The Medium, Mrs. Nellie Davis.

The lectures recently delivered here in Neponset by Mrs. Nellie E. Davis, of Kewanee, while in an unconscious trance has made this lady and the interesting phenomena occurring in her presence, the subject of general discussion. I therefore conclude that a brief sketch of her life and a plain, unbiased statement of facts in relation to the phenomena as witnessed by persons of intellect and undoubted integrity will prove interesting to the readers of the Messenger.

Mrs. Nellie E. Davis was born in Sheffield, Ill., Feb. 28, 1869. She is the daughter of Thomas Durack, of Mineral, at present, and for many years past the section boss at that place for the C. R. I. & P. R. R. She is the wife of Mr. Frank Davis, of Kewanee, who is a son of Mr. Hiram Davis, police magistrate, of Sheffield.

Mrs. Davis attended the district school at Mineral until thirteen years of age. Since that time she has been an industrious, hard-working woman, with but little time for reading and self-culture. She has three children whose ages range from eight to twelve years. She has lived all of her life in Sheffield, Mineral, Neponset and Kewanee. In all these places she has made many friends and no enemies. She is a truthful, conscientious and honorable woman, highly respected by all who know her. This I can say without fear of contradiction.

About two years ago it was first discovered that Mrs. Davis was a medium, and from that time to the present, seances have been held at her home or at some of the neighbors' in the immediate vicinity; as often as once or twice each week, attended by six or eight personal friends of undoubted intelligence and integrity, among which I have permission to mention and refer the reader, are: Nathaniel Tibbetts, supervisor of Kewanee, and wife; Chas E. Sturts, city attorney, and wife. I might mention other equally creditable persons who attended these seances; all of the same mind as to the character of the manifestations that occurred.

From these sensible and careful investigators during the past two years, I learn that Mrs. Davis, while in an unconscious trance, writes with both hands, two communications on entirely two different subjects; writes the German language, of which she is utterly ignorant. Writing between folded slates is produced and she also claims to see spirits and describes them, gives the date, cause and place of their death, often of those who have lived a long distance away and the names unknown to those present, that time and again have those present wrote to responsible persons at the place mentioned and in every instance have her statements been verified. I might mention still more astounding phenomena that have been witnessed at these seances but let this suffice. All the witnesses agree in saying that they have never noticed the least word or action on the part of Mrs. Davis that had even a tint of fraud or deception; that these seances were free, and that on several occasions she has returned money sent her by persons who had their sealed questions answered.

Her first attempt to speak to a public audience was at this place. She first delivered quite a long prayer in which with deep and earnest pathos she invoked the Divine Spirit to possess, uplift and aid her in presenting the grand truth of immortality as made manifest by spirit return. She then delivered an address presenting the claims of Spiritualism that was truly wonderful. Her well-rounded sentences were delivered in clear and distinct tones, without hesitation or embarrassment; full of deep, tender and earnest appeals to the moral and spiritual nature of her audience.

The following Wednesday Mrs. Davis delivered a lecture at the Town Hall. Her prayer on this occasion being a poem. Her lecture was decidedly different from her former one, in fact a more scholarly one. Going back to the 14th century, B. C., she mentioned the great religious reformers, such as, Confucius, Buddha and other zealous religious teachers that had appeared from time to time all along the ages down to the present. As she expressed it, "The golden thread of Divine light that has ever penetrated the darkness of earth, and lit up a pathway that has led to mental, moral and spiritual progress."

Had these grand and eloquent addresses, closing with a beautiful poem, been delivered in Apollo Hall to a cultured Princeton audience, it would have been impossible to have convinced them that the speaker was one of our country girls, who had acquired her limited education in a district school at the age of thirteen years, and that these were her first attempts to speak in public. That strange and unaccountable phenomena occurs in her presence is admitted by all who have had an opportunity of knowing the facts. The opinion of others who have not, will have no weight with sensible people.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Minute Animal Life.

"The microscope teaches us," says a scientist, "that there are animals so wonderfully minute that if a thousand of them were ranked abreast they could easily swim, without being thrown out of order, through the eye of the finest cambric needle ever made. Yet each of the minute creatures is a highly organized number of particles, capable of moving about, of finding and devouring food and of behaving in all respects as becomes an animal as distinguished from a fragment of unorganized matter." The human mind is utterly incapable of realizing the structure of these little creatures and of fully appreciating their marvelous adaptation to the life they are destined to lead.—Ex.

The waters of gulfs, bays and the ocean bordering Greenland were described by explorers as possessing a peculiar yellowish color. Until recently it was supposed this condition was caused by some earthy substance. Recent examination by a powerful microscope revealed the fact that this color was imparted by a species of wriggling, squirming infusoria, animalcules so minute as to be invisible to the eye, unless aided by a most powerful lens. Then every drop of water was a world of bustling activity.

The atmosphere, too, is swarming with infinitesimal life. Modern surgeons are very careful to exclude wounds from access by this germ life. This is the secret of the success of modern surgery. Only a few days ago, mentioned in these columns, an entire living brain was lifted from its bony casement, and an offending nerve was removed, the pain ceased, and at last advices the lady sufferer was making a speedy recovery. Agents destructive to germ life are employed in such cases, which make surgical operations possible, which no one would have attempted within a few years.

If material life is so abundant on this planet of ours, and yet is concealed from our normal senses, laying aside our knowledge from spirit revelation, is there anything inconsistent with natural philosophy that precludes the idea of a refined, ethereal organization going out of the gross material body of man at death, and living on in a more exalted condition than we are capable of comprehending now? We think not.

Another Pious Dodge.

And now another organization has been formed, of super serviceable pious propagandists, whose method of converting the world is to post in cars, on billboards, etc., bible texts printed in large letters, so that the eyes of people may fall on them everywhere. It is a piece of pious impertinence, such as very zealous "professors of religion" are given to imposing on "infidels" and non-religious people.

There are no people who would howl louder than these pious zealots if the "infidels" were to plaster cars, fences, billboards, etc., with sentences from the minds of Paine, Ingersoll, Hume, Voltaire, for religionists to read; but such action would be the same in character as that contemplated by themselves.

It is safe to say that these bible text advertisers will not print and post a great many very interesting parts and texts of the book they so devoutly adore—parts suitable, if we may be allowed to use the descriptive adjective in such a case, for the most private reading only, and never aloud in the hearing of others.

We will not print samples of this sort of Bible literature; it would subject us to prosecution by the United States postal authorities, and justly, too, we apprehend. Besides that, the matter would be improper and inadmissible in the columns of a respectable journal. Hence, if any one is overcurious to know, he must consult the book itself. He will never hear the preachers read them in the pulpit.

The passions, like heavy bodies down steep hills, once in motion, move themselves and know no ground but the bottom.—Fuller.

Spiritualistic Communities Failures.

The rise and development of Christian Science, under the leadership of Mrs. Eddy; of Zionism under Dowie; and Mormonism under Brigham Young—for all with that sect before this last character, save in name and organization, seem to have been a series of failures ending in tragedy. Quite unlike in creed, yet each had the elements of pecuniary success.

Intimately familiar with all the leading incidents connected with Spiritualism from its very inception in 1848, we cannot do else than contrast the difference between the failures of the latter at organization, concentration and financial success, with the three first named.

Numberless efforts have been made by capital, energy and organizing ability, to form communities of Spiritualists, and to unite on a creed; but each effort has been a signal failure. In common language, it seems as if Fate antagonized every attempt in the direction indicated. And, sad to relate, in every case coming under our observation, the parties were ruined financially, and in some cases morally.

And while about it we may as well add the fact, that Spiritualism has been the graveyard of journalism. Paper after paper has come to the front, flourished for a time, until its founder was bankrupt, and if it survived for any considerable period, it has changed ownership, with generally editorial management, and then has been lost in the gulf of oblivion. It is needless to particularize. They have generally clung to the dominant religion, tried to engraft their faith on Christianity, and made open issue with those who accepted spirit revelation that through all the history of the race humanity has been advancing in knowledge, in moral and social worth; that there is no need of a Redeemer, for man has never fallen, and there is no burning hell from which to be rescued.

It is clearly the purpose of the spirit world to indoctrinate all the churches, all the people in them, and the world at large with the certainty of a continued life, that they have the ability to communicate with those still in the flesh; and with Thomson, to assure mortals—

"They cannot go
Where Universal Love not smiles around,
Sustaining all yon orbs, and all their suns;
From seeming evil still educing good,
And better thence again, and better still,
In INFINITE PROGRESSION."

A Good Subject for Thought.

Conversing with a very zealous Methodist friend on religious subjects, he expressed surprise at the action of what he supposed was a devoted Methodist a few years ago. He said his friend was well-educated, a great reader, spent all his spare resources for books, while he improved every leisure moment in acquiring knowledge. He was always esteemed a very devout Christian, and was universally beloved by all who knew him. He was a constant attendant at church, but for a long time had refused to participate in celebration of the Lord's supper. He finally withdrew from the church, and seemed to have lost all reverence for the holy Sabbath.

"I can't understand," said our friend, "how it was possible for so good a man to break away from his religious associates, and early teaching, and reject the gospel as of divine origin, as he did. He even went so far as to deny there was a historical Jesus."

We inquired if Mr. M. was any the less a good neighbor or friend than before he left the church.

"No, indeed; he turned his attention to care for the destitute, and in place of attending church service, prayer meetings or socials, it was common talk that he devoted the time formerly spent in that direction in hunting up the poor and supplying them with needs."

"His skepticism," we replied, "seems to have assumed a very practical form. Do you not think," we inquired, "that such exhibitions of interest in suffering humanity are more commendable than strict observance of holy days, and church rituals? Belief is nothing, action is everything. Good deeds are infinitely superior to blind, unreasoning faith."

"There is where we differ. The Bible teaches that belief in Jesus is the condition if salvation."

"I concede the Bible so teaches; but did you ever stop to think that salvation from a burning hell was offered as a bribe, a sort of sop, by the priestly writer, to impose his fictitious son of God on an unbelieving world? If you will believe the son of man was the coequal of the Eternal Father you shall occupy a seat at his right hand and sing his glory through all the eons of a wasteless eternity."

"I won't talk with you," said our good Christian brother, indignantly, so he arose, picked up his hat and hastened away, in possession of a good subject for further thought at his leisure.

Cultivating Spiritual Laziness.

There are some mediums—probably every reader knows of such—who claim that "spirits" teach them all they need to know; and some even refuse to read books or newspapers because their "controls" so command or advise them. They, the controls, are their teachers and will impart all needed knowledge, and the reading of books and papers is a detriment in their education.

Of course the nature of this advice is in itself evidence of the ignorance of the "controls," but the advice fits the disposition of their willing and obedient medium, who thus joins the "controls" in the cultivation of spiritual laziness and ignorance.

Such persons may talk glibly about spiritual unfoldment, but unfoldment implies growth, and such growth is not acquired by mental laziness, inactively waiting for the "controls" to pour their own ignorance into passive mental receptacles, too lazy to expand and grow into beautiful spiritual vigor, life and unfoldment.

Their minds become like unnourished, uncultivated, stunted trees in the orchard, incapable of bearing ripe, rich, luscious fruit—they are made unfruitful by their spiritual laziness.

It is really a sad matter, the blighting of one's spiritual growth and unfoldment, by cultivating spiritual laziness.

A Startling Fact.

Learned critics who have carefully investigated the subject say, some 600 Greek words were invented by the good Paul to fully express his ideas in his Epistles, which had more to do in shaping Christianity than had the words of Jesus. But the astonishing fact revealed in this connection is: Those newly coined words were largely constructed from the old-time French. Does anyone believe a native of Tarsus, of Cilicia, an ancient province of Asia Minor, was learned in the obscure French of 1900 years ago? On the contrary is it not probable, as has been maintained by scholars, that those Pauline Epistles were written by a French Catholic monk, not well versed in Greek, and that he supplied words coined from his native French to supply the need?

Another startling fact will probably be revealed in due time that those Epistles were written since the Crusades, and certainly in the monasteries of France or Italy.

Col. Ingersoll's Bible.

The great agnostic thus defined his Bible; there were no angered gods, fallen men, crucified saviors, or smutty stories in it:

"Everything that is true, every good thought, every beautiful thing, every self-denying action; all these make my Bible. Every bubble, every star, is a passage in my Bible. A constellation is a chapter. Every shining world is a part of it. It cannot be interpolated, it cannot be changed. It is all the same forever. My Bible is all that speaks to man. Every violet, every blade of grass, every tree, every mountain crowned with snow, every star that shines, every throb of love, every honest act, all that is good and true combined make my Bible, and upon that book I stand."

Let Us Weep.

"Thus saith the Lord, Israel is my son, even my first-born."—Exodus 4:22.

This is as positive a "Thus saith the Lord," as any passage in the Bible and is unqualified. In the face of their declaration, how came Jesus to be designated as "the only begotten son of God?" There must be some mistake somewhere. It can't be possible "the Lord" had two "first-borns," and these 1,500 years apart. And yet the book recording these two conflicting statements is inerrant, and the Christian world is wasting its wealth in sending these irreconcilable records to the heathen as the "Word of God." If lying is a sin, let us turn aside and weep.

A Question Referred.

Millis Kueckerbocker sends a photographic representation of what is presumably the "jawbone of an ass"—as referred to in the bible story of Samson slaying the Philistines, and asks: "If this jawbone killed 1,000 men, how many more clips would break the bone?" We turn the question over to the erudite professors in theology and biblical exegesis.

SADIE MAC.

"Hartford, Ct., Sept. 6.—Sadie Mac, who dropped dead in the fourth heat yesterday was buried this afternoon in the horse graveyard at the track. Her owner, Miss Katherine L. Wilkes, will erect a tablet on the grave."

Room for another martyr!—Sadie Mac,
A fine sub-human creature dead;—dropped dead
While whipped to utterest speed to win a race
"She might well do," owner and rider said.

Had the proud mare known language she'd have told
Her lady owner and her rider, too,
That she was ailing when she lagged and lost.
She needed rest—but yet they whipped her through.

Thirty-five thousand! That is what it cost
To whip the oft-victorious winner on.
She could not say, "Beware! I cannot speed!"
But just dropped dead before the race was won.

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

To Be Held in Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

The thirteenth annual convention of the National Spiritualists' Association will be held in the First Unitarian Church, Eighth street and Mary Place, Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

Among those invited and expected to participate in the exercises are Rev. Dr. Austin, Will J. Erwood, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Oscar Edgerly, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Mesdames. H. P. Ressegue, R. S. Lillie, Laura G. Fixen, Eva McCoy, Margaret Gaule Ridinger, and a galaxy of others.

Come one and all to the greatest Spiritual convention ever held.

Special railway rates on the certificate plan can be secured over all lines. Ask your railroad agent for certificate tickets to the National Spiritualists' convention at Minneapolis; the round fare will be one and one-third of a fare. Delegates and visitors desiring to receive the benefits of this special rate must have their tickets vised by our railroad agent at convention the last day, October 20, and pay 25 cents each for such vising.

Hotel Nicollet, a first-class hotel on the European plan, will be headquarters of the convention. Special rates for good rooms, one dollar per day each person. Write and secure your rooms from Shattuck & Wood, proprietors of the Nicollet Hotel, Minneapolis, Minn.

The annual reception to delegates and visitors will be held at the First Unitarian Church, Monday, October 16, at 8 p. m.

All are cordially invited. Admission free to all meetings.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
Secretary.
HARRISON D. BARRETT,
President.

No! Such a God my worship may not win,
Who lets the world about his finger spin,
A thing extern; my God must rule within;
And whom I own for Father, God, Creator,
Holds Nature in himself, himself in Nature;
And, in his kindly arms embraced, the whole
Doth live and move by his pervading soul."

We should avoid whatever may display bad feeling, and attend with civility to what may be addressed to us; all hearts are conciliated by politeness and affability.—Socrates.

Review of Passing Events.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE, EDITOR-AT-LARGE, N. S. A.

Thomas Olman Todd's Story of the Rochester Rappings.

Since the advent of the "Rochester Rappings" to the present, there has been a constant repetition of absurd and defamatory stories, exposes, and false statements, and the secular press, eager for sensational news, has welcomed the conscienceless penny-a-liner, who sought to please the opponents of Spiritualism. No authoritative book has been published to which appeal might be made, and there was danger that the future would have to judge these early manifestations by the representations of enemies, and not from the testimony of friendly observers.

Thomas Olman Todd, the well-known writer and publisher of Sunderland, England, seeing the value of this historic matter, has devoted himself to the collection of all known material, and with exceptional ability, written a book under the title, "The Story of the Rochester Knockings Which Proclaimed Modern Spiritualism." He has published it in a beautiful style of type and binding, making it a worthy souvenir of the advent of the most momentous movement of modern times.

Mr. Todd has been identified with Spiritualism for many years. He has served the British Spiritualists Lyceum Union as president, and its success is largely due to his devotion.

As in all his undertakings, he has made thorough work and left little or nothing to be desired outside his pages. His impartiality of judgment, and truthfulness of spirit he brings to the subject, impresses the reader with the value of his statements and conclusions. The book is complete, exhaustive and final, as it contains all the evidences that can be collected on the subject it treats, and comes most opportunely.

George Allen Bacon.

In the work of the Editor-at-Large no one has been more helpful than George Allen Bacon. With his literary tastes, opportunities and deep interest in the cause, he constantly furnished clippings and valuable suggestions. A "friend of forty years," our friendship was renewed by this fraternal labor, and deeply was the loss felt when his strength failed and the decline began which ended in his transition. The earth seems lonely when we think of such friends who have left us in the valley. With us it is true they live in a higher sphere, yet not the same nor as able to share the burdens with us.

He was one of the "Old Guards," who never failed in the trying days of Spiritualism. His tongue and pen were ready in its defense, and expounding its philosophy. Many brilliant tracts have been written by him which merit wide distribution, but he was so modest and painstaking, his best work has not been published. He expected to retire from business life, and revise it. Alas, he waited too long!

Mr. Bacon was born in 1830, at Wellfleet, Mass., and from ten years of age made Boston his home. Generous, with warm sympathy for the oppressed, he associated with Phillips and Garrison in the cause of anti-slavery, and after that triumphed, was deeply engaged in woman's suffrage.

With these reforms he blended the study of comparative religion and wrote one of a proposed series of pamphlets on "Buddha and His Teachings." He also constantly contributed valuable essays to the spiritual press.

In 1861 he received an appointment in the War Department, was transferred to the Agricultural, and thence to the Civil Service Commission, a position he retained until his failing health compelled him to resign.

Of the most sterling integrity of character, honest to the last degree, gentle and urbane to all, fraternal to the heart's core, without a shade of envy or selfishness, with always a word of praise and kindness, never of harsh censure, he was beloved by all with whom he came in contact. He was an ideal personation of the spiritual philosophy in the conduct of life.

He was one of that group that at one time formed a shining constellation in the firmament of Spiritualism. Judge Edmunds, Dr. Dexter, S. B. Brittan, Luther Colby, Professor Mapes, Governor Talmage, Fishbough, A. E. Newton, A. E. Giles, Courtney, John S. Adams, Ripley Putnam, of that group of associates have all gone before him, and will give him welcome to the new sphere of activity which will open before him.

Mr. Bacon was domestic in his tastes and simple in his manner of living. After the business of the day, he gave himself to literary work in his study, or relaxed in social intercourse. In this he was sustained by a wife whose nobility of mind endeared her to all—Miss Louise Lynde, of Melrose, descended from a line of patriots and in refined culture and the graceful amenities of social life was a recognized leader in the societies and clubs to which she belonged.

My friend is dead and with sorrow I place this tribute on the shrine of his dear memory. It may be selfish to regret the departure of those dear to us. It may be said that Spiritualism makes death only transition; that the dead have only changed earthly for celestial garments, yet the transition is so vast and incomprehensible that they are seemingly taken out of our lives, and in all physical relations are as nothing to us.

Yet if we were on the other side of the portal, with the angels, we would welcome the spirit to its immortal home.

The Ways of the Evangelist.

Said a prominent orthodox minister recently: "Do you think the Congregationalists, or any other church, believe in the old dogmas? Why, sir, you are beating a straw man of your own creation, when you argue against such beliefs, which have been discarded by us long ago."

If this be true, then the church has taken the lead and stolen a march on reformers. If it is true, why was there such a struggle over cutting out even the most despicable item in the creed, that of infant damnation? And by their vote to strike it out, did not the assembled ministers declare their adherence to the remaining portion?

If the belief in a literal hell and devil has passed and we waste time in efforts to prove the absurdity of such superstitions, why are they constantly pictured in lurid colors by gospel ministers and evangelists?

Of course no one at all enlightened believes these horrible fancies, but the preachers make believe that they do, to avoid heresy charges, and the laity make believe they do because it is easier than to deny. The most ignorant are stirred by the ranting revivalist, when he portrays the fires of hell and the cloven hoof of the devil.

Of these evangelists, one Rev. Taylor in his zeal for hell and thorough knowledge of the devil is leader. He is an intimate acquaintance of his evil majesty and a confidant of God. At a recent camp-meeting he is reported as saying:

"I want to lift the lid to-night and uncover hell. The devil is in hell longing for you, trying to get you and drag you down. Nothing but the love and power and mercy of God keeps you from hell. The only reason why you sinners are not in hell to-night is because Jesus Christ has still hold of you. When he sees it is no use for him to hold on to you any longer, great roaring, hellish devils will come with glee and drag you to the pit. God don't damn men. It's your sin and the devil."

For an hour he poured forth this "rot," which should bring the blush of shame to the management for allowing on their platform the utterance of such blasphemy.

Rev. Taylor is sure all Spiritualists are going to hell, to wander forever from one sinking cinder-bog to another over the incandescent flood. It is kind, charitable and Christian of him, but truly the man who can imagine such a place and gloat over the prospect of the suffering of his enemies, if there be such a place, would be elected for the hottest corner.

An Obect Lesson.

The effects moral and mental of such preaching are deleterious, often frightful in results. Asylums are replenished with those hypnotized into the delusion and a full, unquestioning belief would drive any one, having the least sympathy for his fellow-man, to insanity. If these ranting "evangelists" cannot be suppressed in any other manner, should there not be laws against those who thus libel man and blaspheme God? Do they not come within the direct field of legislation?

Another apostle of a new faith opened evangelical labors at Boyd Lake, Maine. He was requested by leading citizens to leave the town, but did not shake the dust from his garments in haste of departure. "Moved by the Holy Ghost," he began preaching and brought over the Baptist church and its minister. The doctrines he taught were as novel as startling but were supported good and strong by Bible texts.

The elder said he was imbued with the theory that all souls were one, that purity of heart is everything and in view of all this all sects should be abandoned. Some of the congregation inferred from this that free love was the central idea, and some of the men kept their wives and daughters at home.

The free love idea was strengthened when the Baptist minister and the elder threw their arms about each other's neck and rolled on the floor, where they hugged and kissed each other in the dust, and loudly called on the Lord to hear and witness their joy. This rolling, hugging and kissing was almost too much for the old-fashioned Baptists, but one by one they were gathered into the fold and at recent meetings they have all been rolling, hugging and kissing promiscuously. Newcomers are invariably shocked to find half the congregation bobbing about under the legs of the benches, but apparently they have found satisfaction in getting rid of the devil by this method, for nine out of ten soon join in the same exercise.

How completely the "religious revivals" are the result of hypnotic influence, is shown by its effects in the case of a young convert, Miss Ethel March. She was converted and at a meeting the elder ordered her to advance and exhort with him. She hesitated but under his influence, faced the audience and began speaking, swinging her head and arms violently from side to side. She was taken home at the close of the meeting in a trance, became violently ill, and although all that medical skill could do, was done, died. The non-believers aroused by this terrible affair, attempted to have the elder prosecuted for manslaughter, but found there was no law that reached the case. The elder can go on in his conversion of souls until arrested by a crisis in public opinion.

Such events furnish a sad commentary on the boasted intelligence of this century, and show how crying is the need of the people for the comprehensive philosophy of life here and hereafter, furnished by Spiritualism. If mankind is ever to be uplifted from these marshlands of theology, Spiritualism is the only source to which it must look for redemption.

CONVERSES WITH HIS WIFE.

A Strange Case, Illustrating Spirit Communion Under Peculiar Circumstances.

Residents of Lake county, Indiana, which adjoins Cook county, Illinois, and Spiritualist in Chicago are greatly excited over the latest theory advanced in the case of August C. Wilhelm, accused by his aged mother of having smothered his wife, Sept. 8, 1904, near Hobart, Ind. Information has been received by D. E. Boone, the district attorney of Lake county, that WILHELM WENT EVERY NIGHT TO THE ROOM WHERE HIS WIFE DIED AND HELD COMMUNION WITH HER SPIRIT. The room has not been entered by another living person except Wilhelm since his wife's death.

District Attorney Boone believes a search of this room will reveal the blood-stained garments, sheet and pillow slip, said by Wilhelm's mother to have been used in wiping up the blood alleged to have been vomited by the woman in her death throes.

Bars His Mother From Room.

Wilhelm locked the door to his wife's bedroom the day after her death. He forbade his mother to enter it under penalty of death. She was barred entirely from that part of the house. When she informed the district attorney that her son had gone there every night and remained for an hour or two at a stretch the official went to the house to search the room. He could not find a key to fit the lock, and not desiring to break down the door returned to Hobart for a locksmith. Wilhelm's mother accompanied him to the house and pointed out a place on the form where she said her son had told her he buried the bloodstained garments, a spade was procured, but an hour's digging failed to disclose the linens. It is Mr. Boone's belief now that if there are any such garments they were never buried, but were hidden in the bedroom.

Wilhelm Prisoner at Hammond.

Wilhelm is confined in a solitary cell at Hammond. He did not know for what he had been arrested until late this afternoon, when District Attorney Boone placed him in the "sweatbox." Mr. Boone was confident that Wilhelm, if guilty, would confess. The plan he formed to compel Wilhelm to confess was to make him believe his mother, who, like her son, is a Spiritualist, had been in communication with her dead daughter-in-law, and that she had been informed by the spirit of the full details of the murder.

The Wilhelms lived on a farm one and a half miles east of Hobart. A few days ago Wilhelm was arrested on a warrant charging him with choking his mother. The warrant was sworn out by Gilbert Isakson, a brother of the dead woman. Constable Burge and Police Sergeant Louis Debow, accompanied by eight men, surrounded the house at night and had Wilhelm, who is a giant in stature, handcuffed before he realized what was happening.

Says Insurance Was Motive.

Wilhelm's mother, piqued at her son because of the beating she says he gave her, informed the police that he confessed to her he smothered his wife to death so he could secure the $1,000 insurance carried on her life in the order of the Lady Maccabees.

At the time of his arrest Wilhelm made what is believed by the officers to be a damaging statement. He had not been informed of the charge he was arrested on, and when he gave utterance to the following words his guilt was fixed in the minds of the officers. He is alleged to have said:

"Boys, I want to go back and see mother. I will be away from home a long time, and I may never see her again. I did not do what she told you I did."

As Lake County has no appropriation from which it can take the money necessary to pay for exhuming Mrs. Tillie Wilhelm's body, the circuit court judge today created a special fund. The body will be exhumed at once. District attorney Boone, while he fears the body may have disintegrated, hopes that the lungs and heart will be in a condition to show whether the woman was smothered to death or died of heart disease, which was the coronor's opinion at the time.—Chicago Evening Journal, September 10.

ORTHODOX TITLES.

They Are Misfits When Applied to Spiritualists.

Organized Spiritualism now constitutes a church. Its success will depend largely on the manner in which it is conducted. Many Spiritualists have grown far away from orthodox churches, and will not consent to adopt and follow orthodox forms, ceremonies and titles.

The most objectionable feature that has developed in this connection, is the tendency to adopt the title of Reverend by our public speakers.

We all know that considerable amount of odium attaches to the cause of Spiritualism. In order to ward off that odium and make ourselves appear respectable, some of our speakers try to ape the churches. They succeed just about as well as did the man who bitterly opposed the efforts of the Government to put down the great Rebellion, until the war was over, and then hastened to buy and wear an army overcoat, for the purpose of gaining good standing.

The title Reverend is a misfit when applied to a Spiritualist, and if its use shall be persisted in, it will cause many thousands of good Spiritualists to stand aloof from all organizations, take to the woods, as it were, and enjoy their intercourse with their spirit friends, in their own way. They don't have to join an organization to escape hell fire and brimstone. Most of us understand the necessity and value of organized efforts but many will not lend their aid in that direction if it becomes necessary to trail after a "Reverend" to do so. I give the churches credit for all the good they do. I can freely join with church people in works for the betterment of mankind, but I reject their doctrines, forms, ceremonies and titles.

If we have anything distinctive from other churches, let us mark it out in plain terms. Our platform should be a brief, plain statement of what we know, with omissions of all beliefs. I suggest that our next National Convention, recommend that the title of Reverend be eliminated from our vocabulary, and the title of Teacher or other unobjectionable title be substituted in its stead.

It is claimed by some that this matter is of no importance; that there is nothing in the name. I claim there is much in a name. Let the N. S. A. adopt the title of Pope for President and you would soon see what there is in a name.

An Experiment In Reincarnation.

BY CHARLES DAWBARN.

The most remarkable phase of spirit return has been its unreliable and contradictory statements as to what happens to a man after death. The fact that spirits of mortals do come back, and thus prove they are alive, may be taken as now accepted by most unprejudiced investigators. After most liberal allowance for the claims of both ignorance and fraud there is a residuum which spells S-P-I-R-I-T every time. But when so much is granted, and we try to take another step and learn something about the next life, we find ourselves in what the French call a cul-de-sac, and the English call a blind alley, which compels you to come out just where you went in.

As an illustration of this extraordinary confusion and contradiction we find the world of European spirits almost unanimous in declaring that a man will have to be born all over again into earth life, perhaps a number of times. He may object as much as he has a mind to, but its mumps and measles all over again, and all the other agreeables and disagreeables of mortal earth life. We may object, and declare we have had all the toothache and matrimonial infelicity necessary to eternal salvation and divine experience. But we are told that "reincarnation" is a fact that cannot be dodged, and that there is no system of heavenly graft by which it can be escaped. That would seem settled. But, on the other hand, American and English spirits make flat contradiction, and assert they have never been reincarnated, and never expect to be, and don't know anybody who has been.

The explanations on either and both sides are simply wearisome. Each believer swears by his own spirit teacher, as voiced through medium lips. This startling contradiction upon what must be a simple question of fact throws a halo of uncertainty about every spirit revelation that teaches anything about the next life. We believe in a certain defined future—if we believe at all—because we have more faith in the spirits who talk to us than we have in spirits who talk to the foreigners across the ocean.

Of course the dividing line is not quite so sharp as this. There are a few in opposition on both sides the Atlantic or the channel who hold very strongly to their individual beliefs, both for and against this coming back into earth life. But the reader will see it is merely a question of belief on both sides, and that the world is quietly laughing at both, because with all their talk, neither offers any real proof or evidence for or against the dogma.

There are whole nations, such for instance as Japan and China, which accept immortality as a fact, beyond any reasonable dispute. In fact their daily lives are more or less influenced by what they deem actual contact with the spirits of their ancestors. But that is not our question or our perplexity. It is not whether we live after death that is our present study. All but a few very hard-headed skeptics accept that now as at least possible. The question before us, and the motive for this article, is to enquire whether so important a fact as reincarnation, if it be a fact, can be reasonably demonstrated.

Here is where, in the judgment of the writer, our theosophical friends become untheosophical. They claim a lot of facts, called "mahatmas" and place place them away off in Thibet, out of reach and sight of unbelievers. If there be no mahatmas there is no reincarnation. At least that seems the substance and climax of their teaching. The writer, speaking for himself, would give all the years and dollars he could spare just to meet a mahatma, but the system forbids. The pity of it is that the teachings of present day Theosophists offer a more lucid and plausible explanation of the mysteries of manhood and mortal life than any other teachings known to the writer. But they all hinge on reincarnation and karma, with a substratum of Thibetan mahatma, and are therefore on a par with all other religions which demand great faith and offer little proof.

At this point my readers—feminine gender—might well say "you're another," and if I stopped here that would be true. But I think I have a glimpse of a few facts that seem to have a real bearing on this question of reincarnation. And it is these facts that I want to place before the student, and leave him to ponder over them, as I did.

Those who have experimented for themselves with mesmerism, as I did in the long ago, will have occasionally witnessed phenomena that seemed to open up a broader life than that of to-day. It was not merely the awakening of the memory of some comparatively recent event, but the sensitive seemed to reach from past to future of the sitter, and often with recognized accuracy. If the prescience were still more extended the poor sitter had usually reached the limit of his power of reception, and so sat silent and unconvinced. It was, of course, most interesting to be told of events of one's own childhood, which upon investigation proved true. But if one asked what lay back of that childhood the answer seemed but romance, and usually investigation ceased.

A certain Frenchman of renown in the realm of Spiritualism has been making most interesting experiments in this field, wherein lie the secrets of the remote past. His sensitive is a young lady of eighteen, born in India of missionary parents, and knowing nothing of mesmerism or Spiritualism. Col. A. de Rochas' experiments were made in the presence of the family physician, and of a civil engineer who was a friend of the family, neither of whom had any previous experience, and both made notes of all they witnessed. Occasionally others were present, including the president of the French Theosophical Society.

The young lady was mesmerized in the old-fashioned way by longitudinal passes, and the effect, as reported, is divided into a number of stages, in one of which she was slightly suggestible, but in the others she was apparently absolutely independent. As this can only be a brief synopsis of so much of the report as deals with the young lady's remote past, I must refer the student to the Annals of Psychical Science for July, 1905, if he wishes to read the entire report with all its interesting details.

An early effect of the mesmeric passes was the development of the astral body of the sensitive, which, however, could not leave the room, as it was stopped by the walls and ceiling. Being invisible to the Colonel he accidentally struck the astral hand, when an inflamed spot appeared on the hand of the sensitive, which remained for several days. This astral body is itself worthy of deep study, for the sensitive, by her own will power, at request of the Colonel, caused it to shape itself into the exact resemblance of the spirit mother of the young lady. Herein it seems to the present writer may be a clue to one of the great mysteries in materialization, but we cannot stop to study it now.

The experiments were continued regularly for months, the sensitive gaining more and more control of her outer self, as shown in the detailed reports of the witnesses. At last her sole link to the earth life of to-day seems to be through the Colonel, for she loses consciousness of the others present. Still her mental action remains independent of him, for she enters into details, and describes incidents of which the Colonel could have known nothing.

He asks her how old she is? She replies, "eighteen years." He tells her to return to the age of sixteen, and she then sees her body transformed to that age. The same for fourteen, twelve and ten years of age. But when she was thus ten years old the Colonel asks her where she is living? She replies "Marseilles," of which he was unaware. At eight years of age she sees herself in Beirut in Syria, where for a time she was staying with the sisters in a convent. She writes some letters of the alphabet in Arabic, long forgotten in her normal life, and that the Colonel has to have verified. At four years of age she is again in Marseilles. At two years old she was in Cuges in Provence. This was found to be true. At one year old she can no longer speak, but just nods "yes" or "no." Further back she is nothing more. She feels that she exists, and that is all. When pressed still further back she describes herself as "all in the grey," and remembers having had another existence.

These stages in her experience are repeated in various seances, till the Colonel presses her still further back when she declares herself a woman, and calls herself "Lina." Various details of her life are given such as her marriage to a fisherman in Brittany of the name of Yvon, the birth of a child which soon died, and her own suicide in despair when her husband perished in a shipwreck. These details were slowly elaborated, and in answer to a question she replied that something impelled her to reincarnate, and she came down to her missionary mother, when the latter was enceinte. As a most interesting incident all the witnesses noted that when the girl was talking of her motherhood as Lina, her form expanded, and her breasts became swollen.

A little later on the Colonel said to her, "I am going to make you still older." This was a rather difficult task and took much time, but at last she declared that in her incarnation previous to Lina she was a man named Charles Mauville. He was a clerk in a ministerial office, and was a wicked man, living in a wicked age. He took pleasure in killing. When fifty years old he fell ill and died. He remained attached to his body for some time, but finally became Lina of the next incarnation.

The Colonel tried to get descriptions of the intervening stage, which she always calls the "grey." She suffers, yet it is not physical suffering. It seems more like remorse. When repeating death scenes she nearly suffocated, and had to be brought back quickly.

The family doctor, in one of his reports, expresses his regret that he is not clairvoyant. He therefore could not see the astral body of the young girl, which seemed to be describing these experiences, but he can verify its presence, for when he advanced his hand slowly the contact produced a marked sensation of coldness on his fingers.

The Colonel slowly urged her back beyond the personality of Charles Mauville. When he was a child five years old his father was foreman in a factory. His mother is described as dressed in black, and wearing a bonnet. Before his birth he describes himself as "in the dark," and tormented by spirits he calls "shining." Before this she was a lady whose husband was a gentleman attached to the Court. Her name was Madelaine de Saint Marc. The details of her life are interesting, and she evinces some personal knowledge of certain historical characters of that era. She died at the age of 45, when she entered into "the dark." The attempts to take her back beyond the time of Madelaine were failures, save that once she seemed to go back to the state of a child which died quite young.

The Colonel sums up by saying: "It is difficult to recover the traces of the obscure personage of whom she objectivates the types, but these personages are not improbable." He says further: "If we could prove the personalities 'played' by subjects had really lived, we should have a proof of very great force in favor of the survival of the soul, and of its successive reincarnations. Unfortunately that proof has not been obtained."

The Colonel quotes from his experiences with another sensitive called Josephine. Here he received account of persons he calls "very plausible," as he has ascertained that the places named and the families had really existed. But in another case studied by M. Bouvier there were contradictions, absurdities and impossibilities. So our poor Colonel confesses himself as yet in "the darkness in which all observers have to struggle at the beginning of every new science." So it remains for him that "reincarnation has not been proved by his experiments with this young lady, and Josephine, because of the unfortunate results with other sensitives.

Necessarily the question of identity is the most important question for judges and juries, for if a mistake be made justice fails. In some celebrated cases, such as the Tichnor trials, a mother identified a man who was not her son. Yet this was when both were still in earth life. In the experience of spirit-return identification becomes much more difficult. In some rare cases scientific skeptics have been convinced, when other skeptics have declared the evidence insufficient. And we all know that, for the most part, believers have been convinced by purely emotional evidence, accepting fancied likeness, and possibly statements of some facts proved true, as satisfactory.

The broad fact of spirit-return has today a thousand believers to one who can produce proof satisfactory to a scientific or legal mind. In other words, both the evidence and the spirit are received as personal matters with which outsiders have nothing to do, any more than with any mortal friend who honors them with a visit.

If there be such difficulty with proof of identity in spirit return, which is only one remove from earth life, the difficulty becomes much greater when we seek proof of the verity of visitors, or even their earth experiences which claim to go back of Spirit-return.

If Socrates comes back with at least a spark of his old sagacity, and some knowledge of historical facts, we listen respectfully, and each makes up his individual opinion as to his identity. But if the intelligence who says he was Socrates claims that in a previous existence he was a Court jester, our belief stretches and cracks beyond repair. Yet in the nature of the case one might be as true as the other.

Many of us to-day believe that the aural powers of a sensitive very largely account for spirit phenomena. We find in clairvoyants, telepathy and many other occult forces, powers that may mean much or little in the individual case we are investigating. Yet at last, like Myers and some other prominent members of the S. P. R., we avow ourselves convinced of the truth of human unmortality. That was a step beset with difficulties, but in reincarnation we face a far deeper problem, so far as identity is to be proved.

Spirit-return from its one remove always exhibits weakness in memory of its earth experiences. At best we grope amidst confusion and perplexities before we dare say identity is reasonably proved. But if spirit-return of two, three or more removes presents itself no real proof of identity is possible. It must remain a matter of individual belief, or at least of individual assertion.

Some of us have revered spirit friends who have denied reincarnation as a possible fact in nature. This has seemed to us almost conclusive. Yet we must not forget that the spirit friends of myriad Europeans declare and teach just the contrary. So the unprejudiced student will carefully study such facts as these now produced before making up his mind either way.

As a further most interesting fact the writer is told that Spirit John Pierpont, who has denied reincarnation through his life-long medium Mrs. Longley, now asserts that he has discovered evidence in spirit life that satisfies him of its possible truth. Still I understand him as not even now presenting it as a universal law, but rather as an effect of conditions that may be personal. And many of us would hope to escape such conditions and fate.

If we have to wend our way into such mysteries without Mahatma assistance, I don't see any path so hopeful as that explored by Col. de Rochas. If under mesmeric influence a sensitive can travel back year after year through his own life, producing reasonable test facts as he goes, there seems no natural impossibility when this young lady sensitive declares she has lived in a mortal form before, and can recall certain experiences. If these experiences are dim, uncertain, and confused, so were the records of spirit-return that convinced Myers, Hodgson, Hyslop and many others. And if the sensitive goes back yet another, and perhaps a third step in her reincarnations there seems nothing but the confused and limited recollections to dim the record. It seems doubtful if we can ever advance much further in such investigations while we are mortals.

There will, of course, be minds to whom such proofs will be satisfactory, because out of them, or upon them, they can, like theosophists, build up a system of creative mathematics which seems to solve many of the greatest mysteries of earth life. Most assuredly the writer is not at present able to enroll himself a believer in reincarnation, but these experiments of the French Colonel have given him a respect for that dogma he never felt before. So he commends it to the careful study of every intelligent reader.

If it be that reincarnation is a possibility only, it seems at least suggested that those only reincarnate whose spiritual development was not sufficient to evolve a manhood adapted to a higher existence. So we close with the long taught spirit axiom that an earth life lived to its highest possibility is the best possible preparation for the life to come.

If reincarnation be subject to that condition then such a life may render it unnecessary and perhaps impossible.

"ISN'T MAMMA UP IN HEAVEN?"

"Isn't Mamma up in Heaven??" to the preacher Edith said;
She had heard him telling others "she was numbered with the dead.
And as she was not a Christian she would find the future dark;
She could enter not the Kingdom, for the Savior knew the mark."

Edith listened for a moment and her anxious soul spoke out:
"If my Mamma ain't in Heaven, I would rather, too, stay out,
For she loved me and whatever else in future may occur,
I shall never care to go there if there isn't room for her.

"And I'll never hunt for Jesus, for I do not care to find
A being who to Mamma would be cruel and unkind.
Oh, no, sir, Mr. Preacher, I will have you understand
That if she is not in Heaven I will seek some other land.

"If there is a loving Savior now, or if there ever was,
He couldn't close the door of Heaven upon the good mammas,
And you needn't preach such doctrine to the children of today,
For our Mammas come and tell us they are just across the way.

"They tell us, Mr. Preacher, for in dream the other night
My Mamma came to see me, robed in purest spotless white,
And she kissed me and she told me to be good and kind and true,
And that sometime she would take me to her home beyond the blue.

"And I told her in the silence of that sweet and peaceful dream,
I was lonesome here without her and I couldn't make it seem Like the dear old home it used to be when I nestled in her lap
With my head upon her bosom in a blessed baby nap."

GOLDEN DREAM COMES TRUE.

Rich Deposit Is Found on Bluff Near Montezuma, Ill.

There is considerable excitement in Pike county, Ill., over the discovery recently of gold.

Two years ago Frank Clazebrook of Scott county, purchased forty-two acres of land on a bluff three-quarters of a mile southwest of Montezuma. Some years previous his wife had dreamed of seeing a spring of water with gold issuing with the aqua. Recently while inspecting the newly acquired farm in company with her husband, she saw a spring which she declared was almost an exact counterpart of the one in her dreams.

After much effort she persuaded her husband to explore the bluff near the spring and he was amazed to find gold in paying quantities. A sample of 200 pounds of sand and gravel assayed at $5.25 a ton. Clazebrook dug into the bluff to a depth of seventy-five feet and the dirt assayed was of promiscuous picking. If the entire bluff is as rich his fortune is made. Experts in geology have been sent for and a thorough examination will be made.

HASLETT PARK CAMP, MICH.

Notes of a Visit by Miss Emma Gibbs.

It was my good pleasure after returning from a pleasant and profitable season at Vicksburg camp to visit the camp at Haslett Park, Haslett, Mich. The greeting from friends there was pleasant indeed. Conference was in session when I arrived. At its close I soon felt some hands laid affectionately upon my shoulder, and on turning around I found myself face to face with a dear little woman who has entwined her affections and her sympathies around the inner precincts of the hearts of many Spiritualists throughout our beautiful land, Mrs. Marian Carpenter looked into my face and said an earnest "God bless you." She informed me that her health was better than early in the season, which I know her many friends will be glad to hear.

In the afternoon of that day, August 24, the guides of Mrs. Carpenter spread before us the glorious truths of Spiritualism, placing argument upon argument that could not fail to meet the reason and comprehension of all but those who are so blind they will not see. She gave many beautiful messages in her own characteristic way, and hearts were comforted and made glad. At the close of the services she bade her friends farewell and turned her steps toward other fields of labor, where we know a gleam of heaven's sunshine will find its way into the hearts of her hearers. May heaven's blessings rest upon her and her labors, and I know I hear a fervent "Amen" breathed from many quarters of our land.

The following afternoon a very interesting lecture was given upon astrology, ancient and modern, and its connection with the religions of the world.

The name of the lady to whom we were indebted for this instructive address I cannot recall, and I trust she will pardon its omission, as I had not thought to report my visit there.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates also came upon the grounds at this time to fill a ten days' engagement with the camp. Our greeting was a reminder of the pleasant days at Vicksburg camp, and its sunny banner seemed almost to float over us once more, as we again clasped hands and shouted hosannas for the beautiful ties of friendship that binds humanity together. I believe the angels looked down and smiled.

Their work at Haslett was of a marked character. Mrs. Kates, under the ministration of her estimable guides, dealt many telling blows to the errors, weaknesses and foibles of humanity, pointing the road to true progress through right generation, and thus doing away with the necessity for regeneration. One of the lectures given by our good brother, Mr. Kates, was based upon Obsession. His audience listened with attentive interest to his discussion of the laws governing obsession, and in his final remarks the remedy, which by the way, is the remedy for many ills of life, namely: man's recognition of his divinity, his oneness with the Infinite; that he is not a helpless creature of the dust, but that he is a child of wonderful possibilities; that his powers are not limited; that he is a master builder; that destiny—high destiny, lies onward; to him is the race. He urged humanity not to be baffled, but to grow strong, never forgetting they were of God, and heirs to the exalted powers of the universe; capable of surmounting difficulties, overcoming obstacles, and arising to a superior elevation in the scale of being.

The message work of Mrs. Kates is one of the marked features of their meetings. It is given with a directness and precision that carries conviction to the skeptic, and comfort to those whose loved ones have slipped silently from their sides to join the arisen hosts.

The labors of our Brother and Sister Kates is certainly pushing manhood and womanhood out into more earnest, energetic fields of labor, inspiring higher ideals, grander achievements in life's arena, that each succeeding generation may find a better place in which to live. May their work extend through many years, and be fruitful of much good.

I bade adieu to Haslett camp and the good friends there, Friday morning, Sept. 1, when I turned my steps homeword, and am now ready to take up fall work. While I have never made any announcement through the columns of the press in regard to myself, I feel that the time has arrived when I should do so. I would be glad to correspond with societies in regard to lecture engagements. Will respond to calls to attend funerals. Address me as follows:

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

A Letter Showing How They Are Appreciated.

After reading the different articles in The Progressive Thinker by various writers from time to time, none struck me so forcibly as the article written by that gigantic mind, Charles Dawbarn. He is a second Shakspeare or Spencer, as regards mental work. It is an intellectual treat to read his able and interesting themes. Phrenologically speaking, he must have a remarkable constructive faculty. His reasoning powers must be indeed larger than the average writers of to-day. Take it all in all he must be a perfect intellectual giant. Such men are a credit to the world at large. The sublime sentiments that he utters, and the inventive genius of such a mind are marvelous.

I am also much delighted over the writings of B. F. Underwood, another scholarly man. Where do we find men outside of these two gentlemen that can equal them in their respective spheres? As writers, they have no superiors.

'Tis true, there appears some splendid literary achievements from others that contribute to The Progressive Thinker, such as Sar'gis. And there is Doctor Wilkins. His poetry charms one's very soul. And then we have Doctor Peebles, and a host of others too numerous to mention. I will say in conclusion, Spiritualism presents the greatest writers on science, as well as philosophy. JULIUS WAGNER.

ANOTHER MEDIUM EXPOSED.

Carnations Drop From the Ceiling Into Her Lap.

To the Editor:—Realizing that to expose a medium is to invite the wrath of the gullibles all over the country who want crimes committed in the name of mediumship carefully concealed, covered up from public gaze, I attach hereto the following, a special from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, to the Council Bluffs Daily Nonpareil:

"Claiming to have power to communicate with the spirits of the dead, J. J. Eagle, about 30 years old, and professing to be a horse buyer from Gray Horse, I. T., worked a smooth confidence game here. He succeeded in getting $510 from a widow, Mrs. Grant, proprietor of a lunch counter at 211 South Fourth street. The police have been working on the case for the past three weeks.

"Eagle claimed to be a half-breed and came here May 25. He stopped at a fashionable boarding-house in the city while here and cut a wide swath, spending money freely and making himself a good fellow. He had been here but a short time until he formed the acquaintance of Mrs. Grant by dropping in and eating at her lunch counter. He made himself very agreeable and the two soon were on good terms. Early in the game he made a proposal of marriage to Mrs. Grant, but was refused.

"He next claimed to have power to communicate with the spirits of the dead, and one afternoon, while sitting in her little parlor off the lunch counter room, gave her a manifestation of his power as a medium, by having carnations drop from the ceiling into her lap. He worked the game very cleverly and at once won the confidence of Mrs. Grant, who believed thoroughly that he possessed the power he claimed. A few days after this Eagle started a series of notes to the woman, which he claimed came from God and spirits.

"The third note suggested that they both invest $510 on the board of trade, the promise being made that in twelve days the amount would be doubled. Mrs. Grant had $500 in the hand of a real estate man with which to pay off a mortgage on a little piece of property. She secured this, turned it over to Eagle, and he left the same night. No trace of him has since been found."

I realize that I run the risk of being called a "fraud hunter" by sending you this exposure. The fact is, I am a "Truth Hunter," and in carrying on my investigations, I run against enough fraud to make a mule sick, but that does not discourage me in the least, for if I were ignorant of the fact, it would exist just the same, and exercise its pestiferous influence. At one time I was a "superb gullible," believing in materialization to its fullest extent. From recent investigations I am inclined to believe many materializing mediums use artificial garbs, wigs, etc., to carry on what I consider a work of deception, yet I am a full-fledged Spiritualist, and believe that all the phases of Spirit Return have at times without number been realized, while every one at times has been counterfeited. I am a stickler for morality and honesty. In the words of Col. Ingersoll, "Morality is the harmony between act and circumstance. It is the melody of conduct. A wonderful statue is the melody of proportion. A great picture is the melody of form and color. A great statue does not suggest labor; it seems to have been created as a joy. A great painting suggests no weariness and no effort; the greater, the easier it seems. So a great and splendid life seems to have been without effort. There is in it no idea of obligation, no idea of responsibility or of duty. The idea of duty changes to a kind of drudgery that which should be, in the perfect man, a perfect pleasure." But the most important words he ever uttered were these, "Let us be honest." Under all the circumstances, do you wonder that I manifest for our Cause much

ANXIETY.

A PROPHECY FULFILLED.

A Question for Scientists to Unravel.

About five weeks ago a fire consumed a neighboring restaurant, and, as a rule, every property owner is interested and at the scene of a conflagration. A Mrs. D., the next-door neighbor said to us at the scene while the fiery elements were yet doing their best, "This is queer, indeed. Mrs. S., owner of this restaurant, was over to the medium, Mrs. E., about ten days ago, and her control, a little girl named Minnie, told her to be careful with fire, and that her establishment would burn in ten days. Last evening she came to me and laughingly said, 'Well, the house didn't burn in ten days as predicted by the medium.' That was four hours ago, and now it is a smouldering ruin. Wasn't that queer?"

Well, the query of it is now is, wherefrom did this little spirit derive this information, the parties being strangers to each other? And how could this event be so particularly foretold to the exact time? If coming events cast their shadows before them like a cloud may forebode rain, even an animal may sense such, but how could the spirits foresee this catastrophe ten days before its occurrence, giving the correct time, while there was no externally seeming cause for such an occurrence?

I have simply given the facts, and will omit names of the writer and all parties and location (the editor knows that it comes from a reliable source) for two reasons: Mrs. D. is a good Christian lady, and would not wish me to give her name in print; and Mrs. E., the medium, is doing a good work here quietly, and if her name is advertised, an existing license ordinance may be enforced. EX-TYPO.

PRAYS 26 YEARS, THEN WALKS.

Columbia County Woman Says Faith Healed Her Paralysis.

Catawissa, Pa.—"I believed that some time Christ would help me, and after 26 years of prayer I am able to walk," was the remarkable declaration made by Miss Delilah Breech, of Catawissa township, Pa., whose recovery from a case of singular paralysis seems worthy of the closest study.

Twenty-six years ago, when Miss Breech was 14 years of age, she was a student at the Soldiers' Home at Orangeville, and while making her bed one day she fell over its side and hurt her arm. In a short time the arm became useless and soon the other arm and her legs were in the same condition. The illness baffled a score of physicians, who declared she would never again walk, and she became as helpless as a baby.

"I had implicit faith that God would let me some time walk again, and this faith continued during all these years," said Miss Breech.

"I always was a great Bible reader, and when I read of the wonderful miracles that Christ performed in the Bible days I thought He would do as much for me, and from the first days of my illness I prayed to Him that He might heal me, and He has."

PROVE TRUTH OF STORY.

Tale of Fall of Jericho's Walls Vouched For by Experiments.

If you happen to have a little musicale some night and a picture should come falling from the wall or a statue should totter and tumble from its base when one of the soloists reaches a high key don't be alarmed or regard the incident as an evil omen, says the Brooklyn Eagle. It is only a freak of music. Several thousand years ago a similar occurrence took place, only, of course, it was on a more extended scale and made a great deal more talk than the falling of your picture or your statue would make. The occurrence in question was the falling of the walls of Jericho when Joshua's soldiers marched around them and blew their trumpets. A good many people class this as a miracle, but scientists say it was but one of the many phenomena caused by musical notes. They refer to a parallel case that happened not long ago at Heiligenstart, near Leipsic. A music master of that place was organizing a brass band. One day, as usual, he gathered his musicians for practice in his garden, which was situated at the foot of the ancient walls of the city. Suddenly, while the trumpets had reached their highest notes, the city walls fell with a terrific crash and the musicians scattered in a panic.

There is some scientific reason for this, but nobody seems to know just what it is. It is not the forceful vibration of air currents for the detonation of cannons does not have the power in this respect that is exerted by light musical notes. There is some peculiar combination of the notes that causes the ruin of the wall—some unknown force that is as powerful as a blast of dynamite. It is not an unusual thing for a glass to be shattered in a room where a musicale is being held, and for other remarkable mechanical effects to be produced. But the mechanical effects are not the only curious results of this unexplainable combination of notes. So many wonderful things have been produced by music that it may be rightfully classed as one of the mysteries. Numerous investigations in different lines of endeavor have been made as to its power and capabilities and in nearly every instance the result has been the same.

One of those who have made a study of the curiosities and the mysteries of music is Mrs. Amelia Wood Holbrook of New York. Mrs. Holbrook is a playwright, lecturer and author, and she has probably made greater and more painstaking research into the mysteries of music than any other person in this country. She is a member of the Professional Woman's League, and several other clubs, and her investigations into the science of music have made her well known in all parts of the United States.

"No one can explain the strange freaks of music," said Mrs. Holbrook the other day, "but they certainly exist, and frequently exhibit themselves. A cow, you know, moos in perfect fifth or tenth octave.

TRUMPET MOVES IN THE LIGHT.

The Home Circle Obtains Excellent Results.

To the Editor:—It was the phenomena that first appealed to me years ago, but I did not accept it until I made a thorough test. We formed a circle—six of my own family and two friends, and we "sat and sat" with the trumpet in the dark, and finally it moved. We could hear it gliding over the carpet. Then it would rap in answer to questions. We could have shouted for joy. We knew we had not been duped. Finally we asked it if it would move in the light; it rapped "yes." I left the circle, lighted a lamp, came back, sat down, asked the trumpet to move, and it did. We could see it. It tipped over from the center, and then went back to an upright position. It did this repeatedly. We all saw it and it certainly could not have been a hallucination. Every time we sat, for months it would move around and rise and touch different ones. It often rested on my shoulder and touched my cheek, just as it did in circles where there was a medium, but we never got the voices. I am quite sure the two persons who sat with us were very mediumistic, but the trumpet often moved for just our own family. The time it moved in the light there was no one present but our own family. Once when we were sitting, a bright light came into the circle, apparently from a corner of the room, up near the ceiling. It was oval in shape and as bright as an electric light, but it shed no radiance. We all saw it; were not expecting anything of the kind. I believe it was a spirit manifestation. I believe in spirit return. I believe it is good that spirits should return. CHARLOTTE J. WAITE.

GIVING A LAST SALUTE.

We, about to die, salute you kindly—
We, the very old, hail you, the young,
Though the shows of earth we see but blindly,
And a leaden weight is on our tongue.

But our wan old hearts expand in pleasure
Watching how your spirits kindle bright;
And we dream us back to springtime treasure,
Old, dim ardors, ghosts of gone delight.

We relieve in your the chances splendid,
All the buffetings and all the gains;
Oh, the sense of time and time unended,
Ere the hope dies, ere the wonder wanes!

How you love and fight and taste of rapture,
How your sleep restores you to the sun,
How the sweet of every hour you capture
Haughtily as heroes e'er have done!

We have lived and loved, as you are doing;
Half you seem ourselves—your work,
Half you seem yourselves—your work, your wooing,
Your high stakes of glory or disgrace.

Hail! Farewell! Nor blame us if a sadness
Clutches at our thread the while we gaze
Brokenly, through tears, upon that gladness
Once was ours in exquisite old days.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary.

Eye Sight can be Strengthened, and all forms of Diseased Eyes Cured without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in the great majority of cases, has been proven beyond a doubt, by the testimony of thousands of people who have been cured by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." Actina also cures sore and granulated lids, Glaucoma, Iritis, etc., also removes Cataracts and Pterygiums without cutting or drugging. Over seventy thousand of the Actinas having been sold, thereforeit is not an experiment but an absolute fact. The following letters are but samples of those that are received daily:

Mrs. M. E. Champney, 242 West 135th St. New York City, writes: The "Actina" cured me of Iritis, after the doctors said there was no cure outside an operation. I have been entirely well for over four months, can see to read and sew as well as before. I can honestly recommend "Actina" for all afflictions of the eye.

Emily Kapp, 1920 Galena Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, writes: The "Actina" I purchased from you a year ago saved my brother's eyesight. My brother was near-sighted, wore number five and six glasses, and now he can go to school and do all his work and study without glasses.

E. R. Holdbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "Actina" has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office.

Actina is not a drug or lotion, but a small pocket battery, which can be used by old and young with perfect safety, as it is impossible to do any harm with Actina. Every member of a family can use the one Actina for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, or Throat or Head. Actina will last for years, and is always ready for use. Actina is sent on trial postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 852N., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely FREE a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General, and you can rest assured that your eyes can be cured, no matter how many doctors have failed.

By Samuel Bowles; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. This is a very interesting little book, and will be appreciated from start to finish by all who wish to gain spiritual information. Price, 25 cents.

DEATH ITS MEANING and Results.

By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting narrative relating a series of wonderful psychic manifestations occurring in the writer's experience. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

The Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake This fascinating Book by the well-known Author and Scholar,

HON. A. B. RICHMOND,

Should be in the hands of every Spiritualist in the land. It is based on a historical fact, but through the narrative is woven a psychic line of thought in the style so natural to the great criminal lawyer that one can feel the author's very presence during its perusal. It is certainly interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

In the World Celestial

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance medium, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness.

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

President Bowles of the National Liberal League, says: "It is one of the choicest pieces of literature of this marvelous age of books."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkble English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

Talleyrand's Letter to the Pope.

This work will be found especially interesting to all who would desire to make a study of Romanism and the Bible. The historic facts stated, and the keen, scathing review of Romish ideas and practices should be read by all. Price 25 cents.

Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

Notice to Spiritualists:—The ex-priest, P. A. Seguin, well known among the Spiritualists, has a large house in Minneapolis, where rooms can be gotten by married couples, four large rooms, and also by single people in three smaller rooms, at the rate of 50 cents each occupant for one night, and besides giving meals at 25 cents each—all of which is considered cheap in Minneapolis. Street cars pass Mary's Place, the location of the Unitarian church, at the door of the Working Girl's Home, managed by P. A. Seguin and his good wife. Write at once for applications, to P. A. Seguin, 1500 5th street So., Minneapolis, Minn.

Mr. Moxley, of Owosso, Mich., writes that he thinks it would have an excellent effect, if the Blue Laws of olden times were published. The same would act as an antidote to the God-in-the-Constitution literature. Mr. Moxley is now 89 years old, and still keeps thinking along liberal lines.

I. C. B. writes from Meeker, O. T.: "We had a grand time at the Winfield camp-meeting in July. We hope to have a camp established in Oklahoma by next summer."

S. Hartman of Wheeling, W. Va., writes: "The beautiful premium book arrived in good time, and we thank you for it. It is a gem in its contents. Your paper is free and fearless! Long may it live!"

The Church of the Soul held its first services of the coming year, Sunday, Sept. 17, at 11 o'clock in Hall 309 Masonic Temple. Sunday-school at 10:30.

Lorinda G. Brown writes from Rockford, Ill.: "There seems to be a new life, as it were, permeating the Psychic Research Society, and if the members would all take and read The Progressive Thinker, they would 'get more life and more abundantly.' I hope some psychic scientist will investigate the case of six-year-old Willis Miller and report to you."

Mrs. R. E. Hinze writes from Kansas City, Mo.: "The Psychical Research Society gave its monthly social last night and we had such a delightful evening. I must write and tell you about it; perhaps some sister or brother might see it, and if they happened to be in the city, spend the evening with us. All are invited to partake of the hospitality of our speaker, Mrs. Glen C. Stephens, 3108 E. 14th street. The musical program was as follows: Mrs. Geo. Price, instrumental, Hearts and Flowers; Mrs. Kaufman, instrumental, Springtime; Miss Inez Price, solo, You Can't Pick Plums Off My Plum Tree; Mrs. Price, solo, Would You care; Mrs. Stephens, solo, Face to Face; inspirational, Mrs. Stephens; lecture, Who Is My Brother? the Unknown. Lunch was served. After lunch Dr. Deaustraux took possession of the medium, and delivered messages of love from the spirit world until a late hour. There were about sixty present and they contributed generously to the society."

Sol Finch of Connecticut, now 87 years of age, writes about an incident that occurred in school when he was eight years of age. For some little offense he was blindfolded and placed in a chair and rocked to and fro. When the bandage was removed, he was totally blind and it was some time before he recovered his sight. Mr. Finch is a thinker along all liberal lines.

Mrs. C. H. Mullins of Chicago writes: "I understand that many friends have been wondering where I have been all summer, and no one seems to know my present address. June 6, I met with a terrible fright, which gave such a shock to my nerves I had a complete collapse of the nervous system. I was confined to the house for over six weeks, and to my bed a part of the time. I would like to say to the friends that at any time they can get my address at The Progressive Thinker office. I am one of the many who feel they can not get along without The Progressive Thinker, therefore the office always has my address. At present my address is 770 Monroe street."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Helen-Stuart Richings has been engaged by the Minnesota State Association for missionary work during October and November, 1905; will serve the First Association of Philadelphia during December; the First Spiritual Church of Baltimore, Md., January and February, 1906, and the New Thought Spiritual Society of Grand Rapids, Mich., March and April, and has open May and June; also some camp dates. Address, until Dec. 1, care J. S. Maxwell, 1644 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Lorinda G. Brown writes: "The Psychic Research Society and friends in Rockford, Ill., have had two very encouraging sessions this month which seem a very auspicious opening for work of the coming year. The 3rd inst., the grove meeting at the home of Mr. Duncan Rogers (would have been in the grove but for unfavorable weather) was most hospitably entertained in the spacious rooms of his house. About sixty were present with their lunch baskets well filled, and dinner and supper were generously served. We were favored by the presence of Capt. Keffer of Philadelphia, Pa., a talented speaker and medium; Rev. Alice C. Barry of Clinton, Iowa; Mrs. Delia West of Elgin (so much appreciated in Rockford); Mrs. Brunswick, located here, also Mrs. Dow, and Mr. Tucker, a traveling man. The 10th inst., Miss Elizabeth Harlow of Haydenville, Mass., lectured for the society, both afternoon and evening, to appreciative audiences, on 'What Spiritualism Has Done in the Past for Humanity,' and 'All Things Have Become New.' Both were instructive and were thrillingly impressive by the clear logic and oratory of the speaker, whose services the society hopes to be again favored with."

Correspondent writes from Detroit, Mich.: "On Sunday evening, September 3, the First Church of the Soul opened its hall, No. 46 Grand River avenue, to a crowded house. Mrs. Laura L. Crawford, pastor, gave the welcome address. A very pretty baptismal service was performed. Six little children were baptized in the Spiritual faith. Mrs. Crawford was ably assisted by our beloved sister and co-worker, Mrs. Nellie Baade. Spirit messages were given by our good Sister Pennie. In addition to our society we have a ladies' auxiliary. It held its opening social Thursday afternoon, Sept. 7, at the home of Mrs. Crawford, 198 Fourth street, to plan work for the coming winter and create a greater interest in our cause."

Daniel W. Hull is now located for all time, he thinks, at Olympia, Wash. He is still in the healing business, but will answer calls for Sunday lectures anywhere within reach of Olympia. Address him, Columbia House, Olympia, Wash.

Mary T. Longley, N. S. A. Secretary, writes: "The Bower of Beauty Lyceum, of Monson, Maine, with a few friends at Etna, has done a good and noble work in raising the sum of nine dollars for the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A. This Lycoum is a small one, having but few members, but all are active and full of zeal for the cause of Spiritualism, and are ever ready to do all in their power to aid a worthy cause. We thank all the good friends who have contributed to this nice sum for the Mediums' Fund and trust that other lyceums will also do the best they can for this noble object."

Mrs. T. O. Atkinson writes from Louisville, Ky.: "The Church of the Soul will begin its services at Falls City Hall, on the 24th of September, continuing its services until June. Mrs. Tillie B. Grunwald is the pastor of this society and we have the greatest confidencedence in her ability to make it one of the leading societies in Louisville. She is earnest in her endeavor to uplift humanity and elevate the cause of Spiritualism, and for the benefit of our many friends who take The Progressive Thinker, we make this announcement and extend a cordial invitation to one and all, come and join us in our effort to spread the gospel of life and love. We have with us three mediums, Mr. Frank Emytzberger, trumpet and trance; Mrs. Tillie B. Grunwald, Psychometrist, and Mrs. Ruez, all give their services to the cause of truth."

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "A very interesting meeting was held Sunday afternoon, Sept. 10, at the Rising Sun Mission. Quite a large audience greeted our mediums, one of whom was Mrs. Dr. Caird of Lynn, Mass. She was a stranger to most of them. Her talk was very interesting as well as were her messages. Sister Hamilton Gill, Sister Weaver and Brother Thompson gave some very clear demonstrations of spirit return. Our choir rendered some very fine selections which was commented on by quite a few. Sister Weaver and Sister Kirchner brought comfort to a number by their messages from the spirit side of life. Our fall meetings are commencing to be well attended, as we had no vacant seats in our spacious hall Sunday night. Meetings every Sunday afternoon at 3; evenings at 8, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western Avenue. All welcome. Our speaker for Sunday, Sept. 24, will be Dr. L. Rowell."

Mrs. Susie Fentress of Nebraska, writes: "I want to spread the gospel of Spiritualism. I consider the premium books gifts to the people. You are doing a great deal for Spiritualism. I think much of the Occult Life of Jesus. I call it my bible. I wish it could be in everybody's library. I have been an infidel to the old Jewish bible for fifty-six years, and the older I get the less I think of it. It slanders God, making him a wholesale murderer and a hater of women, and if the truth was known the priests wrote and dictated the bible and called themselves God. God never had anything to do with the Bible, just the priests. I think the bible has caused more sin in the world than all other books ever published. I am 93 years of age."

The Morris Pratt School opens Sept. 26; teachers, Moses Hull, Andrew J. Weaver, Mrs. Alfa Niver, Miss Agnes Chaffee and Mrs. Mattie E. Hull.

There will be a test circle every Wednesday evening, at 220 Western avenue, Hope Hall; mediums Mrs. Squires and Mrs. Dr. Caird.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early, Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

THE CHICAGO SPIRITUALISTS LEAGUE.—H. F. Arnold writes: "The next public meeting of the Chicago Spiritualists League will be held in Handel Hall, 40 East Randolph street, on Saturday evening, October 7. Our speaker for the evening is Mr. John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas, one of the most eloquent and forcible speakers upon the Spiritualistic platform. The message bearers will be Mrs. Isa Cleveland, Mrs. C. Schwahn, Mrs. Dr. Caird, and Dr. Burgess. An excellent musical program is being arranged. Let every Spiritualist in Chicago be present and enjoy the good things in store for them."

J. C. F. Grumbine, lecturer for the First Society of Universal Religion, Boston, opened the season's services Sunday, Sept. 10, to very large audiences. A number of new faces appeared in the audience. Services will be continued in Faelten Hall, 30 Huntington avenue, ground floor, throughout the year at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. The annual bazaar will occur December 8. Subjects Sept. 17 were, "The Ego and the Cosmos," and "Universal Religion." His new and permanent address is Algonquin Road, Chestnut Hill Station, Boston, Mass.

Miss Elizabeth Harlow, a great favorite at Columbus, Ohio, returned to that city last week to resume her work there.

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The benefit social given by the Hyde Park Occult Society last Tuesday, for H. S. Fraser, was a grand success. A goodly number were present, showing their appreciation of a young and deserving medium. He returned the compliment by giving messages. Mr. W. H. Lundis gave us some fine vocal solos, and Miss Reynolds and Miss Dean gave us some fine selections on the piano. Refreshments were relished by all, and all in all a very pleasant evening was spent. We expect to have with us on Sept. 24, the Apache Indian, Dr. Carlos Montezuma. He was well liked when he was with us before, and all who heard him will be glad to hear him again. Oct. 1, Dr. J. H. Randall will speak for us. As soon as Brother Fraser returns we expect to have him with us for a number of weeks."

F. Corden White, the platform test medium—and lecturer, passed through the city last week, on his way to his home in Iowa.

W. F. Schumacher writes: "Sunday evening, Sept. 10, the attendance at Van Buren Opera House, Madison and California avenue, of the Society of Students of Nature, was good. The pastor, Mrs. M. Schumacher, who presides, is always ready to welcome all. Among those taking part were our noble workers and gifted mediums, Dr. L. C. Koehler, Sister Brunswick of Rockford, Ill., Sister Howes and Sister Squires of this city. They gave convincing tests. Bro. Wm. Linn will be with the society next Sunday evening. All are welcome."

Mrs. Carrie L. Hatch, secretary, writes: "Dr. Alex Caird of Lynn, has resigned as director of the Massachusetts State Association. His reason for the same: 'I am withdrawing from all work in the Spiritualistic field for the present, and therefore wish my resignation to go into immediate effect.' Dr. Caird has been an ardent worker for the Cadet Hall Society of Lynn, and if he has decided to withdraw from that society as well, they will lose an energetic worker. We wish him success in any new undertaking."

The subject of Mrs. Richmond's discourse at the Church of the Soul on Sunday, Sept. 24, will be An Honorable (?) Peace.

The Band of Harmony will hold the first meeting of the season on Thursday, Sept. 21, afternoon and evening in Room 512 Masonic Temple.

Georgia Gladys Cooley will lecture for the society at Genoa, Ill., Sunday, Sept. 24. Mrs. Cooley is in great demand as a lecturer and test medium; she has many more calls than she can answer. She is wanted even in Australia. She is the kind of a medium that is working along the lines pointed out by The Progressive Thinker.

Dr. G. B. Warne was called to Michigan last week, in connection with some business for the N. S. A.

Maggie Henry writes: "Sept 10, at the Spiritual Mission Chapel (old 77), our speaker, Prof. F. M. Stoller, read for the scripture lesson the first psalm. After a few remarks he took up the questions, a number of very interesting and philosophical ones. His answers are always interesting and instructive; one of interest to all was asked: 'Is materialization possible?' The answer was most emphatically, yes, and he cited the case of Jesus appearing and partaking of food and that what was possible at that time was possible to-day. We had a very harmonious and intellectual audience. The Professor gave a number of very fine psychometric readings at the close of the lecture. All are welcome."

E. W. Sprague and wife, the N. S. A. missionaries, will leave New York, for the west October 1. They will serve societies who arrange therefor, en route to the N. S. A. convention, which will be held at Minneapolis, Minn. October 17 to 20. Address them at 618 Newland avenue, Jamestown, N. Y.

Dr. J. M. Peebles is lecturing to fine audiences in Baltimore, Md. The meetings are held in a very fine church edifice. Mr. Schirm, an ex-Congressman and able lawyer is President.

TESTING MEDIUMS

What Would Constitute a Proper Test?

To the Editor.—In the issue of September 9th, Mr. John Palmer, of Los Angeles, Cal., made some suggestions for applying tests to would-be public mediums. While I appreciate his position, it must be admitted there is room for wide differences of opinion with respect to testing platform mediums. What is a "test" to one person may be no evidence whatever to his neighbor.

Mr. Palmer thinks no person should be allowed to come before the public as a test medium who cannot give such "positive facts" as "full names, dates, etc."

I have before me as I write this note, five letter pages quite closely written in pencil, which comprise a list of "positive facts" that would probably be recognized as such if I should commit them to memory and give them from the platform of a certain Spiritualist society in the State of Ohio. They were given to a friend of mine who had no need of such "positive facts," hence they were handed to me to help convince a skeptic that "fraudulent tests" are positive facts.

One who sees spirits clearly can describe them with minute accuracy; and when there is a peculiarity in the appearance, the gait or the expression of the spirit, it is very likely to be stated. Such descriptions are far more convincing and satisfactory to me than names. They demonstrate clairvoyance. The list before me does not go into such matters, but gives names and relationships. The party who compiled this list was evidently familiar with persons of Mr. Palmer's mental make-up.

I presume Mr. Palmer would give a margin for mistakes and concede that even the best of mediums may at times stumble. "Conditions" are not always just right, you know.

To illustrate, I will cite but one incident: A certain public medium was giving tests from the platform of the First Association of this city. He gave very many names. He gave a name to a gentleman sitting near me one Sunday morning, and the test made a profound impression on the recipient's mind evidently, for when the audience was about to be dismissed he asked permission to say a word, and stated, in effect, that he had received a most wonderful test, yet he was puzzled. The middle initial of the name given him was wrong and it had raised a question in his mind as to whether or not the spirit forgets material things after separation from the body of flesh and even forgets its name. He was inclined to think this was the case, and more especially so as the name had been given him by Mr. Keeler some time previously with the same erroneous initial!

Now, Mr. Palmer, if spirits forget their middle names sometimes and give the wrong initials, are they not liable to forget their first names at times—or in the course of time? In that case, the method suggested would bar them from having anything to do with test mediums; or, it would result in getting the mediums into awkward positions where they might be called on for explanations. No, that particular suggestion will not woirk satisfactorily in practice. It is not based on the soundest reasoning—at least so it appears to the writer.

DRIVEN TO CONFESS HIS CRIME.

Made to Do so by the Spirit of His Victim.

Minot, N. D., Sept. 12.—Frank Byer [as set forth in the Chicago Evening Journal] made public to-day the entire letter in which his former harvest hand, who has disappeared, confessed that he was guilty of a murder in Ohio for which another man was hanged. It gives details of the horrifying killing of a girl and recounts that her spirit haunted the murderer till he was no longer able to endure life. The supposition is that the man who confessed after carrying his secret a quarter of a century has committed suicide, but his body has not been found.

Following is the complete letter left in Byer's cabin at Hidden Wood, Ward county, when Byer's mysterious "hand," known as Frank Hall, disappeared:

"Aug. 24, 1905.—Dear Mr. Byer:—In the early seventies Charles Sterling, a supposed tramp, was tried for the murder of Lizzie Brombacher, residing near Youngstown, Ohio. The trial resulted in his conviction on purely circumstantial evidence, and he was hanged. Charles Sterling was an innocent man.

Admits He Is Murderer.

"I am guilty of the murder of that young girl, and I have paid the penalty in a wretched, haunted life for many years. Her face, distorted by the strangling clutches of my then powerful hands, made stronger by the power of brutal beast passion, haunts me, and for years nightly has that face appeared at my bedside until now I am a physical and mental wreck, who can find relief only in death, which will soon be mine.

"At the time I murdered this girl I was 20. A few weeks before committing the crime I removed with my family from Lockport, N. Y., to Girard, Ohio, where I believe my mother still lives, although I have not heard from her for years. I visited Youngstown one week prior to the murder with the hope of securing employment, and with a number of other men, Sterling being in the crowd, went to Poland for work two days before the woman was killed.

"I was standing in a secreted place along the roadside when the girl came along unaccompanied. The devil must have taken possession of me. I grabbed her by the arm and pulled her into a cluster of bushes I strangled her to death. I left the body where it had died, and where it was later found.

Fastens Suspicion on Sterling.

"Sterling passed the scene of the murder in a search for me while I was committing the awful crime. I found him later and persuaded him to exchange shirts with me by offering him 25 cents in money. He accepted the offer. There were bloodstains on the garment, and they proved one of the strong circumstances in the chain of evidence against Sterling. I was not seen in the vicinity of the spot where the murder was committed.

"Sterling was arrested shortly after the crime was discovered. I fled. Knowing him to be innocent I did not believe they could convict him. I went to Mesopotamia, a small town not far remote from Youngstown, and secured work on a farm.

"Crazed by a realization of an innocent man's fate, I fled the country the night before the execution of Sterling and have been a wanderer ever since. I watched the papers and read the full account of the execution.

Praises Sterling as a Hero.

"Sterling was a brave fellow. When his mother, who resided in Canada, came to visit him after he was condemned to death, he denied he was her son and seemed to convince her that she was mistaken. He left a note for his attorney, W. S. Anderson, as he passed to the scaffold to pay the penalty for the crime of which he was guiltless. The note was sealed, and Anderson was instructed not to break the seal until after he had learned of the death of the aged woman who had called at the jail and insisted that she was the mother of the man. But when the seal was broken it was found that Sterling had denied his own mother at the time of his greatest trouble so that she might never know the disgrace and go to her grave believing that her son had died a convicted murderer. To me that was a piece of heroism unequalled. I found this chapter in a tragedy which I alone was responsible for in an old magazine a few weeks ago.

"I brooded anew over the murder of the girl, and as I read of the heroism of a man too brave and true to take life I realized that I had murdered two, for the blood of Charles Sterling is on my hands, and I have decided to end my terrible life. My real name is Charles Herzig. I will endeavor to die in some place where my body will never be found, but if it should be, notify my mother. I make this confession that the grave of Charles Sterling may no longer be looked upon as that of a murderer. CHARLES HERZIG."

SIDE LIGHTS.

Greetings From Far-off Australia, the Land of the Southern Cross.

Here am I, in beautiful Melbourne, of which we Americans hear much, but know little, until welcomed by a resident who takes just pride in showing a stranger its many beautiful parks and gardens. My last lecture was given in Wellington, N. Z., July 16. I am pleased to report, that after three months and three weeks service there, I was not only able to hold my large audiences each Sunday and Wednesday nights, with shilling (about 24 cents) admission at the door, but I have promised the executive committee that I would return and fill another engagement in the near future. On July 20, a farewell party was given me. There were over 150 guests present, and New Century Hall, owned by the Spiritualists; had a gala look. The evening was devoted to music, singing, dancing and speech-making; and lastly, Mr. McLean, the president of the society, presented me with a neck chain and green stone heart, (the stones being considered lucky) in behalf of the society and my friends, so that in Mr. McLean's words, "The Spirituals of Wellington, can always have a chain on Mrs. Prior."

It was hard to say good-bye to the many friends I have made in the Government City of that remarkable colony, and I shall long remember the pleasant days spent there and the kindness and appreciation of all. Such is always an inspiration to do the best one can. But duty called, and we public workers must answer, no matter if the heart aches.

On July 22, I sailed away, once more toward the setting sun. The steamship was a good one, but that voyage on the Tasman Sea will ever be a nightmare! Often had I been told "the Tasman is rough," but only those who have been on it in a storm know what it can be, and how the elements war with each other, until the craft built by the hand of man is tossed about as a boy does a small ball; nor hiw ill one can be, until he feels that it would be just as well if the boat were to go to the bottom, for then he would be free from suffering.

No one was sorry when we entered the port of Sydney, twelve hours late. It will not take a great stretch of imagination to fancy how good the bed at Hotel Metripole felt, nor how sweet my sleep the night of landing.

Remained twenty-four hours in Sydney, owing to late arrival, had no more time at my disposal; I was due in Melbourne, and must report for work; however I was able to visit the gardens, and to enjoy the National Art Gallery of New South Wales, where there are some very fine pictures.

July 28, 7:50 p. m., found me enroute by rail for Melbourne, 600 miles away, and at 1.15 p. m., the 29th, I was clasping hands with that veteran worker, W. H. Terry, so well known as the past editor of the Harbinger of Light; Mrs. Annie Bright, that big-souled woman who has been known for so long as one of the lights in Spiritualism in Australia, as was her husband when on earth; she is present editress of the Harbinger; Mr. Wathchatz, president of the Victorian Association of Spiritualists and his executive committee, who captured me on the spot, Spencer street station, taking me prisoner and gaoling me at the Association rooms, where I was furnished a bountiful luncheon. My heart warmed by the sight of many flowers, especially Marguariettes, arranged by dear little (but very big in love) Miss Hinge. My weary self rested by the kindly words of greeting, in a few short moments I found that I was with friends, and I, not an alien, but one of them, for was there not "our tricolors," and "our flag" fastened to a bouquet of flowers by my plate?

Ah, Spiritualism, what barriers thou hast removed! Thy followers, being inspired by thy higher teachings, know no country, no people! The world our home, to do good unto all our aim, each man our kindred!

The press of the city were waiting to interview me, and permit me to say that I have been treated with great respect by that body, and some splendid notices given.

Sunday, July 30, my first lecture. The society has engaged the Bijou Theatre, and its seating capacity has been tested each night; in fact many have been turned away. In this building that grand worker, Laura G. Fixen, lectured about nine months ago, and it was she that urged my coming here, and introduced me to the Colonials. I shall always look back upon this trip with pleasure, although it has its Tasman Sea.

As I faced that large audience the first night, the thought flashed through my mind, "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country." The stage was draped beautifully with the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack, as graceful and delicate a compliment as our English cousins could pay, and at once, as when I saw my country's flag in New Zealand, my soul went out to those dear people, and I felt at home.

The music was especially good, an orchestra and choir of sixty voices, conducted by Mr. Bloomfield. Also solos by Mrs. Markwell, recently from London, and Mr. Bloomfield. Such music and songs would give one less sensitive than I an inspiration that held that large audience for over an hour and a half.

Monday, July 31, at 7:30 p. m., the Melbourne Lyceum Association, that is nearly forty years old, joined with the V. A. S. and tendered a reception, which was a grand success in every way. Words of welcome, many and inspiring music and songs, and then refreshments. I feel that much has been done for me to make my stay here a pleasant one. Ah, what a help such a welcome is to a weary traveler!

The lyceum is doing splendid work for our cause, and I do hope that its future will be as bright as its past.

My letter would be incomplete were I to leave out my visit to "Harmonia," the country home of Brother Terry. He is now living in his new cottage, perched upon the very top of a high hill. How like a big-souled man, wanting to get where his horizon line is far distant. Up where he can breathe God's pure air, under the sighing blue gums, whose leaves catch the first rosy light of the day new born, and wafting silver kisses when the sun goes down. 'Tis there where you may see graceful fern trees, and enjoy the perfume of the wattle. 'Tis there where you may hear the laughing jackass, and see him slowly wing from tree to tree. 'Tis there where you may feel in touch with God, nature, man and all living things. 'Tis there where I want to go, when I am tired and need rest. "With nature here in evening's peace I sit and think on life."

All are kind and good to me, here in the southern hemisphere, but I never look at night upon the Southern Cross, so beautiful in the sky, but what I say a prayer for my loved ones and friends in that land across the seas—the glorious United States of America.

"Continuity or Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

A BIBLE SPIRITUALIST.

The Thoughts of a New Convert to Spiritualism.

Thirty-five years ago, I was converted when a young girl and joined an orthodox church, and I tried to worship God in spirit and truth, but I did not feel that I was doing just right, for some way or other there were so many churches and the members of the different churches seemed to be just as as earnest as I was and just as honest as I was, but they said if I did not believe as they did, I would be lost.

Well, I was troubled and I was not satisfied, so I was groping in darkness and without a pilot. So, one day when I was reading my Bible, I found a scripture that said, you must worship God in spirit and truth and it also said, God is a spirit.

Then as I got down to studying my Bible earnestly and the life of Christ and the life he led and the things he did and the promises he made to all those who believed in him that they should do all the things that he did, "and greater things shall ye do," said the great master, I was fully persuaded in my own mind, I could not find any of his followers in the churches, that is, according to the promises he had made, for said he, "These are signs that shall follow those that believe in me, they shall heal the sick and afflicted, cleanse the lepers, cast out obsessions, communicate with the dead and do all of the things that I have done and greater."

Well, I had heard of the hated Spiritualists and learned that they had done some of the works, and I had also read in my Bible "that by their works, ye shall know them," and thinking possibly that they might be his true followers, I made up my mind to investigate Spiritualism. Having lost my health after having raised my family of three children, I came West to regain my health, and on my journey westward I met and became acquainted with a minister at a hotel where I stopped for a short rest.

I made known to him my intention of investigating Spiritualism and he told me, for God's sake if I had any respect for myself or my reputation, not to have anything to do with Spiritualism; and at the time, I thought he was very severe on them, but I have often thought of that man's advice since I commenced my investigation.

Two years ago, in this city where I met my present husband in Mrs. Mallory's parlors, he was a Bible Spiritualist and a teacher of the same. I took seven lessons from him in which he laid before me the foundation of Bible Spiritualism and on which I have built all that I know about Spiritualism. I now worship God in spirit and truth, and I expect to do so the balance of my life.

Well, after I commenced my investigation, I have been tempted to turn back, but after I attended the camp-meeting at New Era this summer and heard that great, grand man, Harrison D. Barrett, I took new courage. The Spiritualists may well be proud of him. He deserves their best praise and best wishes. I also heard that grand old man, Moses Hull, the renowned Bible Spiritualist, at Ashland, and also Brother and Sister Sprague, who are grand, good workers for the cause. I had the pleasure of hearing that rising star, Harry J. Moore, as well, at New Era. A young man in years but well advanced in learning and a power under inspiration for good. It certainly does please me to see young men and women taking hold of the good work.

I have read your very valuable paper closely for over a year and I can realize what a blessing it is to have a paper like the dear old Progressive Thinker, which richly deserves its name, for it certainly is progressive and I do hope it will progress more and more unto the Perfect Day, the day that will set us free from all the ugly, mean, low things our people are accused of; but all that is good will stand and all that is bad must fall and this is just as it should be. If it is not asking too much, please insert this in your valuable paper as a faint effort on my part to express my views, which I feel is poorly done. MRS. DR. R. E. COON.

A FUNDAMENTAL LAW.

Be Sure You're Right, Then Go Ahead.

I wish to assure my brother investigators that the retrenchment and far-reaching exploitation of phenomenal Spiritualism will react in nothing but permanent benefit. A fact that is not perpetually reinstated before the public mind by its complement or opposite will soon be lost sight of and wholly ignored. This is the law on all levels below the absolute. It is the fundamental of the world process. When we shall have reached a stage of evolution that transcends the relative—the opposites, the pairs—we will be one with the All-Consciousness, and what seemed to us so inessential from the view point of the limited will be clearly apparent as a necessity in the evolutionary processes of the globe and her creatures. The whole of the limited past, present and future—is in the mind of the Logos at once.

Nothing will be gained by fostering fraudulent practices. The commendable positions taken by The Progressive Thinker, by Brothers Warne, Barrett and others vouchsafes the permanency of the movement.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, Sept. 8, from Dr. Spinney's sanitarium, at Graton, Mich., Dr. Slade, the well-known medium. The many friends who knew him when he was one of the best of mediums for slate-writing, ought to rejoice that he is at rest from suffering. It seemed sad that there was not one relative at the services. All had gone to their better home. He was laid at rest in the Otisco cemetery. Services by Mrs. J. H. Dunham, Ionia, Mich.

"The New Life." By Leroy Berrier. Eminently suggestive along the lines of "new thought." Excellent in tone and tendencies. Price, cloth, $1.

HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA CAN BE CURED.

THE KOLA PLANT.

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific.

Mr. W. H. Kelly, 517 45th St., Newport News, Va., writes: Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. M. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th: I had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Geese, 136 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 4th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Judge O. G. Richards: Q. Is the claim of astrologers as to lucky days and unlucky, especially the old belief in the unluckiness of Friday?

A. The enlightenment of this age ought to be sufficient to relegate all such superstitions into the waste heap of dead beliefs. Unlucky days and unlucky numbers have no support in facts. Like countless other notions which have come down from remote times, that Friday is an unlucky day passes from generation to generation. No one attempts to prove that it is or is not. The saying is accepted because of its venerable antiquity and because no one attempts to demonstrate that it is as lucky as any other day of the seven. There is no reason why one day should be more lucky than another. No one has ever made the claim that there was a reason. No one has ever claimed that more unfortunate events, as wrecks, wounds or deaths occur on one day more than another. The processes of nature proceed the same, and hence the conclusion is justified that there is no difference in the influence of days.

W. G. Henderson: Q. I have long believed that departed spirits return, but this is only a belief. Is there any way I can obtain proof?

R., Hamilton, Ohio: Q. If I knew Spiritualism was true, what a religion it would be to live by! I am getting to be an old man and will soon have to answer the roll-call. I want to believe, but there is so much fraud, I doubt. How can I become convinced?

C. B. Knocker, Zimapan, Mexico: Q. I was convinced of the truth of Spiritualism years ago, but have not had opportunity to consult mediums. Is there any reliable medium in Mexico City?

A. These represent scores of similar letters, showing the eagerness there is for spiritual knowledge. We reiterate what may be thought needless repetition that for all such the home and private circle is the place above all others to seek for spiritual knowledge. The public mediums have their place, but it is difficult, often impossible, to consult them. The home circle gives an ever ready and unquestionable means of communication.

We cannot give the address of any medium in Mexico City.

Robert H. Hahnel: Q. What is the value of the secret brotherhoods? Have they the wonderful revelations to make to initiates, they promise, or are they working for the fees?

A. This correspondent names a particular brotherhood with high-sounding name, which we omit, in making a general application of the questions to all these advertised schemes to get exorbitant fees from those who are beguiled by flaming advertisements. The literature of some of these has fallen into my hands, and is the most senseless verbosity ever written. There are no secrets of the "Orient," which are of the least practical value, or any value whatever. Set it down as absolutely correct that any one claiming to have a patent on truth, retailing it for a price, is a fakir, a pretender, and thoroughly dishonest. I have received many letters from those who have taken "sublime degrees" in these "mystic orders" of whatnots, all expressing the one opinion that they were dupes, and received no value for their money except a humiliating experience.

The occult mysteries of the East are myths, and as out of place with the minds of the present age, as would be the geography or "wisdom" of the early ages of man's childhood.

Some of these "professors" will teach how anyone can control the will of any other he pleases. What is the alluring bait held out. I do not know which is most dishonest, the person who desires such power or the one who promises it. It is well that such power cannot be sold to those who are willing to pay for it. It would be in their hands the open door to crime, and lead to their own ruin. The man who desires to purchase "green goods," ought not to complain of the swindler who promises to assist him in becoming a counterfeiter.

THE TRAIN FOR SLUMBER TOWN.

Come along, little boy, come to me,
The Slumber Town train is due;
It always stops at mamma's knee
When the weary day is through.
When the sandman sprinkles his sand so free
The train is coming for you,
Crowded with tads who shout for glee
And you'll be one of them, too.

Choo-o-o-o! Hear the whistle blow,
All aboard! if you want to go.
All aboard! the gates are down—
Through night train for Slumber Town.

Far up in the sky the engine steams—
No train ever ran so high;
The silver rails are white moonbeams,
The lantern, a firefly.
The pilot light is a star that gleams
Straight up in the misty sky;
Your baggage to-night is a bundle of dreams
Tossed on when you're passing by.

Choo-o-o-o! Hear the whistle blow,
All aboard! if you want to go.
All aboard! the gates are down—
Through night train for Slumber Town.

A BEAUTIFUL CEREMONY.

Celebration of Marriage, at the Morris Pratt Institute.

A newspaper has just been put into my hands containing an article written by a "gentleman of the cloth," against Spiritualism. Among the numerous false claims made against Spiritualism, is the one, that Spiritualists do not believe in marriage. So far as my acquaintance goes this charge is about as false as the usual statements made by the clerical opponents of Spiritualism. About all the Spiritualists with whom I am acquainted, are either married, or "only waiting" for the other half of themselves to come along.

These thoughts and a column or two more of similar ones are just now suggested by a little event which occurred on Thursday, Sept. 7, in Temple Hall, in the Morris Pratt Institute building. Mrs. Hull and I were invited over to Temple Hall to witness the ratification of the marriage of Mr. Benjamin K. Bowen, a graduate of the Morris Pratt School, and Miss Anna Elizabeth Stewart, daughter of Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, our efficient secretary.

When I entered the hall I was more pleased than surprised to see the tasteful arrangement of the numerous flowers which had been brought in from somewhere. In my mind I soon accused Benjamin's class-mates, in the Morris Pratt School and Anna's associates in the High School of doing this beautiful mischief. Facts proved that my suspicions were not altogether wrong. I however, had not included all in my indictment. The chief "toad in that puddle" was Edna Stewart, Anna's sister; she is an adept in every line of decorative art. This time she rather overdid the thing, for some of the poison was "poison" to her, and her hands and face told who the guilty one was. This was an illustration of the text, "Be sure your sin will find you out."

Mrs. Hull and I went into the hall supposing that we would meet the young couple, their mother and sister, and perhaps two or three others, but when we got there, behold there was the principal of Anna's High School; also Dr. Chaffee, her physician, and several others, who had come to bid farewell to the schoolgirl and boy and to welcome them into the realities of married life.

I wish that I had been a stenographer so that I could here reproduce the beautiful and sensible ceremony which ratified the union of these two souls. If this ceremony could have been witnessed by the whole world it would give some people a different idea of marriage from what they have had in the past. Anna is a "mamma girl," and nothing would do but that her mother must say the words which would cause the world to recognize "they twain" as one.

I by request, when the couple entered the hall, seated them and made a few remarks to the assembled guests. These remarks signified to those present, that we were not now marrying that couple—that no man or woman could marry them; no law could, by any possibility unite two souls. This union had with this couple already taken place; if not, nothing here done could effect a union. We were here only to celebrate the union and to advertise it to the world. "The service performed here to-day, signifies to you that each has chosen the other as a bosom and soul companion; they here say to you, and through you to the world, 'We are united, not as master and slave, but as equal partners to walk the journey of life together.' As they are inter-dependent each upon the other, one is not to command and the other obey, but we have pledged ourselves to each advise with the other in all matters where we are alike interested and each will try to carry out the plans which will make ourselves and the world better—each will try by every legitimate means, to bless, protect and care for the other. The ceremony will now proceed."

It was a beautiful and an affecting sight to here see the mother arise, and call the couple to their feet, and after inquiring if any one knew of any legal difficulties in the way, to hear her say the words which took her own daughter out of her jurisdiction, and made her the legal companion and life partner of another.

After a few appropriate remarks Mrs. Stewart asked the young couple to signify to those present their desire to be henceforth known as husband and wife by joining their right hands. This being done, with the expressed wish that their lives may be as closely united as were their right hands, she pronounced them husband and wife. After greeting her daughter, and new son with an affectionate kiss, Mrs. Hull was called to the front and closed the public services with an appropriate and beautiful poem.

Mr. and Mrs. Bowen have gone to their new home in Rogers, Ark. They carry with them the congratulations and good wishes of all who knew them. May they live long and happy lives, and prove to be blessings to each other and to all with whom they come in touch.

TALKED TO RABBI'S SPIRIT

And Finally Obtained What He Desired.

In Poland the Jews have a custom of visiting when they are in distress the tombs of learned rabbis. A remarkable, yet nevertheless true, account is recorded of one of these pilgrims.

A young man of twenty-one years of age was drafted for the military service. He determined if possible to find some way of evading the service. He therefore set out for the tomb of the rabbi of the town and invoked the aid of his deceased friend.

He had not been praying long when he heard three distinct taps. He glanced about him, but saw nothing. He resumed his praying, but was again interrupted by three strange taps. This time he became thoroughly alarmed. He sat still, afraid to break the stillness.

Before him slowly arose the spirit of his deceased friend, the rabbi, in his long flowing "caftan" and grizzly white beard. The young man recovered his composure and gradually approached his benefactor. He recited all his grievances. The rabbi listened carefully, shaking his gray head at every point. He vehemently disapproved of the young man enlisting in the service.

Finally he told the visitor to depart peacefully and have no fear. Then he faded away.

The young man, strange to say, was excused from serving. VERITAS.

A GRAND FAREWELL RECEPTION

Given to Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Morse, by Mrs. J. K. D. Conant-Henderson, at Her Rooms, 198 Dartmouth Street, Boston, Mass., August 25, 1905.

Upon the eve of their departure for England this illustrious medium, lecturer, and writer and his good wife, were given a farewell reception such as has not been tendered any of our workers in many a year, and they will return to their former field of labor and to their dear old friends with the tangible impress of affection won while in America, indelibly stamped upon the tablets of their memory. They are held in high esteem by the Spiritualists of the United States, and as their representative The Progressive Thinker joins in the many expressions of regret at the loss of these good, faithful servants of the Cause, and best wishes for their success in their old English field of operations.

After an informal reception, Mrs. Conant-Henderson addressed those present as follows:

We are assembled here this morning, friends, because we are desirous of sending a good thought with our brother and sister across the water. I am not going to open with any detailed remarks, because we have workers with us whom I think you would be glad to listen to, and I am only sorry that there are not more here than there are. There are a great many who promised to be here who are not here.

There is one thing we all know, which is this: If it had been a month later, when our societies were running, I feel that Mr. Morse's reception would have had to be held in Mechanic's Building. But although they are not here in the form, I know they are each and everyone in their thoughts with us tonight, and it is one of the grandest things I know of, that though we may be absent in the body, we may be present in the spirit. We know there is communion of spirit and interchange of thought; we know there is no space can separate spirit from spirit.

I am requested that all shall join in singing "Sweet By and By."

Mrs. Henderson then introduced Dr. Stiles, who said:

Oh, Infinite Spirit of Life and Force, we beseech Thy blessing at this hour for the good of all. We ask that we may realize more of thy love, more of thy infinite force, which is ever over each human being. And may each one here tonight realize more than ever thy presence, more of that loving element which is ever near and dear to us all. And may each one throw out their best force, throw out the infinite love which will ever enfold and uplift their spirit. And may each one throw out their best force to that brother and sister who are soon to leave us, that they may feel a response that may make them grow strong, so that they may feel that they are blessed. And may angel friends ever co-operate and be able to assist you in every department of life. And may the brother and sister realize more and more their loved ones and their good guides, because we know they are ever faithful to their calling. And may each one go from here feeling that they have done their mission, so the good brother and sister may take it across the continent; and through aspiration and determination of each one, we may realize each day the ministration of angel love as we go through material life and unfold nearer and nearer to them. And may each one go out from here feeling in harmony with eachother. And when the brother and sister have left us, to perhaps carry out a work that is outlined for them, not forgetting, however, that work they have performed here, may they be assisted more and more in that higher unfoldment, to give us new life and new force to continue the journey of life. So we ask it in His name. Amen.

Friends, I am pleased to be here tonight, recognizing that we all are here in memory of our brother and sister. Certainly my feeling is one of deep regret that they are to leave us, I feel we are to lose a helping hand, whose place not many will be able to fill. And I trust that we may all throw out our best thoughts, and though they may be miles away, know they are near us in spirit and ever ready to help us. And I hope tonight that we all will say to the brother and sister that we are faithful, and we are sincere in co-operating here to bid them bon voyage; we trust they will receive the force of the good thought through the waves of thought which will help sustain them on this plane and the higher plane. I feel regret that we are going to lose them and yet, I know through your pleasant thoughts that we all will profit by it, even though many miles away. So I say from the spirit, God bless you both! And may the angel world and the Infinite Spirit guide you through life now and forever.

Mrs. Conant-Henderson here introduced Mrs. Mattie E. A. Albie, President of the Ladies' Aid Society, of Boston, who spoke as follows:

I am the representative of the Ladies' Aid Society, and I regret very much that so many of them are absent now from the city, because we all loved our brother and sister very much, and I know that many of them hoped to meet them in the fall.

I feared when I received the good sister's invitation to come here tonight, that I would have to send regrets, owing to the illness of my husband.

I regret very much that Miss Florence could not be here, because it does not seem quite right not to have the trinity—father, mother and daughter. Certainly, however, she decided for the best, and I know her thoughts are with you. We shall miss them very much at the meetings, and while I know they will not be there in form, they will be with us in spirit.

And I wish to tender them the best wishes of the Ladies' Aid Society. When we assemble there, be sure there will be a loving thought go from the ladies on every Friday night, because we adopted Miss Florence. We had one son, Mr. Blinn, and we thought we must have a daughter with us. I regret she will not be with us.

I know the loved ones and the angels who have ever sustained you in the past will not desert you now. When you go across the waters, may the bright star of prosperity go with you, may loving hearts and loving hands be there to greet you and may prosperity attend you in every department of life, is their wish.

Mrs. Conant-Henderson:—Will the ladies sing something again so as to change the conditions.

"Nearer My God, to Thee," was sung.

Mrs. Henderson then called upon Mr. Berry, who said:

I cannot really say this evening that it is a pleasure for me to be here in one sense, yet I would have been disappointed if I could not have been here.

Many years ago, way down in the state of Maine, I met Brother Morse for the first time at a camp meeting at Aetna—over twenty years ago. Since that time I have met Brother Morse often since he came to Boston, but I have always followed him through his letters in the Banner of Light and have always read them with a great deal of interest and a great deal of profit to myself.

When I heard that Brother Morse was to come out here to be an American citizen, I thought the Americans had captured three of the British subjects and made them good American citizens. But it seems to be the law of humanity in this life, to have great expectations and anticipations and have them pass away like morning dew. And this is one of the expectations we have had which is passing away from the American Spiritualists like the morning dew, and I am very sorry indeed that Brother Morse has to take back word to the Spiritualists of England that he has not met with the success he had hoped for. But I believe that Brother Morse in his heart feels that it is not the Spiritualists of America, or the Spiritualists of Boston who have dealt this blow to him, not only to his spiritual expectations of the work he could do here, but financially—and I am sure that I echo the spirit of our lyceum and of all the Spiritualists in Boston, when I explain to Brother Morse that I would have known that the Spiritualists of Boston all admire Brother Morse. I am sure if Mrs. Butler was here, she would echo the same for her society. As committee of the Spiritual Lyceum we had expected he might come into our Lyceum.

I will say to Mr. and Mrs. Morse, I shall always follow them, wherever I know they are, with my thoughts and will send out my best wishes for their success, not only in this life but the life to come. (Applause.)

Mrs. Henderson then introduced Mr. Redding, who said:

I can also say that I regret exceedingly the departure of our brother. The news came to me as a very disagreeable feature, and I know that we have all known Brother Morse and his family to love and respect him. I feel that the cause in Boston has met with a great loss in consequence of their departure, and I know that we shall always hold them in the greatest esteem and treasure their memory for all time. I also feel that Mrs. Redding will echo my sentiments in wishing them every measure of prosperity and happiness.

Mrs. Henderson then called upon Mrs. Stiles, who said:

I am sorry to say, friends, I feel so grieved I am not able to talk. They have my best wishes.

Mrs. Henderson: I would like to hear from Mrs. Whall, the president of the Malden Society.

Mrs. Whall: I echo in one way our last sister's remarks. It is very hard to stand here and say anything to you; my heart is full. I bring to you their best love and wishes, for you have endeared yourself to the Malden society to the very hearts' core. You and your beautiful daughter's labors amongst us will cause us to treasure your memory always, dear brother, when you have crossed the ocean, think of the friends in Malden who have nothing but the kindest thoughts for you, and I know that you will understand as we do, just where the trouble was. We know it—and regret that anyone calling himself a Spiritualist—that any one American on this continent would do any human being such an injustice. I heard you once say that you would be glad to become an American citizen, owing to the trouble that has come upon you, I am glad that you have now become an American citizen. You are taking with you our hearts full of love. May you live long and live longer still to spread the cause of Spiritualism. And may many a heart be made glad, as we have been made glad, with the sound of your voice.

Mrs. Conant-Henderson: May we hear from Mrs. Berry?

Mrs. Berry: I certainly can say as Mr. Berry has said, in a way I am not at all pleased to be here. I am in no condition to even utter what few words I may utter. I am too thoroughly indignant. I am sorry that such a condition has come about our friends. I am indignant that one claiming to be a Spiritualist should serve another one—as good a Spiritualist as Mr. Morse has proved himself—in the way that has been done. I shall not utter one word that I will not back up, that I will not face. I remember more than twenty years ago the first time, as my husband has said, when we met Mr. Morse at Aetna camp. I have always had a most profound respect for him, and why? One reason is because he has always proved himself to be a gentleman. Another reason is, because he always had the kindest thought, the most helpful feeling for all true mediums. (Number of voices in the audience, "That is right!") I am sorry, I say, that such a condition should come about among the Spiritualists, they who claim to have the grandest religion among men. And to think that a man should take his family, his loving wife and his only child across the water, to be with us, to serve us, to help us, and then have to go back again, I say it is a disgrace in one sense. (From the audience, "That is right.") You see the condition I am in. I am indignant, I cannot help it. But you, dear brother and sister, may the angels always attend you and help you up the ladder towards heaven! May the loved ones help you at this time; may those who have clasped your hands while on earth help you through this trouble, and finally, when you have finished your work here and you will be called hence to another condition, may you realize that this amounts to nothing—because by and by you will be numbered with the great majority. You will be taken by the hand and there will be no such condition as this to pass through, but a happy, united family over there—a happy family! And you will realize what you cannot realize while you are encased in mortal garments. Brother Morse, please accept my heartfelt love, and Sister Morse too, as you journey homeward. And remember that there are those who love you tenderly and who are saddened by this condition that has come into your lives.

Mrs. Conant-Henderson: Some spirit here wants a verse of "America."

After the singing Mrs. Henderson introduced Mr. Milton of Malden, who said:

I am pleased to be here this evening, not for the purpose of saying a farewell or good-bye, but glad that I can be counted in as one of this little circle gathered to say God-speed to our brother and sister. I have not had the pleasure of knowing the good brother who is going to leave us, only in a business way. I have been secretary of the Malden society and our brother has rearranged the reports which I have sent in, so that they looked quite presentable when they appeared in the paper, and I take occasion to thank him for his kindness. I wish I was across the ocean where I could hold out both hands to welcome the brother, instead of having to bid him good-bye. I regret his departure very much, and I for one, wish him good-bye and a heartfelt God-speed, and also for his helpmeet."

[Several addresses preceding the remarks of Mr. Morse will have to be omitted on account of lack of space.]

Mr. J. J. Morse came forward amid loud applause.

Mrs. Henderson and my dear friends, one and all:—There are some times in our lives when our natural audacity forsakes us; we feel more like creeping into a hole and drawing the knot in after us than standing up and making speeches. This is one of those occasions. I think that I may honestly and truthfully say I would to God it had not been necessary for this meeting tonight, not only for myself—for that is a very small matter. I am used to the buffets of fortune, as all workers in our cause are. I have never yet met a worker in Spiritualism—the "hit strong from the shoulder" kind of work—who has not had to go through the fire; it seems to be necessary for us to suffer and to sorrow. I think we are the better for it. I don't like it—I am honest enough to say it—I have never enjoyed any of the buffetings I have experienced. I have appreciated them after they were all over, but while they were transpiring, there is a certain kind of disposition in my nature—I should like to get up on my hind legs and snort around the place like an angry horse; but Spiritualism has taught me the necessity of keeping a curb upon one's nature, not allowing either pleasures or sufferings to overpower us.

The experiences of life are many, and for myself I can say they have been various. I think they have done me no harm. If I may judge from the tone of the remarks of the dear and good friends who have spoken to-night, I think I have not suffered through having passed through the fires. I have at least preserved—may I not say it—a clear conscience. I may honestly say that during the last twenty-two months that I have been intimately associated with the work of Spiritualism in this city and in this country, I cannot recall a single act I have done, a single word I have spoken or written, that I would have left undone, unwritten or unsaid.

Ever since the year 1868, and I am glad Miss Morse is not here, as I am going back before she was born, even before I knew her mother (and if she was not here, I would say she was one of the best women in the world), I have been familiar with the Banner of Light. It was the first Spiritualist paper I ever read; I have grown up on the milk of that paper. It appealed to me as no book or paper I had ever read had appealed to me. In later years it was my privilege to be sent to this city, to visit this country; I have had the privilege of making the personal acquaintance of Brother Luther Colby, of ever-to-be-remembered John W. Day, of Mr. Wilson and the rest of the staff, including Isaac B. Rich. And it is one of the sweetest recollections to me that the friendship formed with Brother Colby, whom I met in 1875, continued unbroken down to the time of his departure; each time I visited this country his hand was always extended to me, he breathed that spirit of brotherly love and fraternity, which those who knew him, know he was so full of at all times.

The paper, as I say, always appealed to me very deeply. I had always journalistic proclivities. It is a funny thing, but it is true, nevertheless, that there are three things I have noticed in the course of my career: One set of people I never liked—they were parsons. I do not know why I did not like them, but a common experience was in in England, when I was traveling (our railway carriages are built differently from yours, in compartments), when I would leave home, perhaps I would occupy the compartment alone, but before the journey was at an end, into the carriage would come a minister. I would think just as the clock was on the tick that I would escape this week surely. Sometimes we had a chat, sometimes we scowled at each other. Sometimes I would find that he was a great deal better man than his creed allowed him to be. Then I also discovered that journalists had a great attraction for me; and then another set of people were theatrical people. Whether I attracted them or they attracted me, I do not know. But my first love was for journalistic work, and I have an idea that if ever I had an ambition in the way of journalism at all, it would be to be editor of the Banner, but I had never thought of it as anything that I would ever realize, but as foreign to my life as it would be to take the moon out of the sky.

You know the tragic circumstances which occurred something almost like two years ago, that led to such a complete upheaval and alteration in the office of the Banner of Light. At that time I happened to be in Boston. In a curious way I became acquainted with the management of the paper and was invited to take the position of editor. The invitation was extended to me on the strong recommendation of Andrew Jackson Davis, one of the men whom I have most honored in our working ranks, I think of all other men. The position was accepted. The little ambition that I might have had was thus gratified, and with fear and trembling I undertook the duties of what I consider to be a most responsible position. I think of all the positions in the world that a man or woman can be called upon to occupy, the most responsible that of the editor of a newspaper. You can do so much harm; you are king of the castle, you can keep the other fellow down, and he cannot get back at you, because you are sitting out of reach; you are in the chair.

On the other hand, you can do so much good by a kindly word, or by just a little judicious blue-penciling you can save heart-breaks and heart-burnings; the people who wrote the articles at a time when they would like to tear hair, are angry for a moment, that the blue pencil has been used, and then are glad about it. I have often said the great art of editing a newspaper lies in the art of knowing what to keep out; any fool can put it in. And I have prayed for guidance more in the direction of what to keep out of the paper, rather than what to put in. And if my blue pencil could talk, I think it would bear me out in this.

I always admired America and the Americans. This was the land in which my religion was born. I am more a Spiritualist to-day than I ever was in my life. (Applause). Nothing can ever destroy my belief in spirit guidance; nothing can make me less a Spiritualist than I am to-day. I have always enjoyed my visits to this country, and I always have been treated by the Spiritualists of America—and when I say "I" I wish to include my family—I have always been most kindly treated and most royally dealt with by the Spiritualists of the United States. (Applause). And when I say I have traveled as far north as Bangor, Maine, as far south as New Orleans, as far east as Boston, and west as San Francisco, you may think that I can speak with some authority when I speak of the kindness I have received. I have nothing but respect and affection for the great body of the Spiritualists of the United States, because I should be the most ungrateful man in the United States if I entertained any other feelings in regard to them as a body.

It was with the deepest feelings of satisfaction that I came to become one of you, and enroll myself as one of the sons of Columbia. This meant the breaking up of old associations and the sacrifices of personal relationship. The severance of the ties of friendship which had grown close and dear to me through a long time of public work. But I considered duty called me, and we (to use a homely phrase) pulled up our tent-pegs, with more disadvantage than I like to contemplate just for the moment, and crossed the ocean and came unto the city of Boston. You know the story of my effort in connection with the cause here. How I tried, as has several times been recorded in the pages of the Banner of Light, to make that paper a Spiritualist paper for Spiritualists; that I considered to be its destiny, that I considered to be its mission still. It had that character in the past, and if I had in my hands the letters I have received during the last twenty-two months in connection with the paper, you would recognize that I was not romancing when I tell you that many felt I succeeded in the attempt.

But "the best laid plans of mice and men gang aft agley." I believe that there is a higher wisdom in the matter than perhaps we can see or I can realize just now; but I have never known an experience which we have passed through that has not in the end been an advantage to us and in some degree a benefit to our cause. I think the outcome in this case will be in that direction.

It is no secret, for The Progressive Thinker of this week tells the story, that I was compelled at last to resign my position. I had on several matters endeavored to reach a more happy solution, but that seemed impossible. So finally (to use a vigorous expression) I had to take the bull by the horns and decide for myself. I made the decision on the 8th of this month; and I feel fully justified in so deciding, as the financial part of the obligation was not being lived up to with the same assiduity I was trying to live up to the literary part of it. The resignation was sent in. As I tell you, The Progressive Thinker tells the real story, that there was a very large amount of arrears for salary due me. I am not an extravagant man, I can live on next to nothing, but I have not got to the position of the man's horse, that was able to live on a straw a day,—and therefore I was obliged, in justice to my family as well as to myself, to take the step I did. But I want this audience to understand one point especially: I did not leave the proprietors of the Banner of Light in any embarrassing condition. The formal agreement was all work should terminate on the fifth of August, but I put in three extra days's work in preparing the first half of the paper, the manuscript of which was in the printer's hands three days before it was due, and the editorial work alone was left, and as they had six days to complete that in, I do not feel they did not have enough time. I left everything in order in the editorial room and full instructions in regard to the manuscript on hand, and although I sent in a peremptory resignation, I left the office in order. I could not do any less as an honorable man; I could have done more, but that much I felt it my duty to do. I have been indirectly blamed and indirectly accused, but when people are angry they say many things they are sorry for afterwards.

I am not here to-night, nor is this the place to enter into the details of the case. I would not like to insult you by any such course—I certainly would not like to degrade myself by making an exhibition of myself, or, to put it in plain, colloquial English, I would not like to make an ass of myself. I have suffered, seriously suffered during the past eight months. It has been a very hard, a terrible struggle. Our good sister, Mrs. Henderson, knows how hard that struggle has been. But, for the sake of the cause and the reputation of the paper, I forbore mentioning it.

To-day it was my fortune to have an interview with the management of the Banner. I speak of this, because when I sent in my letter of resignation I indicated the salary which was due me, amounted to four hundred dollars.

I had a letter from a very dear friend up in Vermont, a friend whom I have never seen, but known through correspondence. This friend begged of me not to be hasty, not to do anything in a hurry, and above all things, to be just. But I think when a man does not do anything for eight months, he is not hasty; and I think when a man only asks for what is his own, he is just; and I think when a man refrains from saying unpleasant things, he is generous. I want to be just, I want to be generous, and I don't want to be hasty. So when I had my interview, I readily assisted the management to arrive at a solution. The solution we arrived at in good faith on my part. I accept it as it stands—I may have whatever opinion I please. In the very nature of the case what we are doing here to-night, will become public property, so to make it perfectly clear to all, I will state that the solution arrived at was this—but first of all I must tell you—I must confess to feeling very angry on one point. I don't think I am exceeding the laws of propriety if I tell you the incident. I received a letter from a very old and dear friend of mine—who is indirectly referred to in a Banner of recent date—a gentleman who is up at the lake, had been told by a person individually concerned, that there was no money owing to Mr. Morse at all, that all accounts were square between them. Now, when my account books on a whole statement show that there was over four hundred dollars due me, I think that was rubbing it in just too much! I can talk about it pleasantly now, because ten days have gone by and the anger has subsided. I hold in my pocket a copy of a receipt the management of the Banner of Light holds, signed by myself; that receipt says that I accept a certain amount in cash (less than fifty dollars) and in addition I was asked whether I would take preferred stock in the Dartmouth Publishing Company, or whether I would take notes. Well, as I shall be out of the United States in the next thirty days and probably will never return, the holding of preferred stock in the United States would of course, be perfectly valueless to me. So, I took notes and a certain suggestion was made as to the amounts and time, and, in my agreeableness, I doubled the time. And I hold these three notes for the balance of the salary, payable in four, eight and twelve months. The receipt I referred to is for all claims and salary against this corporation—that is the Dartmouth Company, that is now publishing the Banner of Light. There is an excellent endorsement—it is signed by the treasurer, and that surely would be good enough.

But the value of the receipt to my mind, lies in this fact: It is an official admission that salary was due me, and that is worth more to me than the value of the notes, because it puts me in the position of being an honest man before the Spiritualists of the United States. I have visited this country more or less, for thirty years. Thirty years ago in January I first set my foot in America. There is not a man or woman in this country who can say I owe them a dollar or robbed them of a cent, and it was a little more than I could bear to have it said that I was making a claim that was false.

Now, I would not say one word that would harm the Banner of Light; it is a paper that is dear to our hearts—as dear to me to-day as ever it has been. I think the Spiritualists of the United States have in that paper an organ to be proud of, so far as its past history is concerned. I hope it may float out and make many a trip along the coast-line of human life. Far be it from me to say any word that will give pain to any hearts present. I am trying to be just; I admit it is a little hard work; and because I am trying to be just, I have told you the facts just as they occurred this afternoon. This is not the place to thresh out private commercial questions. (Mr. Morse here read aloud the copy of the receipt given to the Dartmouth Publishing Co.) It has been a painful experience, and I am glad, more glad than I can here express to you in words, that it is over. A weight has been lifted from my heart and shoulders this afternoon. I know exactly where I am. I have never been in the position of a criminal who is on the trial for his life, but I can understand how the strain of suspense can become so intense that it is positively a relief to hear the judge say, "You have got to be hung or electrocuted."

I shall leave you on Tuesday morning next, when the steamship Ivernia will sail from her dock at East Boston, early in the morning. We are going on board the night before, so as not to have to go there about five in the morning, for I am like John G. Saxe, who said he always preferred to get up after the world had been aired! It is all very well about the early bird catching the worm, but the worm was a great fool to get up so soon. But early on the morning of Tuesday, we shall sail away down the bay. I know, as well as I know anything, that I will leave hosts of friends behind me in this city of Boston. I have never made any professions to help this, or that or the other medium—I have tried not to make fish of one and flesh of the other. It is a delight to me to go away from this room to-night with the knowledge that the Ladies' Aid Society, the Boston Children's Lyceum, our good friends from Malden, and all of you here besides, and some of our oldest friends and workers who are here to-night, and listen to the kind and generous things you have said about my wife, my daughter and myself. We are three folks that live very much by ourselves; our sorrows and our joys are our own and we suffer in silence and say nothing about it, and to know that our experiences have not been unnoticed, that you have not been unmindful, while it is a pleasure, it is a pain also. I thank you for us all from the bottom of my heart for your interest in our affairs, and if I have done anything for Spiritualism during the last twenty-two months, I am glad of it.

I wish among other kindnesses to speak of one in particular. I refer to Mr. Ayer of the First Spiritual Temple. It was my privilege in the early part of this year, to fill a fourteen weeks' engagement with that society, and you can hardly realize the importance of that engagement. I want to place it on record that I am not unmindful or unappreciative of this kindness.

Before I close these scattered remarks, and I speak under considerable emotion, friends—for although we old war horses may not show it, but go right on speaking as though there was nothing the matter, yet we suffer just the same behind it all—I wish to say, our good sister, Mrs. Henderson, has again expressed her kindly and generous and sympathetic disposition, and the desire to do good, where it is possible to do so. And I thank her for my family as well as myself for her kindness in calling this meeting to-night. It is an illustration of that spirit of fraternity and good fellowship which should be among all Spiritualists. (Applause.)

(Mr. Morse then read aloud letters of regret at not being able to attend, containing messages of sympathy and good will from C. Fannie Allyn, Carrie F. Loring and B. W. Belcher; also a telegram from Dr. G. Lester Lane.) He then continued:

The greatest mistake we can make in a public meeting is to talk about the people who are not here. Now I am perfectly satisfied if it had been the latter part of the season, we should have had a very large meeting. However, I thank from the bottom of my heart those who would have been here if they could have been.

But, to look into your faces and listen to the voices of the various speakers will inspire us on our journey, and when we are away in our far-away home, we shall go back to our last Friday night in Boston and think of the gathering we have had here. The purposes of life we never can fully understand, and I suppose we never shall until we have passed through it.

And now, friends, I hope you will not think that I have said one word in anger or bitterness. Whatever feelings of that nature I have had, have passed away. I am Spiritualist enough to know that in God's own time everything will be brought right; there is another life—thank God for it! And what slips up here will go right there. What we suffer in this world, will be compensated for there. And in thanking you for your presence here, I will quote another, who said "He would sooner be injured than be the injurer of another." I have no harsh words to leave, only loving words. Friends you may never see my face here in the flesh, we may never clasp hands here again, but I shall remember (here the speaker mentioned the names of many of those present) who have been very close to our hearts for many months past, and I pray that all the good things that you have said of us may be returned a thousand fold to bless each one and all of you. (Applause.)

Mrs. Conant-Henderson: By request of the spirit world, let us sing, "Blest be the tie that binds."

Mrs. Conant-Henderson, (entranced): Mr. Morse, Co-workers and Friends:—We greet you here to-night. What we deem co-operation is nothing but what one worker ought to extend to another. But our desire, friends, in bringing you here to-night, especially is that we realize that the last impression or the last association always leaves its prints deeper than any other time. When Eben Cobb ran the meetings so many years in Boston, and perhaps the most successful who ever ran regular meetings in the city of Boston, he always used to say that if he had an extra good medium, some one whom he knew the audience enjoyed, he always kept them for the last. And really one time, when our medium used to go there (I do not use this as any flattery to ourselves, but to explain how we became acquainted with his methods) and as our medium picked up the crumbs and tied the threads, he always kept her to the last. And she thought she was slighted and often times found fault, so much so that she refrained from going to the house. It is one thing, friends, when we become familiar with the laws of the spirit we won't be quite so sensitive and take things to heart that we now do. And certain individuals went to Eben, and said: "Eben, why don't you give her a chance? You call on this one and that one and it looks as though you were favoring one more than the other."

"Oh, no," Eben replied, "you are making a mistake. I may have a meeting here all day, but if there is one medium goes on at the end and if he happens to catch the people at the very last, they are all coming back again. It is the last impression that brings them back again."

So I thought there was nothing that would close our association with Brother Morse so well as to have a few of us together to-night, although it is perhaps not altogether necessary, for I do not feel because we are at a distance that we will be at all strangers. We are as much spirit to-day, as when disembodied. And so, friends, it is with that thought I called you together; with that thought that we would make him feel that nothing is circumstance. And I think, Mr. Morse, that is the reason our medium poked into some things that she did, for the bump of curiosity is a feminine one after all. There are going to be a great many sorrowful hearts when our Spiritualists return to Boston and find that J. J. Morse has gone. Many will regret that they have not the privilege of taking his hand in theirs, because (nor do we say it in flattery) J. J. Morse's work is too well known over the whole globe. And that is one reason, friends, that he was asked to come to this country as he was looked upon as the only individual known all the world over, capable of this work—to take up the broken threads and the work of the direction of the Banner of Light.

Now, friends, the spirit works mysteriously, and we have two pictures to draw, and no doubt it causes questioning. On the one hand to those who know the mysterious working of the spirit, and know that they do not always carry the mediums into flowery beds nor cushioned seats—as our brother has already said, they are generally carried through many fires. And yet out of the darkness cometh light, and I feel to-night to say, friends, that the purpose of J. J. Morse crossing the Atlantic and establishing his work here is not finished, neither is it yet thoroughly comprehended.

Another picture that is drawn, is from those who may question the power of the spirit; and what is it? What made his spirit friends let him come and take up the work under the existing circumstances? Why did his guide let him sacrifice his home, where he had everything to be thankful for? Why did his guides allow it? Friends, I am not prepared to answer you yet, for it is not yet time. But I wish to say, friends, that the Banner of Light has passed through many peculiar scenes; it has yet to fight a good fight, and it has even to pass through the fires and waters of adversities, and yet friends, it is not dead. Although the Banner may have done its work, and we recognize it is very near the end of a certain cycle—we realize also the old workers (that are now in our own heaven) who worked so diligently and worked so fearlessly, when it was something to be a Spiritualist.

It is nothing, friends, to be a Spiritualist to-day, if you are decent and honest. It is not as it used to be years ago, when our messengers used to be locked into rooms and lights turned down. Why? For fear some person from the sidewalk would see the light and think we were holding a seance. It does not to-day as when we established the Banner of Light, and the messengers gave instructions as to why it should be established. It is not necessary to lower the lights and crowd in the back doors, so afraid our neighbors would know where we go. But thanks to the ministering angels the clouds of doubt and of prejudice have been lifted!

And we find to-day, friends, that while Spiritualism as an "ism" may seem to have lost its zeal, may have lost its power as a name, yet its occult force has impregnated other bodies to-day more than ever before. Our brother referred to the Mother Church. Well do I remember when Mary Baker sat in our seance room when the spirit communicated to her through our own organism. We care not whether it is mental science, Spiritualism or Christianity; it is the power of the spirit working through matter, and it is the same god, the same spirit, that helps us united here to-day. Why, friends, let us say to you, you do not know all you have done by coming here to-night. Each one of you, in your personal heart, may grieve at the departure of our brother. He may say within his own soul: "If I once get within the doors of my own home, I care not to leave!" We may say, "I will not do this, I will not do that," but, friends, I say to you to-night, not one of you use any such expressions, for you know not where the spirit may lead you. You may be a little bit surprised, and yet I hope that I will yet have an opportunity—if not through this organism, through some one else—to say to you, "We thank God and the angel world for bringing J. J. Morse to the States." We will see, in perhaps, not so very long a time, that he was truly the only person that could have brought conditions to the focus that he has, for, friends, we cannot rectify anything, until we bring it to the surface.

To-day this word has gone vibrating through this world from end to end, for the Banner of Light and Colby and Rich's names are written as in letters of fire, and I say that that influence is not lost, neither is it dead, and while the Banner of Light may change its name, it may change its garment, it may change its matter, but it cannot destroy the rock on which it is built.

Then let us clasp hands with the spirit-world to-night and let us realize that those who have led us over hills and dales will not forsake us in the hour of depravity.

(Here there was an improvised poem.)

I want to announce myself as Fanny Conant. I was the first medium of the Banner of Light, and through my own organism was the first message given to Boston. And the spirits desired a paper to be published; why? For we saw many times, oh so many times that there was no opportunity for a spirit to visit their loved ones and we felt to open up a seance room in the Banner office, as it was opened there, for what you term to-day, the tramp spirits. Down in a little corner, in the further part of Water street, where the Herald office is to-day, up in a back room, we held our first circle. We never asked them whether they were Chinamen, Turks or Jews. All we wanted was the knowledge of divinity, and for that reason, friends, I wished for divinity myself. This is the first time I have controlled this medium since I left the Banner, but I felt we are holding to things of the past. I also wish to bring glad tidings of great joy from our good worker, Mr. Colby, and many others present outside of the many who have co-operated. I shall not keep you to-night, but I do hope that I am teaching every one of you to remember that the Banner of Light may change management, may change conditions, but that it is not going to die. Thank you, friends, I will now say adieu."

Friends, that spirit took me before I was aware of it and I have just another notice to give—a message to Brother Morse, as I now, Mrs. Henderson, will try to be. Friends, you are all well aware that in me personally, there is not much policy. I wish sometimes I had a little more of it. But there is one thing, I will stand for the truth. But there is nothing I take up, if I know it is honest especially in Spiritualism, that I ever get tired working for. I have often wished that my circumstances in life were such that I could give my whole time to assisting others. I am disappointed there were not more here. I know that Cora Richmond intended to be here, and there are many others whom I know also would have liked to be here. I wish to hand you a box—it is a box that is not of value, it is not its comeliness—it is not that it will cause any great wonderment—it is just the widow's mite, a trifling expression of the friends here. It is not all that the friends wanted to do; they did not know about it before coming, for that reason they were not as well prepared as they would have liked to be, but the contents of the box, it is our hope, will, like the widow's mite, expand and bring good forth. And they all join me in wishing you will have an abundance of gold and prosperity, thanks to the widow's mite. Don't open it to-night.

Mr. Morse: In one of Dickens' works he has a character called Sam Weller, and this man had a son also to whom he stated his philosophy of life in the words: "Samivel, beware of the widders." I think I will beware of widows. I think I will hunt up the widows in the future in the hopes they may be handing me their mites. I thank the widow very heartily and very sincerely. I will obey the injunction not to open the box to-night. I am a most obedient young man. I thank you all most heartily for your kindness and I can only repeat what I have said before that all you have done and wished for us may be recompensed to you each and all a thousandfold.

The meeting closed with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

A CALL FOR TEACHERS.

There is a large field for healers and teachers in small towns. After a little study of "Healing Currents from the Battery of Life" (by Walter DeVoe), students start groups for study and realization of the healing power.

So helpful is this book that as many as 21 copies have been sold to a group formed to hear it read. Manifestations of healing are common where students unite to study and practice the instructions given in this wonderful book. Many are willing to pay for instruction in healing truth, but there is need of energetic persons to get them together.

Those who can successfully form groups in their own town among their friends will find enjoyable and profitable work doing the same in other towns.

Order a copy now and spread the glad tidings. Price $2. Special terms to those who can sell a number of copies through personal effort or letters.

LYNN SPIRITUALIST ASSOCIATION

Excellent Work Accomplished by the Association—A Tribute to Dr. Alex Caird and His Estimable Wife.

The meetings held at Unity Camp during the past season, under the auspices of this association, have been uniformly successful. Large audiences have been in attendance, and we feel sure that good work for the cause has been done. Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond was with us August 20 and 27, and as usual charmed and instructed all who had the pleasure of listening to her. Mrs. Kate M. Ham, Mrs. S. S. Cunningham, Mrs. Maude Litch, and Mrs. Mamie Halyett, all good workers, are the speakers for the month of September, after which the work will be resumed in Cadet Hall, Lynn, Dr. George A. Fuller being the speaker on the opening Sunday, Oct. 1. The Children's Lyceum is preparing for a union service on that date, at which all the lyceums in the vicinity will be invited to participate. The largest part of the afternoon will probably be devoted to lyceum exercises. Supper will be served.

The members of the society, as well as the public, deeply regret the retirement of Dr. Alex Caird from the presidency, an office which he has so ably filled for the past five years. We feel that to the able management and untiring efforts of Dr. Caird and his estimable wife, the society owes a large portion of their present prosperity, and we grieve to part with them. The very best wishes of a host of friends will go with them wherever their lot in life may be cast. Mr. Harry C. Chase will fill the office, by appointment by the executive board, until a meeting of the society on Oct. 3.

MRS. A. A. AVERILL,
Lynn, Mass. Secretary.

COMMENDATORY.

Of the Work of Contributors and Mediums.

I wish to thank David A. Leisk for his article in No. 823 of The Progressive Thinker—the paper of all papers for me.

I could not agree with my sister, Nora Batchelor on the subject of Obsession, I believe in the law of attraction and that like atttracts like. We cannot all reason from the same standpoint, each one has to express himself from his own point of view.

Mr. Leisk's ideas harmonize with mine perfectly on the subject. I was very much interested in his article. I agree with him fully that sensitives should be educated spiritually.

I have often wished there could be a medium fully unfolded spiritually and morally that was adapted to the work of teaching us to receive and interpret messages from the spirit side of life. It seems to me that messages are given on the same principle we send one here through the telephone. If the instrument is in good order, and the one sending a message understands how to use it, and the receiver also, we will get a correct message.

I think when we leave our physical form and take on the spiritual, some of us will be very much disappointed. I do not think we will find it very easy to use an instrument that we know nothing about. I agree with some of the scientists regarding telepathy, that when we understand how to get into the vibrations of our friends on the spirit side of life we will get our messages in that way.

I wish to say one word of praise for my sister mediums, Mrs. Jaquet and Mrs. Bryan. Go on with your good work, sisters; you will receive help from the spirit world. You are doing a good work, and in years to come you can look back and see the amount of good you have done in taking the stand you have in helping to make our cause more inviting to investigators. I wish there were more like you and Brothers Barrett, Francis, and some others I might mention, that are helping to eliminate frauds from our ranks.

M. A. HAWLEY GORDON.

SPIRITS THERE SURELY.

One Showed Up on Picture Taken in Brewery—No One Was Around When Picture Was Taken Except the Watchman and Photographer.

Do ghosts drink?

That is the question which is puzzling Photographer Wasson, some of the Bay City Brewing Company, its employes and others just now. And it is no hop juice either, for the first mentioned has the picture of what seems to be an inhabitant of the spirit realm, or else the photo is an unusual freak.

The other day the photographer went to the brewing company's plant to take some interior pictures and no one was there but himself and the night watchman at the time. When the plates were developed and printed the misty form of what looked like a woman with her hands crossed on her breast appeared in front of the reproduction of a steam cylinder tank. The tanks and machinery covering throughout are all dull finish, so there could be no reflection, and even if there were a mirror effect neither man or anyone around the brewery was dressed as the person in the picture.

The plate, as is usual, was boxed and sealed in a dark room after sensitization at the factory and not opened until ready for use, so there was no chance for any other exposure. The only conclusion reached, after much consideration, is that some toper, who has shuffled off this mortal coil, gets into the brewery along towards evening and gets busy at the flowing bowl, and although practically invisible to the naked eye it enters the local spirits world about the time no one is around.
—The Evening Times, Bay City, Mich.

POETICAL PROSE.

Life is a narrow vale between the cold
And barren peaks of two eternities.
We strive in vain to look beyond the heights;
We cry aloud; the only answer
Is the echo of our wailing cry.
From the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead
There comes no word; but in the night of death
Hope sees a star, and listening love can hear
The rustle of a wing.
These myths were born of hopes and fears and tears
And smiles; and they were touched and colored
By all there is of joy and grief between
The rosy dawn of birth and death's sad night.
They clothed even the stars with passion,
And gave to gods the faults and frailties
Of the sons of men. In them the winds
And waves were music, and all the lakes and Streams, springs, mountains, woods, and perfumed dells
Were haunted by a thousand fairy forms.
—Robert G. Ingersoll.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32. CHICAGO, ILL., SEPT 30. 1905. NO. 827

Spirits In Prison.

Mortals Confined in Material Prisons—Prison Poets Are Cheerful—No wailing Notes When They Strike the Lyre.

Among the prisoners in the Charlestown State prison, Mass., are men of rare ability in many directions, men who but for some unfortunate circumstance in their lives would have arisen to eminence in the world at large, says the Boston Globe. And it is not surprising to find that among the eight hundred or more prisoners from nearly every walk of life there should be some who can write good songs and poems that reflect their feelings, their hopes and aspirations.

It is nothing particularly new, this embalming of thoughts in verse in the prison solitude; this expression in song of hope for the future, or the effort to amuse other prisoners by a recital in verse of things that are obvious in a criminal's career. And these unsigned songs and verses pass among the prisoners and are committed to memory and quietly hummed or recited.

When Warden Briggs was asked if he had a department of song and poetry in the prison he smilingly said:

"There may be some 'poets' here. If you care I will look them up—or rather some specimens of their work."

As a result of the investigation the writer was permitted to see some of the songs and poems written by prisoners which are the most popular in the Charlestown bastile. Some of these are appreciated more by certain sets of prisoners than others, as, for instance, the song know as "The Boston Burglar," which is as familiar to second-story workers and safe-blowers who have "done time" in Charlestown as their own names. The song relates through many verses how a man who was raised tenderly became a thief and was arrested. Here is the last verse, with the moral:

The jury found me guilty—
The clerk he wrote it down;
The judge then passed the sentence;
"You must go to Charlestown."

They put me aboard an eastbound train
On a cold December day,
And at each and every station
You could hear the people say:
"There goes that Boston burglar;
In iron chains he's bound,
Far some crime or another
He's off for Charlestown."

Now young men all take my advice
And keep it it you can,
And don't go on the streets at night
To break the laws of man.

The men who have had experience in the varied and unsettled life of a tramp appreciate this song and the full significance of the last line:

Riding in the box cars
La-de-da-de box cars,
We are two bums,
Two jolly good chums,
We live like royal Turks
When we have luck
In bumming our chuck—
To hell with the man who works.

Then there are a number of songs about noted criminals—men who were hanged and noted outlaws. These are familiar to the men who have served more than one term and who are regarded as belonging to the strictly criminal class.

But there is another class, who, though serving time because of a keen temptation or an ungovernable impulse which has been their immediate undoing, are usually well educated men, and these are able to give a different turn to their muse. Among these songs of boyhood days are popular, and the following is the most noted perhaps in this class:

I am thinking of my homestead; I am dreaming of my farmhouse on the hillside far away;
Of quiet, shady nooks, of the little babbling brooks, and the orchard
where a boy I used to play.
And I seem to see again my dear old mother, and I seem to hear her gently say to me:
O, no matter where you roam, you are always welcome home; don't forget your home my boy, where'er you be.

Chorus:
Dear old homestead on the hillside,
'midst the maple and the pine—
Their branches making music in the breeze;
How I long to see the pastures with their herds of feeding kine—
The sunshine on the clover and the bees.

Some prisoners given to song find in their downfall a lesson they are apparently anxious to pass along to others. A wrong has been done, that is freely acknowledged, but an optimistic view is taken of the situation, as the following entitled "Halt!" which was written by a young Southerner, at present in Charlestown prison on a charge of forgery committed when he had been graduated from college but a year:

Listen to me, you erring ones,
You men who can think and feel,
Shake out the kinks from your atrophied legs
And recover your old-time zeal.
Straighten your drooping shoulders up.
Throw off your burdens of care,
Look into the future with fearless eye
As men who can do and dare.
Don't loll about with a lazy air
And imagine your race is run;
Don't be a fossil at twenty-five—
Be a youngster at sixty-one!
Don't think that because you're in prison
You must drop into senile decay—
Rather think of the fun you used to have
And you'll have again some day.
Don't brood over things that have passed and gone!
Don't idly sit and prate
Of the many failures you happened to meet
In eighteen seventy-eight!
The world and the people have both improved.
They are better than ever before;
There's no reason at all why you shouldn't succeed
In nineteen hundred and four.
So pause, you sinners, while yet there's time;
Shake off your imagined ill!
Put on the armor of might and main
And go to work with a will!
Talk of the present and not of the past!
Then all the world will say
These are no longer the fools that were,
But the men that are—today!

The same writer has evidently had experience with some of the learned "bores" who are probably found in prison as well as out of prison. He summarizes such bore in the following facetious verses:

There lives a man in our town and he is wondrous wise;
Why, all the things that that man knows would fill you with surprise.
He talks to you of Darwin, of Huxley and of James,
In fact, his cranium is full of scientific names.
He understands astronomy, knows the names of all the stars;
He even knows what's happening up in the planet Mars.
He's versed in all the languages, in Latin and in Greek;
He studied all the "ologies"—this educated freak.
He owns a roll of sheepskins granting every known degree—
AM, PM, BC, AD, PO, and XYZ.
How came he into prison? O, what an unkind fate!
That man was born to guide the helm of the mighty "ship of state."
But where gleaned he all this knowledge that he holds within his grip?
I wonder if he pinched it when he was on the dip?
And if ever he imagines that the others
see his sham
And are sizing him for something 'twixt a polyp and a clam?
The plaudits of his fellow men may be won by any chap
Who will find some way of muzzling this empty headed yap.

Memorial day is the theme for many a burst of song from some of the gray-haired men behind the bars. Sad must have been the hours of retrospection to the veteran who puts his thoughts into words while his comrades were holding their national convention in Boston last year. There are four stanzas ringing with the glory of the flag and the valor of his comrades, the final being:

Ah! how the veteran ranks are thinned
by the swiftly passing years,
Since this land of thrilling story lay
bathed in blood and tears;
How dim the eye, how hushed the lip,
once resonant with song,
When "Glory Hallelujah" inspired a million strong.

Slow move the feet that swift and strong through bloody onsets whirled.
While deeds of peerless courage thrilled
a watchful, startled world—
The flowers of Northern valor with the fragrant bloom of May
Are coming, comrades, coming, to recrown the Blue and Gray.

In all the songs and verse written behind the prison bars that through the courtesy of Warden Bridges the writer was permitted to see not one touches a pessimistic note; there seems always something to look forward to. "What though death assails, there is life beyond the grave!" is the hopeful expression of one in a verse called "Compensation."

The various changes of nature, the birds, the trees, the falling leaves, all bear a message of cheerfulness that must be passed along in song for others to enjoy.

The spiritual help received in these hours of trouble is expressed by some in almost exultant praise.

All manuscripts are unsigned and the authorship is not always known. Possibly for this reason a deeper and more personal note is often struck, as in the following:

Father, thou God of truth and love,
In lowly state I called to thee.
And thou, my voice in heaven above,
Didst hear and justly answer me.

Fetters of sin in bondage held
The soul of one thou didst create,
And all the ills his eyes beheld
Him caused thy love to view with hate.

Bitter the dregs of woe he drained
Ere calling on thy blessed name;
Sorrows untold his life had stained
When back to thee he voiceless came.

But in thy mercy thou didst hear
The soul that knelt, in agony,
Lifted him up, came wondrous near,
That he thy heart of love couldst see.

Prophetic words of hope revealed,
That he on earth might do thy will;
Unto his eyes thy truth unsealed
Him gave a mission to fulfill.

Father, in love, thy promise true
Thou gavest to the soul that cried,
Taught him thy holy will to do,
Who once thy blessed law defied.

The above from the New York Sun, is a graphic description of poor mortals confined within prison walls. But what of Spirits in prison. Ah! each one by sinful acts creates his own prison, and it is far more dismal and unwholesome than any mortal prison. Let each one bear that in mind.

REFLECTION.

AB INTRA.

Flashing down on mount and river,
Shedding rays of light afar,
Tinging all things with its brightness,
Causing hearts to beat with lightness,
Shines the twentieth century star.

How the sad old earth is groaning
At each wayward, erring child,
Who has turned against his brother,
Who his lamp of life would smother,
Leaving him in darkness wild.

But we bring the love of sages
From the archives of the past,
Thousands glean truth from its pages,
Breathe again the life of ages,
With its mystic teachings cast.

Then we open wide the portal
Where the light has never shone.
Rays we clutch from the immortal,
Myriad colored, grand and awful,
Clothed with love from heaven's zone.

So we bid you watch, my brother
Dawn has broke across the hills;
Though the enemy may fight us,
Never can his power affright us,
Grinds no more the Gods his mills.
But with love and power undying,
We will work with heart and hand,
Never swerving, never turning,
Day by day grand entrance earning,
To the beauteous spirit land.

Miss Mollie Fancher.

Mollie Fancher, sixteen, a student at the Brooklyn Heights Seminary, standing high in her class was near graduation, which she was obliged to forego because of failing health. Her physician fearing lung trouble advised horse-back riding. At this she soon became expert.

At this time she was a tall, slender and graceful young lady, a decided blonde with profuse light wavy hair reaching down over her shoulders, and, probably, no young lady in the city was more widely known.

A neighbor had a trick pony which she persisted in riding. One day she accidentally dropped a rein; quick as a flash the horse jumped, throwing Mollie against the curb stone, a heavy hat saving her skull from being crushed. Two ribs were broken and she was taken up unconscious. Doubtless from this accident she would have recovered but for another. In alighting, within the year, from a street car, her crinoline caught and she was rolled over and over for a block before the car was stopped. She was taken up unconscious. It was found that several ribs were broken and her body thoroughly bruised. Months passed, muscles contracted, eye-sight failed somewhat and it was evident that her spine was affected.

From that time on for nearly forty years Miss Fancher has been bedridden and the relation of the phenomena that has occurred would fill volumes.

After mentioning my own introduction to her, I will content myself with brief extracts from a letter of Prof. Charles E. West.

Judge A. H. Dailey, of Brooklyn, N. Y., a native of Berkshire, has written a book entitled, "Mollie Fancher; Who am I? An Enigma." Prof. Charles E West, Judge A. H. Dailey and Henry Ward Beecher are names that figure in, to some, incredulous story, of the "Widow's Mite." by the Rev. Dr. I. K. Funk. The judge and myself are old friends. E. T. Blodgett and myself were stopping with the judge over night, some twelve years ago. He invited us to go and make a call on Miss Fancher. Upon entering the room, the Judge said: "Have you ever seen either of these gentlemen before?" "Why, no," said she, "they have never been here before." Then she exclaimed, "Oh, yes, this is the man I saw at your house (pointing to me) that night. He has changed some, but he is the man." The Judge had told her a year or two before of her seeing me while in a trance. Since then I have frequently been with the Judge for a call on her. I'll not take time to relate my own observations.

The following within quotation marks are extracts from a letter written to a friend by Prof. West, and published in the Buffalo Courier, November 10, 1878. He states his first visit as on "March 4, 1867, and from that time I have been an intimate visitor of the family; I have kept a journal; I have used all the sagacity I possess to detect fraud, but have never seen any; she is a lovely Christian girl; Spiritualists and curiosity-seekers have sought access to her, but have failed.

"First, her physical. For twelve years or more she has lain in one position on her right side. For nine years she was paralyzed, her muscles only relaxing under the influence of chloroform. For the last three years she has been in a new condition—the limp instead of the rigid. Her muscles are so relaxed that her limbs can be moved without the aid of chloroform. While passing into this state her sufferings were intense. For days it did not seem possible that she could live. Her eyes were open and staring. For nine years they had been closed. Now they were open and never closing day or night. They were sightless. She could swallow, but take no food; even the odor of it was offensive. During this twelve years there have been times when she had not the use of any one of her senses. For many days together she has been to all appearances dead. The slightest pulse could not be detected; there was no evidence of respiration. Her limbs were cold as ice, and had there not been some warmth about the heart she would have been buried.

"During all these years she has virtually lived without food. Water, the juices of fruit and other liquids have been introduced into her mouth, but scarcely any of them ever make their way to her stomach. So sensitive has this organ become it will not retain anything within it. In the early part of her illness it collapsed, so that by placing the hand in the cavity her spinal column could be felt. There was no room for food. Her throat was rigid as a stick. Swallowing was out of the question. Her heart was greatly enlarged, severe pains passed from it through her left side and shoulder. With slight exception she has been blind. When I first saw her she had but one sense; that of touch. With that she could read with many times the rapidity of one by sight. This she did by running her fingers over the printed pages, with equal facility in light or darkness. With the finger she could discriminate the photographs of persons, the faces of callers, etc. She never sleeps, her rest being taken in trances. The most delicate work is done in the night. She performs none of the ordinary functions of life, except that of breathing. She longs to die, but says she cannot, as there is nothing to die."

"Second—To me her mental state is more extraordinary. Her powers of clairvoyance, or second sight, are marvelously developed. All places in which she takes any interest are open to her mental vision. Distance interposes no barriers. No retirement, however secluded, but yields to her penetrating gaze. She dictates the contents of sealed letters, which have never been in her hands, without the slightest error. She visits the family circles of her relations and acquaintances in remote places describes their attire and occupations. She points out any disorder of dress, however slight, as the basting thread in the sleeve of a sack which to ordinary sight was concealed by the arm. Any article which has been mislaid she sees and tells where it may be found. She discriminates in darkness the most delicate shade of color with an accuracy that never errs. She works in embroidery and wax without patterns. She conceives the most beautiful forms and combinations of forms. She never studied botany or took a lesson in wax work and yet she never mistakes the form of a leaf or flower. Leaves with their ribs or veins, their phylotaxis; flowers with calix, coralla, stamens with their anthers are given with a most truthful regard to nature.

"Holding pen or pencil in her left hand she writes with most extraordinary rapidity. Her penmanship is handsome and legible. She wrote a poem of ten verses in as many minutes—her thoughts flowing with the rapidity of lightning. In cutting velvet leaves for pin-cushions, like the sample sent you, she held the scissors by the knuckles of thumb and fore-finger of the left hand, and bringing the velvet with the thumb and finger of the right hand, she cut the leaves as sharply and without ravel as though they had been cut with a punch. These leaves do not differ in size or form more than leaves growing on tree or shrub. In the early part of her sickness, she cut more than two thousand such leaves. In April, 1875, she worked up two hundred and fifty ounces of worsted; to December, 1875, she had written six thousand five hundred notes and letters. She has kept an account of all expenses of the family during her sickness. She keeps a daily journal, except when in trances of longer duration than twenty-four hours. In passing into the new condition, three years ago, of which I have spoken, she forgot everything that had occurred in the previous nine years. When she was able to speak she inquired about matters that occurred at the beginning of her illness—the nine intervening wears were a perfect blank to her."

The above rather liberal extract from Prof. West's letter has been given; first, because many readers of the Sun knew the author and of his truthfulness, and also because it is a condensed statement of Miss Fancher's condition for the first twelve years of her illness. The professor mentions that she sleeps only in trances but does not tell how there are six Mollie Fanchers in these trances, and each one of them a clean-cut personality. They are named "Sunshine," "Idol," "Rosebud," "Pearl," "Ruby." It would be interesting to stop and give the peculiarities of each, but this letter is now altogether too long. Sunshine is the daytime Mollie, the one that is usually met by visitors. The others succeed each other after about 11 o'clock at night, in the order named, until daylight. During this time a recuperation of brain power seems to take place.

So, for the past thirty-eight years, day by day, through trances, spasms, rigid and relaxed, physical and mental changes, strange and most wonderful this mortal, Miss Fancher, has lived a daily exhibition of an occult force that can be nothing less than the spiritual. The question as to the strength and stability of our own identity is raised and we ask: "What are we? In fact, Am I Am I? or, Am I not Am I?"

BITTER EXPERIENCE

By a Medium and a Lover of Truth.

To the Editor:—Eight years ago when I was first controlled by the unseen forces, it came to me, as a most beautiful and divine gift. It seemed to me that I was just awaking to a beautiful reality after a long unhappy dream, as now I count my life prior to that time as naught. When I first overheard the voices from the spirit realm, saw the faces of those long since passed over, and felt the gentle touch of the hands of my loved and so-called lost, a new and beautiful world had opened to me.

Naturally I sought Spiritualists, and in going from one place to another, I heard (to me then) many astonishing things about materializing, trumpet and slate-writing mediums. Being a young convert, I was anxious to hear and see all I could. I did not doubt any phase, I had seen materialized forms in my own room, and had seen them vanish. I felt that nothing was impossible with the "spirit" and did not doubt spirits materializing from a cabinet under proper conditions.

My husband and I attended different circles. We were where musical instruments floated above our heads, supposed spirit hands touched our cheeks. We had messages on slate supposedly from our spirit friends; we saw so-called materialization. After taking the rounds, we were heartsick, for we could not be blinded. We knew that all we had seen and heard was nothing but fraud. The odor of liquor was on the breath of the so-called materialized spirit. I went one Sunday afternoon to the circle of a so-called wonderful slate-writer. I did not doubt her, and went with only truth, and a longing for a message from some loved one. I happened to be seated just in the right place to see the medium unfold and read fifteen billets, containing questions from the different ones present. Holding the billets between her fingers beneath the slate, placing her thumbs above, so few suspected what she was doing, her fingers were very nimble. I could hardly contain myself. There was no mistake. I saw her unfold the papers, read them, fold them up again, beneath her slate. Then she held the folded paper between her fingers, and placed her hand on her head, so every one could see the folded paper, after she had answered the question, giving the name of the spirit asked for, etc. I called the attention of a gentleman in the room to it, telling him to watch her eyes, hands and slate. He did so, and found within a very few minutes, that she was beyond any manner of doubt an arrant trickster. To make a long story short I will say, after going to all these places, and finding nothing but fraud, then I heard of the "stock test," the "Blue Book," etc. I was still more heartsick, but oh! so anxious for these frauds to be found out. I lay awake nights thinking of it—for Spiritualism is too sacred to me to have untruth linked with it in any way. However, I concluded that any effort of mine would avail nothing. All I would do, was to wait. Sometime it would all come right. Since, I have stayed away from camp-meetings, seances, etc from disgust at so-called spirit messages, etc.

To-day I have read Harrison D. Barrett's views. They thrill me through and through. I am so glad he dares to speak the truth; I feel that now, as the good old Progressive Thinker has taken up the work in helping to weed out fraud, that the right key has been struck in the great scale. Truth must and will prevail. I think it is the duty of every Spiritualist to take a paper. If they would read The Progressive Thinker, there would not be so much trouble for their eyes would be opened, and many dollars saved, that could be used to aid our worthy poor. Hoping that only truth may be linked with Spiritualism now and forever.

A NOTE OF WARNING.

Turning Spiritualism Into Orthodox Channels.

The article so ably written by Clara Watson in No. 825 of The Progressive Thinker, is incontrovertible, and every word is true! Jesus is reported to have said "The tree is known by its fruit," and if this test be applied we need not go back to the dark ages for the result, but look over the earth today and behold the bloodshed, the misery and the intense suffering, and degradation caused by the so-called Christian rulers, and that, too, by the grace of God, in whose name they claim to rule!

If Spiritualism needs old orthodoxy as a sort of "stepmother," it will truly find itself in bad hands, and will need a "Moses" to lead it out of bondage.

Give some men authority and they are prone to abuse it.

Let us guard our liberties!

A GRAVE.

Paled off by wall and rail and padlocked gate,
A shrub-grown plot of grass, a lonely mound,
And one plain stone, on which the sparrows mate
And chirp a song in praise of love and spring.
All night, all day the life-o'erflowing street
Against this island throws its tide of sound;
The crunch of wheels, the shuffling noise of feet,
And voices, that with mirth or sorrow ring,
That ebbs away upon its silent shore,
I pause and think of some Egyptian lore:
And see around the city's banquet-board
The mummies by the master held in thrall,
Gazing upon a dream—beyond the wall.

IT IS COMING.

The time is coming, we must wait
For common-sense to master
The minds of people, small and great,
In commerce, and in church and state;
Then all will know God made things straight,
That death is not disaster.

THE POT POURI OF SPIRITUALISM.

Concerning the Variety of Beliefs and Opinions of Spiritualists.

We are often questioned upon the variety of beliefs, teachings and assertions of Spiritualists and met with the declaration that if Spiritualism is true all would see and understand it the same.

Now if the seeker after the reasons of things will scan the mental horizon when the particular demonstrations were made at Hydesville, he or she will find a part of the answer to the query.

Another factor in the problem is that no two persons see things from the same standpoint, because no two brains have exactly the same formation.

And there is still another side of the question to be considered, and that is that every atom of the human body is a thought atom, capable of being educated in any line. So the diligent may readily see that many of the discrepancies in view-points come to be because of inherited proclivities and through education. Out of the various sects as well as from non-sectarians have Spiritualists come, all more or less tainted with former concepts, as witness the writings of so many.

In the one matter of God, how few have wholly lost the association of separateness and personality? how few apply themselves to analytical study upon this one momentous question, for Job's question has been answered, and all may understand it if they will not hold to preconceived notions.

But progress is of slow growth; that it is sure is our consolation. True in some cases there is a volcanic upheaval that upsets all former concepts, but ordinarily the evolving process is slow; thought atoms must be regenerated by chemicalization or by non-use become atrophied before the whole is changed.

This is the plane occupied by many Spiritualists to-day; they are not yet "transformed by the renewing of their minds," the old thought habits are not fully changed, consequently they do not accept, arrange, codify to meet the full demand of the hour.

Theology has been very dictatorial, church obligations very binding, breeding a positivity that is very narrowing in its effects. Liberty of thought was restricted to certain dogmas and the majority grew dogmatic on all questions. Many scientists, too, have trodden in the steps of theologians and found difficulty in advancing.

Another phase of the subject to be studied, is the variety of the teachers on the yon side of life; the same difficulties are to be met with there that we have here, diversity of opinion and dogmatic tenacity. Advance there is, but the old thought habits are not readily thrown off, they qualify the revealings given back to earth.

Were each planet left to its own evolvement we should be very slow to discover the secrets of Nature, but fortunately the younger can have the benefit of the older, in systems as well as in planets. Our sun system is not the only one, it is not the Universe, there are those far, far older, and our planet earth is in charge of intelligences belonging to a sun system the third older than ours and it is from these that the truths of life are being unfolded. They have, from time to time had sensitives sufficiently refined to receive the advanced teachings. Such an era culminated in the ministry of the Nazarene who gave the fundamental principles of the Science of Being, but he met with so much physical suffering that further work was difficult and much was withheld lest martyrdom be the result. Intelligence was not sufficiently evolved. But a new era is upon us and the spirit spheres of this planet are receiving through sympathetic ethers the revealments that will bring about a unified system called—and rightly so—the Science of Being, a science which will correct all illegitimate systems and show the race on this planet that there can be no religion apart from science and no science that has not in it the elements of adoration and sublimity because of the wonderful, the marvelous combinations that are expressed in form.

Until this era is well advanced we shall have the pot pourri that makes up both the advance guard and the rank file of Spiritualism, becoming more and more modified as its students and sensitives become more and more refined.

OREGON NEWS.

Convention of State Spiritualist Association.

On Saturday, Sept. 2, the State Spiritualist Association of Oregon held its annual convention and elected officers for the ensuing year as follows:

President, Ben F. Atherton; vice-president, Mrs. Sophia B. Seip; secretary, W. H. Behnke; treasurer, Mrs. Dean. Directors, J. T. Greenfield, Chas. H. Piggott, Mrs. Ladd Finnican, Geo. M. Lazelle and J. E. Trigg.

On Sunday, Sept. 3, the State Association held an all-day meeting, which was well attended and proved to be a grand, good meeting. At 11 a. m., there was a conference meeting; at 2 o'clock p.m., we had short talks by those who were termed pioneers in Spiritualism, letting them choose their own line of inspiration and subjects. This service was followed by forming three circles in which some good tests were given.

Among the speakers of the day we had Dr. N. F. Ravlin, Ira Taylor, Col. C. A. Reed, C. Affolter, Mrs. Nora Armstrong, Chas H. Piggott, the president of the State Spiritualists of Michigan (if I mistake not) whose name slips my memory, Mrs. Noble from Houston, Texas, Mr. Bennett, Ben F. Atherton and many more whom I could mention if I could remember their names. In the evening Dr. N. F. Ravlin gave us a grand lecture, after which Rev. G. C. Love closed the day's service with a short talk.

I doubt if a better all day meeting was ever held in the city of Portland, Oregon by any Spiritual society. All that attended, as far as heard from declared themselves glad to be there. I might add that at the business meeting your correspondent was elected state missionary, also delegate to the N. S. A., which I shall attend if nothing more than I know of now, prevents.

REV. G. C. LOVE.

If you see a man doing a thing and doing it well, tell him so. It will help him do it better.—Everett McNeil.

No subject can be too sacred to be understood.—Ingersoll.

Never throw mud. You may miss your mark; but you must have dirty hands.—Joseph Parker.

A GREAT QUESTION.

What Must I Do to Be Saved?

To the Editor.—The question, "What shall I do to be saved?" is a most pertinent and important one, and J. L. Dow's lecture on the subject is both timely and suggestive.

Timely because of the lax notions so common among Spiritualists as to mortal obligations and responsibilities; and suggestive of a growing demand for a higher order of spiritual pabulum from those who would lead us to the spiritual heights, and to the avoidance of the spiritual depths.

All the lecturer has said as to the vanity of prayer, praise and sacrifice offered to man-made deities is fully indorsed. But the logic of the lecturer wabbles to its fall when, after stating a well known law that "love cannot be forced" he dogmatically declares that only those can be saved who do good works, because they, "like to do them." If this last conclusion is the statement of a fact, then the percent of saved will be as meager as it would be under the orthodox scheme.

It must be evident to all observers of men and women that if our doing for others is only valuable to us or our beneficiaries in proportion to our love for the work of the doing, then indeed, will the Summer Land be a sparsely peopled country.

"Love cannot be forced." It is beyond reason to ask the pure and refined to entertain a feeling of love for the vile and abominable. Such a nature abhorrently revolts at such a proposition.

But this natural revulsion from a distasteful work does not relieve us from the requirements of stern duty's call.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" If all men are brethren, then indeed, in the men are brethren, then indeed, in an important sense I am, and I am bound by the law of kinship to guard his welfare and personal rights with the same care I guard my own. The brotherly, altruistic thought, "all for others" finds no sympathy or place in this frigid system of ethics.

It is a bold, frank statement of the worldling's creed—"Every one for himself and the devil take the hindermost."

It is the agnostic materialist's idea—"One world at a time; fight the devil when you meet him; every tub on its own bottom, etc."

Dear reader of Truth's best Advocate, who are delighted with the evident progress that has been made in the past few months in the work of driving out of the thieves and robbers from our fair temple of Truth and Life. While this long-delayed house-cleaning is in progress—heaven grant it may be thorough—let us take to our hearts the lesson that our individual welfare and progress on all enduring lines must depend on and be in proportion to our faithful doing for others the things we would have them do for us. Not all our specious pleadings will avail in the least degree, to relieve us from obligation to this immutable law.

"Every tub on its own bottom" is the rule governing the most groveling of the earth earthy. Each for all, and all for others, is the law of progress and development that leads to the highest levels in mortal or spirit life.

We will find in the day of "summing up," which day is not distant from any of us, that it was what we did for the good of our fellow mortals or neglected to do for them builded our hut or "mansion eternal in the heavens," or spirit spheres.

"Ah, well!" soliloquises the optimistic lover of self and present ease, "If I find my habitation is a hovel in the spirit realm, I'll set about the work of building greater."

Will you? You will find the same law operative, limitless, and holding you in its grasp there as here.

Will you realize humiliation and disgrace? You think it will be easy to reform and get on the up-grade in that new life. So can the man in earth-life who, from a career of high-flying suddenly finds himself unmasked and behind prison bars, but at what a fearful cost.

Life on earth and in the spirit spheres is one and identical, and the laws of life are the same. Ten thousand returning witnesses so testify.

On this point Mr. Dow gets the cart squarely in front of the horse, as he does in all his argument as to our promptings to good works. If we can make no progress in this life by obeying duty's call, however distasteful the duty, how shall we ever be able to soar in spirit life weighted down under a burden of neglected earthly responsibilities? Earnest, faithful work for the good of humanity is laid out for us all.

"The night cometh" when the earth drill must end, and it will be important to us that we keep true step in the forward march.

LIFE'S RADIANT CENTER.

Forth from its center life forever moves,
Be it man, or star, or flower,
Law of the circle, truth eternal proves,
Law of its sacred symboled power.

Safe is it hidden from the outer view,
Is this germ, this seed divine,
Deep is it rooted, in the "ever new"—
It is God's own circled sign.

Reach then within, 'tis there that wisdom waits,
Clear, its light forever shines,
Seek thou thy soul, unbar its golden gates,
Enter life's radiant lines.

National Letter Carriers Declare In Favor of Woman Suffrage.

At the annual meeting of the National Letter Carriers' Association which has just met in Portland, Ore., the first resolution adopted by it was the one endorsing the enfranchisement of women. The resolution was as follows, "Whereas this country has attained its high standing among the nations by the development of its government on the principles of American independence, therefore Resolved, That the best interests of progress demand the application of these principles to women by extending to them the right of suffrage on equal terms with men, and we urge the necessary changes in our laws and constitutions to secure this right to them."

The spirit of equal rights seems to be in the air in Oregon where it is expected a woman suffrage amendment will be submitted to the voters next June.

What About It?

A Different Personality in the Same Individual.

The Somnambulistic State is one of the puzzling problems of the Occult world. Some affirm it is purely spirit control. Others claim it is one of many discrete degrees of the immortal spirit taking on action. Many assert that multiple personality explains the phenomenon. Whatever it really is, it is worthy of the most careful consideration.

What Wonderful Occult Influence Is At Work Inducing the Somnambulic Condition?

To the Editor:—Somnambulism is a problem not yet wholly solved, as illustrated in many well-authenticated instances, as set forth in the Chicago Chronicle:

The phenomena of somnambulism, the marvelous performances of people who are asleep and yet able to go about have never been understood by scientists and their mysteries are a constant source of study to physicians and psychologists. Often a somnambulist will accomplish feats which would baffle his skill or for which he would not have the courage while awake. He will rise in the night, walk from room to room, climb out on porticos, in some cases on steep roofs, where he would not dare to venture while awake, and frequently will wander for hours through streets and fields, returning home and to bed without a knowledge of having left his room.

As to what abnormal action of the nerves occasions somnambulism doctors have been unable to determine, but for a long time they have known how to induce an artificial form of sleep-walking, which is a phase of hypnotism.

Sleep-walkers are particularly apt to be people who suffer from epilepsy and though they are insensible to pain their mental faculties are apparently quickened.

The ancients, who looked for a supernatural cause in every mystery which they could not explain, believed that sleep-walkers were possessed of a divine spirit. But modern scientists have pooh-poohed such superstitious notions, yet in somnambulism, as in catalepsy, they have advaced no compensatory theory to replace those rejected.

In all cases of somnambulism one thing has been observed, that the awakening of its victims is both difficult and fraught with danger, and in some instances it has cost the life of the afflicted.

Feat of a Clergyman.

One night, while passing along the main street in a town in Tennessee a physician was surprised to see a clergyman whom he knew pass him, clad only in a night shirt and a wide-brimmed straw hat. As the minister went by the doctor noticed that his eyes were closed, and seeing that he was a somnambulist, followed. The clergyman walked to the county courthouse, opened the gate, walked around to one side of the building, seized hold of a lightning rod and began to climb up it.

Grabbing the man by the shirt, the physician tried to pull him down, but the cloth gave way and the minister continued to climb to the cornice, and then crawled up the steep incline of the roof to the ridge pole. Seating himself on this the dominie waited a few minutes and then slid down to the bottom of the incline, catching by a slight projection at the very edge. From this he crawled up again, and repeated the performance until the doctor became alarmed, and, seizing the rope of the courthouse bell, rang for help.

The people of the town gathered around the courthouse, but no one dared to go after the clergyman for fear of awakening him and causing him to fall. For half an hour they watched his antics. At the end of this time he made his way to the lightning rod and descended to the ground, passed through the crowd and returned to his home and to bed. On being questioned the next morning, the clergyman declared that he knew nothing of his night's performance.

Takes Swim at Night.

A singular case of somnambulism occurred several years ago near Bakersville, N. C. A young man there had been in the habit of walking in his sleep from childhood. Like most somnambulists, when unmolested, nothing injurious happened to him or to others. Consequently, his wife paid no attention to him when he rose from bed and sauntered forth. But finally he began to stay away longer and longer periods and when he returned was soaking wet. When his wife asked him where he had been he could not tell, nor was he able to account for the condition of his clothes.

Thoroughly alarmed, his wife determined to follow him the next night. After leaving his home the man walked along the highway till he came to a rough, narrow trail leading to a river called the Tow. As the man advanced at a rapid pace it was only with difficulty that his wife could keep in sight, for the path led through thickets, over stones, in and out among fallen trees and along the summit of a precipitous cliff. For more than a half mile the sleeper trudged on until he came to a large poplar tree which had fallen with its topmost branches extending far out over the river.

With not the slightest hesitation he stepped on the log and walked out on it till he came to a large limb. As he reached this he got down on his hands and knees and crawled still farther till his weight bent the branches to the water. Slowly he rose, balanced himself and then dove into the river.

In horrified amazement his wife stood on the bank and watched him. Anxiously she peered through the darkness over the water and to her delight saw something moving on the surface. Nearer it came and nearer till she could discern the form of her husband and she noticed that he was swimming powerfully.

Touching the shore he crawled up on the bank, shook himself and then started back over the trail to his home.

Night after night had this man been performing this feat, which the swaying of the large tree and limb would have made almost impossible for a man who was awake to have accomplished and night after night he had come home unharmed.

Ghost Scare in Graveyard.

Years ago the little town of Hillsboro, Ark., had a ghost scare. An old chapel in a graveyard was chosen by the specter for the scene of operations. On the chapel was a steeple, and in this steeple hung a bell. Thither, between the hours of 1 and 2, in the morning, the ghost wended its way, and spoiled the sleep of the villagers by ringing the bell.

Time and again a tall figure clad in white had been seen, and venturesome men and boys had stoned the belfry while the bell was ringing, but without effect upon the apparition. Finally a meeting of the prominent citizens was held, and it was decided that they should assemble on a certain night to rout the disturber of their slumbers. But the steeple was so old that no one dared to mount the winding stairway that led to the belfry.

As they gathered on the appointed night it was noticed that one of their number had a shotgun. To the shower of stones that the assembled people hurled at the steeple the ghost paid no attention. At last, after having warned the specter that he intended to fire, the man with the gun let it blaze. But, instead of being scared, the ghost only rang the bell the harder. This was too much for the nerves of the people, and without more ado they scurried to their homes. The nightly ringing of the bell continued.

Early one morning as the village doctor was on his way to answer a sick call, he saw a figure with a bundle under his arm hastening in the direction of the chapel. Instantly the doctor gave chase, and saw it mount the rickety old belfry stairs and ring the bell.

Then the figure donned the clothes it had brought along, descended to the chapel, and proceeded on its way. But the doctor pursued, and to his amazement found that the figure stopped at the house of a well-known man, and entered it. The next morning the son of this man was accused of being the ghost, but he indignantly denied the charge, and, although the physician described the events of the night before, he persisted in asserting his innocence.

The townspeople believed the doctor, however, and that night a watch was kept on the young man. About one o'clock the watchers saw him get up, pick up the clothes he had taken off on retiring, go out of the house and walk in the direction of the chapel. The doubt settled, the youth was awakened, and, when he saw his scanty attire, consented to have a watch over him for the future.

It is a curious fact that many people who have been somnambulists have been cured by some remarkable experiences.

A young girl boarded a train at Albany, N. Y., to journey to Ripon, Can., to visit her sister. The train was made up of modern vestibuled sleeping cars.

The girl retired about 10 o'clock at night, but, to the amazement of the porter, when he stopped at the berth in the morning to call her, there was no one in it. A search of the train was quickly made, but no signs of the girl was to be seen, though all her clothes were found in her berth.

As soon as possible the conductor telegraphed the facts to the main office of the road, and quickly received a reply saying that the girl had been found near the town of St. Thomas, early in the morning, wandering about clad only in her night garments.

How the girl came to be at St. Thomas she could not tell, for she remembered nothing save that she had gone to bed and to sleep. As the train did not stop at St. Thomas, the only solution of the mystery was that she had got out of the car, opened one of the doors of the vestibule and stepped or fallen off the rapidly moving thain.

Though the girl was not injured, the suddenness of her awakening was so effective that she has never walked in her sleep since.

The state of the eyes in somnambulism varies greatly. At times they are closed, at others half closed, and even wide open. The pupils vary from being contracted to wide dilation. But almost without exception the eyes of the sleep-walkers are insensible to light.

It is a remarkable fact that somnambulists who may be deaf to the loudest noise will perceive even a whisper from some one person, with whom alone the sleeper appears to be able to hold communication.

Not infrequently men have carried to completion in their sleep tasks which they were unable to accomplish while awake.

A lawyer in Edinburg told his wife after dinner one evening that he had a very difficult law case to study out, which would occupy him half the night. For hours he wrestled with its intricacies, and finally gave it up, declaring that it was impossible for him to write his brief till morning, as the case presented some questions which he could not solve.

No sooner had he gone to bed than he fell asleep. But in a few minutes his wife was startled to see him get up and go to his desk. Taking up pencil and paper, he wrote furiously for some two hours. Then, carefully folding the papers and indorsing them, he put them away in a pigeonhole in the desk and returned to bed, sleeping soundly till late in the morning.

While eating breakfast he spoke of the case, and declared it would give him great trouble, as it involved points which it would be necessary for him to look up. His wife urged him to look through his desk, but he scoffed at the idea, as he never had a case which involved similar issues. But his wife was insistent, and finally he consented.

Almost the first paper he took up was the brief he had written while asleep the night before. As he read it his eyes opened wide with wonder and his amazement was shown by his face. The instrument proved to be a clearly reasoned, correctly phrased brief on the intricate case, with all the obscure points explained and clarified.

A young man in Albany, N. Y., awoke one night to find himself robbing the postoffice. In his sleep he had obtained a brace and bit and had bored holes through the door of the office, which released the plate glass. He had also opened the cash drawer by the same means. He was an habitual sleep-walker, and he had no recollection of what he had done.

A story of sleep-walking in which a vivid dream plays an important part is told of the son of a western railroad king.

On his way east the young man stopped off in Buffalo to inspect a vessel belonging to his father. While looking over the ship he entered the little chamber in the bow of the vessel where the anchor chain is coiled and was impressed with the smallness of the place and the cramped position in which it would force a man to stand who was sent down to superintend the paying out of the chain. After leaving the ship the youth ate a hearty dinner, boarded a train for New York and went to bed.

He remembered being lulled to sleep by the steady motion of the train and quite as plainly that when he fancied he awoke that he was in the anchor chamber of a ship. The vessel was apparently under way, though moving faster than he had ever known a ship to steam before, and a terrible storm was in progress.

He tried to go out on deck, but he could not get out of the cell-like chamber. Indeed, he was not even able to stand erect, so small was the compartment. Frantic with fright he looked about and found to his relief that there was a window in the room, evidently a deadlight, but square and unusually large. Quickly he strove to raise it, but, failing, struck it a hard blow with his fist. No sooner was this window smashed than he discovered to his surprise that there was still another glass. This he also broke. Fearing that if he tried to crawl out through the opening he would cut himself, he carefully picked out each piece of glass from the window sash.

But with the breaking of the window a dash of rain struck his face and he fancied the ship was sinking. Frantically he thrust out his head and arms and felt for the anchor chain, that he might draw himself up to the deck. But the chain was nowhere to be found. Wonderingly he pulled himself half out of the window and reached up. With a feeling of joy he found that he could touch the deck, but this pleasure instantly turned to dismay when he discovered that it was smooth and curving and offered no projection by which he might pull himself up.

Not withing to drown, he crawled back into the chamber. He was soaking wet, but whether from water or blood he could not tell. Convinced that he must either escape from the chamber or be drowned, he tried to think of some way by which he could reach the deck.

As he lay panting and frightened he accidentally reached out in the direction opposite to the deadlight and to his surprise touched a swaying curtain. And the next moment he was sprawling in the aisle of a sleeping car, going through all the agony of an awakening somnambulist.

Girl Married While Asleep.

Strange as the acts of sleepwalkers always are, the case of a young woman who was actually married when in the somnambulistic state is probably the most unusual.

This young woman was loved by a likely young fellow, but without money or prospects. Because of his poverty the father and mother of the girl objected to the marriage and forbade him the house. To their surprise their daughter took this action very quietly and they were also surprised at the sudden burst of affection the girl showed for an aunt who lived in another part of the city. Indeed, so fond of the aunt did their daughter become that she went to see her three or four times every week, and always in the evening. If the parents had followed their daughter they would have discovered that the reason for this sudden show of affection was the fact that she met her lover at the aunt's house. For the aunt liked the young fellow and was perfectly willing her house should be used as a trysting place.

On their way home from a party one night the young man urged the girl to marry him at once, no matter what her father and mother said. Girl-like, she objected, saying that while her aunt was friendly and would allow them to meet at her house she would never connive at their marriage without the consent of the parents. There was only one way out of the difficulty and that was to elope.

"Let's elope, then," declared the young man. "I'm sick and tired of deceiving your father and mother. If they won't forgive us after we are married, all right; they can't keep us apart."

He then unfolded a plan for their marriage that very night, announcing that he had proceeded to the extent of asking a minister to perform the ceremony, that the minister had consented and was even then awaiting their appearance. The girl hesitated and finally begged for a day to consider the matter.

After leaving his sweetheart the young man called on the minister, and about an hour later returned to his home. Just as he put the key of the door into the keyhole he saw some one coming down the street. The figure looked familiar, and as it came under the gaslight she saw it was his sweetheart. Thinking perhaps she had changed her mind, he rushed out to greet her.

But for a young woman who was about to elope she seemed singularly quiet. To his eager question if she was ready to be married that night she returned a perfunctory affirmative, but too overjoyed to notice her manner, the young man led her to the minister.

Quickly the ceremony was performed, and the couple left the minister's house. When the husband offered the marriage certificate to his bride she did not seem to care for it, and he put it in his pocket. As they walked along the street she suggested that he take her to her father's house for the night, and agreed to meet him at her aunt's the next evening to arrange for the announcement of their marriage.

At their meeting the following evening the ardor of the young man surprised the girl, but when he made mention of the marriage she drew back in alarm, declaring that she did not understand.

Although she had dreamed the night before that they had been married, she said, she had come to ask his consent to a longer delay, that she might consider the proposed step more fully.

The groom was greatly surprised, but he settled the question by producing the marriage certificate, signed by the clergyman and properly witnessed. This was convincing proof, even to the girl, and, after pondering for a moment, she confessed to her husband that she was a confirmed sleep-walker, a fact of which he had been ignorant.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Having read of the success of some of your readers selling Dish-washers, I have tried the work with wonderful success. I have not made less than $9.00 any day for the last six months. The Mound City Dish-washer gives good satisfaction and every family wants one. A lady can wash and dry the dishes without removing her gloves and can do the work in two minutes. I got my sample machine from the Mound City Dish-Washing Co., of St. Louis, Mo. I used it to take orders and sold 12 Dish-washers the first day. The Mound City Dish-Washer Co. 3665 A R LaClede ave., will start you. Write them for particulars. Ladies can do as well as men.

A DREAM OF MURDER.

Inculcating the Important Fact That Some One in Spirit Life Knew of the Contemplated Murder and Induced the Vision, the Wife Seeing the Dark Figure of a Man Following His Victim.

Omaha, Neb., Sept. 7.—A mystery that may never be solved surrounds the recent death of Isaac R. Andrews, a leading member of the Omaha bar, whose dead body was found after a four days' search in the Platte river, twenty miles from his home.

Notwithstanding that the coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental drowning, Mrs. Andrews holds tenaciously to the belief that her husband met with foul play, declaring that she had a premonition in her sleep the night before he disappeared that harm was coming to him.

Besides six credible witnesses have asserted that they saw Andrews alive twenty-four hours or longer after he is supposed to have fallen into the river and not one of them will admit that he could have been mistaken.

Mr. Andrews was a half owner of a gravel pit near the banks of the Platte river at Cedar Creek, in this state. When the August payday came around Mr. Andrews, as was his wont, went down to Cedar Creek with his checkbook to pay off the men. Having disposed of his business and after eating a light supper at the little cabin at the pit, he put on his hunting attire, which he always kept at the cabin, and started off along the river bank to hunt muskrats.

That he did not return to the cabin that night did not surprise the old caretaker, William Bush, because Mr. Andrews had frequently before started off on similar expeditions and wandered off by himself into the woods with his gun and spent the night at the farm house of a family named Davis, about half a mile distant. The next morning, however, when it was learned that Mr. Andrews had not been at the Davis house, Mr. Bush became alarmed. Bloodhounds were brought from Plattsmouth, the county seat, fifteen miles distant, and a systematic search was commenced. Farmers and a number of Omaha friends lent their assistance, and the entire countryside was scoured, but to no avail.

Then reports came that the missing man had been seen at several places. Three men who knew him well talked with him twenty-four hours after his disappearance in the railway station at Ashland, twelve miles from where he was last seen. Others, including an attorney whose office adjoins Mr. Andrews' were equally certain they saw him in Omaha the following morning, and one of these walked with him on the street for several blocks.

After two more days of search the body was found in the Platte river, east of Cedar creek, lodged on a bunch of brush in the stream. It was seen first by John Davis, at whose home it was thought Mr. Andrews spent the first night after his disappearance. The water was only about four feet deep at this point, which was about a quarter of a mile distant from the cabin at the gravel pit. The body was in a badly decomposed condition, indicating that it had been in the water for several days. The gold watch in Mr. Andrews' pocket had stopped at 7:10.

It was Friday night when he disappeared, and Tuesday night when the body was found. The only mark on the body was a little scar on the back of his neck, probably made during his struggle in the water. His diamond ring was on his finger and there was a little money in his pocket. When taken from the water the body was clothed in the hunting garments, consisting of a blue checked negligee shirt, blue overalls and old shoes, which he had donned at the cabin, whereas all witnesses who saw him at Ashland and in Omaha declare he was wearing ordinary business clothes.

Attorney Brome, a former law partner of Mr. Andrews, who took an active part in the search for the missing man, was present at the inquest and afterward expressed himself as entirely satisfied with the verdict of the jury. He said: "It is my opinion that Mr. Andrews was walking along the river bank at a point near where the body was found, and the river, which was two feet higher Friday than it was on Tuesday, had so undermined the bank that the weight of his body caved in the bank and he fell into deep water. He was not an expert swimmer, and incumbered with his clothes, he was drowned where he fell into the water."

Other friends also express similar satisfaction with the verdict of the jury, but there are those who think differently. Among these is Frank W. Coleman, bailiff of the Supreme Court at Lincoln, before which Mr. Andrews had frequently pleaded. Mr. Coleman is one of those who saw and talked with Mr. Andrews at the Ashland railway station on the evening of the day following his disappearance. Mr. Coleman was on his way to Omaha on the regular passenger train due to leave Ashland at 6:44 p. m.

"When the train pulled into Ashland," Mr. Coleman said, "Mr. Andrews was standing on the platform. I saw him from the car window and went out on the platform to talk with him. Mr. Andrews asked me what the supreme court was doing and then followed a few commonplaces in regard to the weather and trivial things. I left Mr. Andrews still standing on the platform when I climbed back on to the train."

Professor Beatty of the Cotner university at Lincoln, also spoke with Mr. Andrews while the train was waiting at Ashland, and E. H. Stevens, a Lincoln contractor, who had met Mr. Andrews a few days before and negotiated with him for the purchase of some of the gravel from his pit for use on a building which Mr. Stevens was erecting at Ashland, also saw him on the station platform talking with Mr. Coleman.

Early the following morning, Sunday, three Omaha men declare positively they saw the missing man in Omaha. One of these is F. W. Fitch deputy county attorney, whose office in the New York Life building is next door to the suite occupied by Mr. Andrews. Mr. Fitch, who naturally knew him intimately, affirms that he saw Mr. Andrews on the rear platform of a street car going up town from the depot about 7 o'clock on Sunday morning. Mr. Fitch saluted and Mr. Andrews in response waved his hand and his cane as the car passed by. Theodore H. Johnson, manager of a photographic supply house, also avers that he saw Andrews on Sunday morning on Sixteenth street shortly after 7 o'clock, which is in entire accord with Mr. Fitch's statement, because the car on which Mr. Fitch saw him was headed in the direction of Sixteenth street. John S. Dirgman, an ex-constable, also testifies that he walked north on Sixteenth street with Mr. Andrews for several blocks about the same hour.

To all of these witnesses Mr. Andrews appeared to be his usual self. In the matter of identification it is well nigh impossible for any of them to have been mistaken, because Mr. Andrews was a man of striking personality. On account of a slight lameness in his left ankle he always carried a cane, on which he placed considerable reliance when he walked. He had a large head, covered with a profusion of hair of reddish color, and wore a moustache which was streaked with gray.

Andrews was the owner of a beautiful home, built about two years ago, and he was devoted to his wife and only son, a boy of 16, just graduated from the Omaha high school, and it is considered passing strange that if he came to Omaha on the Sunday morning that he did not go directly home. The theory has been advanced that he might have been affected by the heat and although appearing perfectly rational he may have been unconscious of his movements. This would explain why he did not go home and why his intimate friends did not know he was in town. It is supposed that he left Omaha Sunday morning and returned to Cedar Creek.

Mrs. Mary Girard Andrews, wife of the unfortunate man, is president of the Omaha Women's club and a leader in sociological and philanthropoc work in in the city. Their home life had always been the happiest. Mrs. Andrews declared from the outset that the theory of suicide was absurd, as her husband had absolutely no reason to be despondent. She also scouted the idea that he had met with an accident. Her statement, made after the finding of the body, is as follows:

"One sometimes has those subtle intimations which defy analysis and can not be submitted to the scrutiny of reason. It was such an intimation which alarmed me in my sleep Friday evening. I seemed to see my husband followed by the dark figure of a man. I was deeply alarmed, and when I awake I was trembling. And yet at the time I had no knowledge that anything was wrong. The next morning I received word that he had disappeared.

"From the first I suspected that he had met with foul play. I still believe so. The strange thing is that in my dream I saw him going toward the river, being followed along the railroad track by a man. This notion is contrary to what we were told at the cabin near Cedar Creek. We were told that he started off with his gun in the opposite direction, whereas the body was found at a spot in the direction in which I had dreamed he was headed.

"I refuse to believe that the dream, which was so undeniably real to me at the time and was borne out by the facts in so many particulars, should have misled me with reference to the man following my husband toward the river's brink. The picture of that man is so vividly impressed on my mind that if I should ever meet him face to face I could not fail to recognize him."

A GRAVEYARD POEM.

Within a country graveyard small,
Where faded rose leaves gently fall,
There lies a low and narrow mound,
Where children softly gather 'round,
And strangers trace the well-worn path,
To read this lovely epitaph:

"Below the body of a child we lay,
Of whom her playmates often say,—
'A tender girl to heart and memory dear,
'Twas easier to be good when she was here.'"

I can not tell how long has been her rest,
Since first the rose leaves fell upon her breast,
Nor paint the picture of her form and face,
Nor tell the name of this sweet child of grace;
I only read this witness quaint and queer:
"'Twas easier to be good when she was here."

I kneel by this green grave, this prayer upon my lip,
"Grant me this seal of Christ's discipleship,
I shall be happy if but a child shall whisper o'er my bier:
'"Twas easier to be good when she was here.'"

I can afford to rest without a name,
Unknown to all but household fame,
If for one soul the way was made less drear,
And easier to be good when I was here.

NEW ERA CAMP, OREGON.

Closing of a Successful Camp-Meeting.

The First Spiritual Religious Association of Clackamas County, Oregon, on the sixth day of August, 1905, closed one of the most successful and beneficial camp-meetings ever held on its grounds, with G. C. Love of Portland, as president.

We had with us during the camp-meeting many of the most prominent workers as speakers and mediums from different states of the Union. Harrison D. Barrett was with us for three weeks and was loved and esteemed by all. The association was highly honored by having the presence of the president of the N. S. A. on its list of speakers as a worker for the cause. He was always eloquent, earnest and forceful in his arguments for truth, sincere and willing—always responding to the call, and with a magnetic personality that made him many friends, causing us to love him more and more as the days passed by, and we earnestly hope that circumstances and conditions will make it possible to have him with us again on a future occasion.

We also had with us as a camp worker, for the season, Brother Harry J. Moore of Rochester, Ind., who came to us well recommended and who by his many fine discourses won for himself a host of friends. He, too, is worthy of a place, as a public worker, in our future camp work.

Mrs. Eva McCoy, the well-known medium was with us on the list of workers and was fully appreciated and loved for herself as well as the work done through her mediumship and personality by the spirit world.

She was always pleasant and kind, and sincerely honest in her demonstrations.

Mrs. Ladd Finnican of Portland, Ore., another medium employed by the board of officers, was exceptionally fine in her line of work, and also made for herself a standing in the estimation of the people that others might envy.

Dr. Espanto of St. Louis, Mo., known as the Indian medium, gave many fine tests and found many friends in the far West who regretted his departure from our midst. Mrs. Espanto, his wife, gave us many good talks and we found her lady-like, refined and willing at all times to assist in any and all ways in making the camp a successful one.

Mrs. Lapworth of Seattle, Wash., also found her way to our warmest praise and friendship, she being very successful in preaching and demonstrating the truth of Spiritualism.

We had with us Mrs. Elizabeth Craig of Texas, Mrs. Jackson of New York. From Portland, Ore., we had Mrs. C. Cornelius, Mrs. Ella York, Mrs. Mabel Wilson, Mrs. Siep, Mrs. Armstrong, Mrs. Florence White, E. De Yongh, together with C. H. Piggott, president of Ministers and Mediums Protective Association of Portland, Ore.

Visitors came to us from nineteen different states of the Union and Canada. The meeting financially was also a success, leaving us money in the treasury at the close of the session.

At the annual business meeting, officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, G. C. Love of Portland, Ore.; vice-president, Benj. F. Atherton of Portland, Ore.; secretary, Lidie Q. Irwin, Barlow, Ore.; treasurer, John Burgoyne, New Era, Ore., and all possible will be done to make the camp-meeting of 1906 better if possible, than the one just closed.

For earnestness, energy and push will be the controlling spirits of each one of the board during their term of office.

A STORY OF A MANUSCRIPT.

And How It Was "Pirated" in This Country.

I have a story to tell which will illustrate the difficulties with which writers of spiritistic literature have to meet. For years past, a young lady, working in the seclusion of an English village, had qualified herself in psychic gifts sufficiently to become an amanuensis of an advanced band of spirits who dictated to her a series of romances, recounting their earth lives and subsequent experiences in the spirit world. Her difficulty was, how she could give the work to the world.

Publishers are hard to find who will undertake the publication of our literature at their own expense; the authoress was poor and inexperienced in business matters. At last a generous lady came forward and helped her to publish one of the smallest of these tales under the title of "A Wanderer in Spirit Lands," in an edition of some 1,000 copies, the sale of which would about cover expenses. Some five years ago I had the honor of an introduction to this authoress. She consulted me as to the literary value of another story in MS., entitled "Ahrinziman," purporting to be written by an ancient Persian who, born in the royal harem, had been sent away as a baby to a distant temple in order to escape the jealousy of the Queen. There he was brought up, like a Samuel, as a psychic in a temple. The methods and mistakes of old-time psychic training are fully set forth. Ignorant of his royal birth, and tiring of the temple discipline, he ran away as a youth and fell among a tribe of nomad brigands. Years of a life of intense action pass, full of romantic episodes; but again tiring of this life, he runs away to a distant city where he becomes the servant of one who ostensibly was a physician but really an occultist and magician. This master discovers by occult means the secret of the boy's birth and reveals to him, or rather opens his clairvoyant eyes to, scenes in his past and scenes in his future, which promise the youth one day to be seated on the throne. The lad's spirit mother rescues him from the hands of this magician and the rest of the story shows, in a series of exciting adventures, how these visions fulfilled themselves. Then comes a second part of the story. All the dramatis personae are transferred to the spirit world and we are shown how action and reaction continue from one life into the other. I found the whole written in a true Eastern mode of story-telling and as full of interest and instruction in psychic matters as any book yet published. As purchasers of this kind of literature are much more numerous in the States of America, I advised her to find a publisher there so as to secure the copyright there, but all her efforts to do so have been unavailing. My advice has been justified by her experiences with her book already published in this country. While "A Wanderer in Spirit Lands" was receiving high encomiums, and interesting thousands of readers in our Alliance library, the sale of the small edition dribbled on year by year in small installments. Meanwhile an enterprising pirate publisher started an edition on his own account in the States, the sale of which, there is good reason to believe, has already reached 17,000 copies.

Of course, not one penny of the profits of this sale has come to the pockets of our poor authoress, who, all this while, has had to earn a hard living by hours of uncongenial manual work, and finally has been obliged to emigrate to the States in order to find more regular employment. There, luckily, among the Wisconsin State Spiritualistic Association, she has at last found some energetic helpers and friends who are issuing circulars inviting admirers of the other book and all interested in spreading spiritual knowledge, to subscribe for a first edition of this new work. Publishers in America, it appears, are willing enough to publish an English approved story at their own risk if they can get the whole profits by piracy, but refuse to do so when they have to share profits. Hence the necessity for subscribers. The book is to be published under the title, "The Story of Ahrinziman," at 75 cents a copy, and to be sold in England at 3s. 6d. a copy. Are not some of us ready to help her also in this country? If anyone desires to do so, a postal order for 3s. 6d., with name and address, should be sent to Nurse E. Parker, 16, Wandle-road, Croydon, who has kindly undertaken to transact all the necessary correspondence and to forward the subscriptions to the American collector, the Rev. Nellie K. Baker, Portage, Wis., who will send circulars with full particulars of the book to anyone applying for the information.—Frederic Thurstan, in Light, London.

The above needs an explanation. We are the one charged with "pirating" the book, "A Wanderer in Spirit Lands," when in fact we received full permission of the author to publish it in this country where it had no sale whatever. Although we have distributed thousands of copies of the book, we have made no money thereon; on the contrary we have lost a few cents on each copy sent out to our subscribers, aggregating several hundred dollars. We are well acquainted with the author, Anita Silvani, and she has enjoyed the hospitality of our home for several months.

The fact is the works published in England have little or no sale in this country. In the future we propose to publish any book we please that appears in England, and is not published simultaneously in this country, and give the same away to our readers, we receiving NO PROFIT WHATEVER ON THE SAME. Anyone in England who desires to publish there any one of our Premium Books, is at full liberty to do so. In fact we would be delighted to have them do that very thing.

Deeds of Darkness Disclosed

This work devotes special attention to Auricular Confession and its relations to sacerdotal celibacy, convents, monasteries, morality and civil and religious liberty. It is intended to be an embodiment of facts and documentary evidence of the pernicious influence of the confessional; a trenchant showing up of Romanism, based upon standard Catholic authorities; an eye-opener concerning the methods and spirit, the moral turpitude and evil works of Romanism. Cloth, 75 cents.

A SYMPOSIUM.

Suggested by Dr. Alex. Caird, of Lynn, Mass.

Massachusetts steps to the front and demands a hearing. Alex. Caird, M. D., an influential Spiritualist, suggests a Symposium on an exceedingly important subject. It will be inaugurated in his special honor as a leading and highly respected Spiritualist of the Old Bay State, one who is constantly working for the spread of the Truth as manifested in Spirit Return. It will prove especially interesting, suggestive and valuable to every reflective mind.

The Important Question.

What Does Spiritualism Teach That Spiritualists Believe in Common?

POINTS OF AGREEMENT.

What Does Spiritualism Teach that Spiritualists Believe in Common?

The foregoing question by our esteemed friend, Dr. Caird, merits consideration and meditation. I thank you for your kindly invitation to me to consider the subject in your symposium.

It is true as Brother Caird claims, that there is a notable difference of opinion among Spiritualists upon the subjects of importance, because of similar differences on the same subjects among communicating spirits, and it is rather difficult for the novice to determine the truth concerning them.

As for myself, I am not at all concerned whether reincarnation is a fact or not—while I have my personal opinion on this and other subjects on which spirits and mortals differ, I cannot see that any absolute proof for or against the theory of reincarnation can be given, and hence affirmation or denial does not trouble me. Personally, I can admit that the bible contains many grand spiritual truths and instances of spirit manifestation, but I am willing to concede the privilege to others of discarding the book entirely if they so desire.

The subject of Obsession I consider important because it deals with everyday affairs and experiences, and if it is true that many human beings are subjected to the baleful influence of mischievous creatures, psychological or otherwise, on both sides of life, it is important for it to be known, that remedial agencies may be employed. I think that nine-tenths of our experienced Spiritualists believe, with reason, that human beings who are mischievous or malicious on earth and who have not advanced from such unlovely mental states, tarry for a period in the earth's atmosphere and sometimes torment sensitive mortals; such spirits need teachers from the higher spheres and helpers on earth, that they may be taught and helped how to redeem themselves and rise to higher states af aspiration and experience. Certainly, it nine-tenths of our Spiritualists have an intelligent idea of this subject and are of similar opinion, that can be properly called a common ground of belief.

The basis of belief and knowledge of Spiritualism, common ground on which Spiritualists unite, is the fact, well proven, and established, of Immortality for mankind, the continuance of the mental and spiritual qualities of the race after death, reunion with friends beyond, and inteligent communication between the denizens of earth and of the spirit world. Probably all Spiritualists acknowledge that knowledge as the corner-stone of their Spiritualism.

I believe also that we will find very few in the ranks who deny the almost universal teachings of returning spirits, that we create for ourselves the garments, homes and surroundings we shall find for our use on the spirit side, or, in a word, that "as we sow, we shall reap." If we live right, as far as we possibly can, be faithful in the discharge of duty according to our understanding, defraud no one and follow the "Golden Rule," we shall naturally build a comely spirit body, and gravitate at death, to the pleasing conditions, environments and associations that we have become fitted for. On the other hand, if we live selfishly we mar the spirit form, and supply such crude, earthy, material for our spirit homes, we shall naturally hold fast to unlovely and earthy things, states and environments.

Very few "Spiritualists" will claim that one can go through this life regardless of the rights of others, selfishly grasping, crowding and oppressing, and earn a home of beauty and condition of happiness on high.

Spiritualism teaches that we earn what we receive and that we only get what we deserve; but it also teaches Progress beyond the grave, and all unite on this ground that none are wholly lost; but that all can rise to higher states by self effort; that one can earn happiness in spirit life and atone for misdeeds by earnest labor and contrition.

It seems to me, Mr. Editor, that if Spiritualists will cultivate the HARMONIAL SPIRIT, and agree to disagree upon minor points and subjects, coming together in the beauty of brotherly love for the dissemination of the fundamental facts and teachings of Spiritualism, they will find ample ground for their common footing and plenty of Truth for their acceptance, on which the grandest Temple of a Spiritual Philosophy can be built that the world has ever known.

MARY T. LONGLEY.

Washington, D. C.

TWO BASIC PROPOSITIONS.

What Does Spiritualism Teach That Spiritualists Believe in Common?

Being far from the "city full," in the forest wild, when the above question reached me: and past the time when answer should have been given; yet I trust the kindness of the editor will give this an insertion in The Progressive Thinker.

There are two basic propositions which Spiritualism teaches, and all Spiritualists believe them in common.

1. The first proposition is, that the human spirit survives the death of the physical body, and under favorable conditions manifests itself to those still living in the flesh. The favorable conditions consist mainly of a certain physiological and psychological make-up of some persons, constituting what is termed mediumship.

2. The second proposition is, that this mediumship and the manifestations through it are purely natural—are the product of natural forces acting in accordance with natural laws. I have never known any Spiritualist disputing these two propositions, and the disagreements among them are the result of a stupid ignorance of the immutable laws of logical reasoning. Hence, it is a common occurrence to find persons affirming these two propositions and at the same time submitting positions directly antagonistic thereto. As the inherent forces of nature, used by natural beings—spirit men and women—are the only ones involved in spirit manifestations, it follows logically that supernaturalism—miraculism are totally excluded from Spiritualism. As it is pure naturalism, the scientific method is the only one it can employ in the discovery and elucidation of truth. Its philosophy will be the application of the principles revealed by science to the progress and betterment of humanity.

Careful reflection will reveal the reason why among PROFESSED Spiritualists there is such a vast amount of absurd and monstrous teachings. We are the recipients of ages of hereditary superstitions, the most potent of which is supernaturalism. The tyro in spirit manifestations cannot at once free himself from his old notion of miracle. And he is so ignorant of the imperfections of mediumship that he swallows all the apparent spirit assertions as absolute truth. He has not learned the naturalness of the process, and hence, the possibility of mistake. And, until the supreme truth, that nature in energy and action sums up the whole of Spiritualism, is comprehended, mistake, false reasoning and contention will be the characteristic of the Modern Spiritist movement.

In concluding this brief statement, I submit that every logical mind will see at a glance that the two basic propositions constitute the logical premises, from which the broad conclusion follows, to-wit: First, Spiritualism is all inclusive. It is the Science of Man, who embodies in their highest and finest form all the energies of nature. Hence, as the microcosm, he is the exponent of all those energies constituting the macrocosm.

Dr. Caird will find here that Spiritualism includes all that he would like to see taught on the Spiritualistic rostrum, now largely given over to mere words.

J. S. LOVELAND.

WHY IS IT?

Let Justice Be Given to Mediums as Well as Speakers.

To the Editor:—While glancing over the general survey of The Progressive Thinker, No. 824, my attention was drawn to an article in the third column from the pen of Mrs. Charles J. Barnes of Warsaw, Ind., a portion of which I will quote. Mrs. Barnes says: "We have been wondering why the secretaries of the different camps never mention the mediums, only the speakers are spoken of. No one likes a good inspirational speaker better than I do, but as the demonstration of spirit return is the basic principle of our philosophy, why not mention it, too, that is when you know it is honest? I have watched the papers closely all summer and have found but little or no mention of mediums for phenomenal phases. Why is it?"

I, too, have noted this seeming neglect on the part of camp correspondents, and would like to ask these correspondents through The Progressive Thinker, why this neglect. Were there no mediums for the phenomenal phases upon your camp grounds? There certainly were at some of the camps, viz., Lily Dale, Chesterfield, Clinton and Lake Brady camps, mediums as well who are true and tried and through whose mediumship hundreds have been converted through spirit return, communion and the proof of continuity of life. The philosophy is all right, and is serving the purpose for which it was intended but it alone does not suffice. Without the phenomena, what proof have we, most of us, that our loved ones, the so-called dead, still live, can return and under favorable conditions can and do commune with us.

Let us have both the philosophy and the phenomena, and we who have had absolute proof, through the phenomena, of the continuity of life, let us hide not our light and knowledge under a bushel, but, instead make this grand truth known to the world through the medium of the press and otherwise. Encourage, help and protect all worthy mediums, it matters not what phase of mediumship they possess, send out to them your best thought and throw your patronage to them. Upon the other hand, shun those who persist in dishonesty, trickery, etc., whether it be a medium for the phenomena or a speaker or test medium with a filed-away-for-future-use stock of tests.

The Bible as a Moral Guide.

The Views of Robert G. Ingersoll.

You ask me what I would "substitute for the Bible as a moral guide."

I know that many people regard the bible as the only moral guide and believe that in that book only can be found the true and perfect standard of morality.

There are many good precepts, many wise sayings, and many good regulations and laws in the bible, and these are mingled with bad precepts, with foolish sayings, with absurd rules and cruel laws.

But we must remember that the bible is a collection of many books written centuries apart, and that in part represents the growth and tells in part the history of a people. We must also remember that the writers treat of many subjects. Many of these writers have nothing to say about right or wrong, about vice or virtue.

The book of Genesis has nothing about morality. There is not a line in it calculated to shed light on the path of conduct. No one can call that book a moral guide. It is made up of myth and miracle, of tradition and legend.

In Exodus we have an account of the manner in which Jehovah delivered the Jews from Egyptian bondage.

We now know that the Jews were never enslaved by the Egyptians; that the entire story is a fiction. We know this, because there is not found in Hebrew a word of Egyptian origin. This being so, we know that the Hebrews and Egyptians could not have lived together for hundreds of years.

Certainly Exodus was not written to teach morality. In that book you cannot find one word against human slavery: As a matter of fact, Jehovah was a believer in that institution.

The killing of cattle with disease and hail, the murder of the first born, so that in every house there was death; because the King refused to let the Hebrews go, certainly was not moral; it was fiendish. The writer of that book regarded all the people of Egypt, their children, their flocks and herds as the property of Pharaoh, and these people and their cattle were killed, not because they had done anything wrong, but simply for the purpose of punishing the King. Is it possible to get any morality out of this history?

All the laws found in Exodus, including the Ten Commandments, so far as they are really good and sensible; were at that time in force among all the peoples of the world.

Murder is, and always was, a crime, and always will be, as long as a majority of people object to being murdered.

Industry always has been and always will be the enemy of larceny.

The nature of man is such that he admires the teller of truth and despises the liar. Among all tribes, among all people, truth telling, has been considered a virtue and false swearing or false speaking a vice.

The love of parents for children is natural, and this love is found among all the animals that live. So the love of children for parents is natural, and was not and can not be created by law. Love does not spring from a sense of duty, nor does it bow in obedience to commands.

So men and women are not virtuous because of anything in books or creeds.

All the Ten Commandments that are good were old, were the result of experience. The Commandments that were original with Jehovah were foolish.

The worship of "any other God" could not have been worse than the worship of Jehovah, and nothing could have been more absurd than the sacredness of the Sabbath.

If Commandments had been given against slavery and polygamy, against wars of invasion and extermination, against religious persecution in all its forms, so that the world could be free, so that the brain might be developed and the heart civilized, then we might with propriety, call such Commandments a moral guide.

Before we can truthfully say that the Ten Commandments constitute a moral guide, we must add and subtract. We must throw away some and write others in their places.

The Commandments that have a known application here, in this world, and treat of human obligations are good, the others have no basis in fact, or experience.

Many of the regulations found in Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy, are good. Many are absurd and cruel.

The entire ceremonial of worship is insane.

Most of the punishments for violations of laws are unphilosophic and brutal. The fact is that the Pentateuch upholds nearly all crimes, and to call it a moral guide is as absurd as to say that it is merciful or true.

Nothing of a moral nature can be found in Joshua or Judges. These books are filled with crimes, with massacres and murders. They are about the same as the tribal history of the Apache Indians.

The story of Ruth is not particularly moral.

In first and second Samuel there is not one word calculated to develop the brain or conscience.

Jehovah murdered 70,000 Jews because David took a census of the people. David, according to the account, was the guilty one, but only the innocent were killed.

In the first and second Kings can be found nothing of ethical value. All the kings who refused to obey the priests were denounced, and all the crowned wretches who assisted the priests were declared to be favorites of Jehovah. In these books there cannot be found one word in favor of liberty.

There are some good Psalms, and there are some that are infamous. Most of the Psalms are selfish. Many of them are passionate appeals for revenge.

The story of Job shocks the heart of every good man. In this book there is some poetry, some pathos, and some philosophy, but the story of this drama called Job, is heartless to the last degree. The children of Job are murdered to settle a little wager between God and the devil. Afterwards, Job having remained firm, other children are given in the place of the murdered ones. Nothing, however, is done for the children who were murdered.

The book of Esther is utterly absurd, and the only redeeming feature of the book is that the name of Jehovah is not mentioned.

I like the song of King Solomon, because it tells of human love, and that is something I understand. That book in my judgment is worth all the ones that go before it, and it is a far more moral guide.

There are some wise and merciful proverbs. Some are selfish and some are flat and commonplace.

I like the book of Ecclesiastes because there you find some sense, some poetry, and some philosophy. Take away the interpolations and it is a good book.

Of course there is nothing in Nehemiah or Ezra to make men better, nothing in Jeremiah or Lamentations calculated to lessen vice, and only a few passages in Isaiah that can be used in a good cause.

In Ezekial and Daniel we find only ravings of the insane.

In some of the minor prophets there is now and then a good verse, now and then an elevated thought.

You can, by selecting passages from different books, make a very good creed and by selecting passages from different books you can make a very bad creed.

The trouble is that the spirit of the Old Testament, its disposition, its temperament is bad, selfish and cruel. The most fiendish things are commanded, commended and applauded.

The stories that are told of Joseph, of Elisha, of Daniel and Gideon, and of many others, are hideous, hellish.

On the whole, the Old Testament cannot be considered a moral guide.

Jehovah was not a moral God. He had all the vices, and he lacked all the virtues. He generally carried out his threats, but he never faithfully kept a promise.

At the same time we must remember that the Old Testament is a natural production, that it was written by savages who were slowly crawling toward the light. We must give the credit for the noble things they said, and we must be charitable enough to excuse their faults and even their crimes.

I know that many Christians regard the Old Testament as the foundation and the New as the superstructure, and while many admit that there are faults and mistakes in the Old Testament, they insist that the New is the flower and perfect fruit.

I admit that there are many good things in the New Testament, and if we take from that book the dogmas of eternal pain, of infinite revenge, of the atonement, of human sacrifice, of the necessity of shedding blood, if we throw away the doctrine of non-resistance, of loving enemies, the idea that prosperity is the result of wickedness, that poverty is the preparation for Paradise, if we throw all of these away and take the good, sensible passages, applicable to conduct, then we can make a fairly good moral guide—narrow, but moral.

Of course many important things would be left out. You would have nothing about human rights, nothing in favor of the family, nothing for education, nothing for investigation, for thought and reason, but still you would have a fairly good moral guide.

On the other hand, if you would take the foolish passages, the extreme ones, you could make a creed that would satisfy an insane asylum.

If you take the cruel passages, the verses that inculcate eternal hatred, verses that writhe and hiss like serpents, you could make a creed that would shock the heart of a hyena.

It may be that no book contains better passages than the New Testament, but certainly no book contains worse.

Below the blossom of love you find the thorn of hatred, on the lips that kiss you find the poison of the cobra.

The bible is not a moral guide.

Any man who follows faithfully all its teachings is an enemy of society and will probably end his days in prison or an asylum.

What is morality?

In this world we need certain things. We have many wants! We are exposed to many dangers. We need food, fuel, raiment and shelter, and besides these wants there is what may be called the hunger of the mind.

We are conditioned beings, and happiness depends upon conditions. There are certain things that diminish, certain things that increase, well-being. There are certain things that destroy and there are others that preserve.

Happiness, including its highest forms, is after all the only good, and everything, the result of which is to produce or secure happiness, is good, that is to say, moral. Everything that destroys or diminishes well-being is bad, that is to say, immoral. In other words, all that is good is moral, and all that is bad is immoral.

What then is, or can be called, a moral guide? The shortest possible answer is one word: Intelligence.

We want the experience of mankind, the true story of the race. We want the history of intellectual development, of the growth of the ethical, of the idea of justice, of conscience, of charity, of self-denial. We want to know the paths and the roads that have been traveled by the human mind.

These facts in general, these histories in outline, the results reached, the conclusions formed, the principles evolved, taken together, would form the best conceivable moral guide.

We cannot depend on what are called "inspired books" or the religions of the world. These religions are based on the supernatural, and according to them we are under obligation to worship and obey some supernatural being or beings. All these religions are inconsistent with intellectual liberty. They are the enemies of thought, of investigation, of mental honesty. They destroy the manliness of man. They promise eternal rewards for belief, for credulity, for what they call faith.

This is not only absurd, but it is immoral.

These religions teach the slave virtues. They make inanimate things holy, and falsehoods sacred. They create artificial crimes. To eat meat on Friday, to enjoy yourself on Sunday, to eat on fast days, to be happy in Lent, to dispute a priest, to ask for evidence, to deny any creed, to express your sincere thought, all these acts are sins, crimes against some god. To give your honest opinion about Jehovah, Mohammed or Christ is far worse than to maliciously slander your neighbor. To question or doubt miracles is far worse than to deny known facts. Only the obedient, the credulous, the cringers, the kneelers, the meek, the unquestioning, the true believers, are regarded as moral, as virtuous. It is not enough to be honest, generous and useful, not enough to be governed by evidence, by facts. In addition to this, you must believe. These things are the foes of morality. They subvert all natural conceptions of virtue.

All "inspired books," teaching that what the supernatural commands is right, and right because commanded, and that what the supernatural prohibits is wrong, and wrong because prohibited, are absurdly unphilosophic.

And all "inspired books," teaching that only those who obey the commands of the supernatural are, or can be, truly virtuous, and that unquestioning faith will be rewarded with eternal joy, are grossly immoral.

Again I say: Intelligence is the only moral guide.

Some Phases of Devil-ism.

Independent Holiness People at a Revival—Preacher Realistic by Means of Lighted Candle and Tin Can.

Devilism we may define as a belief in the existence and power of a being called the Devil. In other words it is belief in old-fashioned orthodox idea as embodied in sermons, tracts and creeds of a semi-ubiquitous personage, the embodiment and instigator of all evil.

The results of devilism may be studied from various standpoints, but for our present purpose we offer the following two exemplifications. What would be said of Spiritualists acting in a manner approaching these performances, even by these Holiness people themselves, may be easily surmised. We quote from the New York Sun an account of the exercises, in which a strong hypnotic influence is plainly discernible.

JAS C. UNDERHILL.

Hammond, Ind.

Macon, Mo.—A curly-headed young fellow in his shirt sleeves walking up and down a cheap board platform conducted one of the most remarkable revival meetings the other night that have ever occurred in this vicinity. The occasion was the seventeenth annual session of the Independent Holiness people of Missouri, Kansas and Iowa.

The tent was crowded and thousands stood up against the edges. The preaching brother was making the effort of his life, and so well did he appreciate it that he began by removing his coat, waistcoat and collar.

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven."

That was Mr. Pipes' text. He used a lighted candle and a tin can to make his point realistic.

"Why can't you accomplish anything?" he asked. "Why don't you do any good in the world? Because you cover you light like I do this candle, and people can't tell whether you are a follower of the Master or not. You know it's so—everyone of you!"

"Amen! Hallelujah!"

This from the gray haired saints around the boy preacher. As he went on, bending his body until his head nearly touched the floor, and at other times swinging his arms aloft, jumping up and cracking his heels together, the camp workers became agitated.

"I'll tell you, brethren," he shouted, "if you hide your light here you will one day walk in the light of a fire that never, never shall be quenched!"

"Amen! Glory!"

The shouting chorus ably backed the young exhorter, who by this time was perspiring like a harvest hand. His white shirt clung to him as a circus poster to a billboard. It was work—the hardest sort of work.

But he was delivering the goods. He knew the people he was talking to and how to reach them. Even before the altar invitation was given men, women and children were crowding to the long, rough board, wet with the tears of many penitents.

'Tis the last call of mercy,
'Tis the last call of mercy,
'Tis the last call of mercy,
Prepare to meet thy God!

A woman with a sonorous voice started the song, and the hymn swelled out on the night air, weird and threatening.

The board altar was soon filled and the weeping penitents knelt around on the turf.

"Let the saints gather 'round," cried Mr. Pipes; "The Lord has a hard night's work ahead for us."

It was then 10 o'clock, but the real work was just beginning. The singing sister resumed her chant:

The judgment day is coming!
The judgment day is coming!
The judgment day is coming!
Prepare to meet thy God!

The saints knelt around the penitents, careless of the hard earth cushion, prayed for and fanned them. Singing, praying and sobbing blended in a dirgelike din.

"O, God! Have mercy!"

A slender, middle-aged woman at the center of the altar fell back, stretched out her arms and stiffened. A pallor spread over her face, and she looked like one who was dying.

The women saints rushed to her, fanned her and stroked her arms. The ministers laughed triumphantly, arguing that the symptoms indicated it would soon be well with her soul.

The shouting and singing went on—

Will your name be found written?
Will your name be found written?
Will your name be found written?
Prepare to meet thy God!

No organ needed to encourage those sturdy choristers of the tabernacle. The very guy ropes swayed under the influence of the outpouring melody. Every saint was doing something. It was a busy night for the devil, who was losing his grip.

The husband of the woman who had fallen regarded her anxiously. The penitent opened her eyes, looked toward the sky and clasped her thin hands in front of her.

"Glory! I see him!" she shouted.

Still she did not rise from the laps of the women who were holding her. She closed her eyes and again became unconscious.

Several of the brothers rushed to the husband and warmly shook hands with him. They were congratulating him about the change that was coming over his wife. The husband returned the handshakes, but still looked uneasily at the prostrate woman. She seemed to be suffering.

"That is regular old-time Bible religion, brother," said a man who came up to congratulate.

"The devil is sure leaving her," said another.

"God bless you, brother; I know you are happy," said a sister.

About this time a large man at the end of the board altar broke into a fit of laughter. The attack became so violent that it attracted attention all over the audience.

The light had come to him with less travail that it was coming to the woman. He had seen Jesus, he said, and he laughed for very joy. Even the singing could not drown his hilarity.

At the other end of the bench a beautiful girl with dark chestnut hair, who had been one of the first to go to the altar, arose weeping and in terrible distress. She was met by a plainly dressed sister of mercy, who led her to one side and fanned her. The girl laid her head on the sister's breast and sobbed out her grief.

"O, sweet Jesus! Forgive! Forgive!"

Over and over again she repeated the exclamation. The sister fanned her gently and smoothed back the curling hair from the broad white forehead. Late in the night relief came to the penitent and she shouted with the redeemed.

By and by the woman who laid herself down at the altar began to recover consciousness. She slowly arose to her feet and shouted: "Glory! Bless His holy name!" The saints gathered around and shook hands with her. She seem fatigued and had evidently been through torture.

"Do you think all will come across tonight?" asked a brother of Mr. Pipes, who was toiling manfully.

"If it be God's will," said the young preacher, devoutly.

At midnight all save two had "come across" and were wildly shouting their joy. Prayers, groans and songs had failed to bring peace to these two. They had been kneeling in the dirt, with heads pressed against a hard board, for over two hours. Finally nature stepped in and the tired saints had to give up for the night.

They had assisted twenty-five penitents "across."

Another phase of devilism is illustrated by the following statement, from the Mexican Herald:

A big fire, a suicide and a number of accidents in the city and a heavy wind and rain storm here and numerous crimes and accidents in many parts of the Republic were the natural consequences, it is to be supposed, of the annual one day's leave of absence taken by his diabolical majesty, the devil yesterday—a leave of absence which his majesty spends in this earthly planet doing a number of devilish tricks.

It is a common belief among almost all Mexicans that on the day of San Bartolo, which was yesterday, the devil is loose and many unpleasant things happen. The devil is supposed to be very busy all the year around roasting bad people in the inferno, but on the day of San Bartolo he takes a little rest and comes to the earth to see how things are going on. That is, he comes on a trip of inspection to see the prospects for the coming year.

Many people are so superstitious about this that they stay at home all day and refuse to receive calls because, according to the tradition, it occurred one time that the devil disguised himself and called upon people whom he wanted to carry away. The object of the visit was briefly explained and the interested parties were so scared that most of them dropped dead, whereupon the devil carried away their souls.

The superstition is much more widely spread in the states of the interior. In Guadalajara, for instance, they claim that San Bartolo's is the day when the city shall be destroyed by a flood and a hurricane, according to the prediction of a priest who died many years ago, although nobody knows the name of the prophet nor the year when he made the prophecy.

ANXIETY ANXIOUS.

THE SCHWEIZER REMEDY.

It Might Be Used Successfully in the Ranks of Spiritualism—So Says "Anxiety."

A new method of disposing of those pests who make easy money by playing upon human weaknesses has been successfully operated in Los Angeles. It should be designated hereafter as the "Schweizer system," as Mrs. John Schweizer of that city is the demonstrator, and the demonstration is simply a form of physical culture.

The grafter in this case was a stranger who one day called upon Mrs. Schweizer, representing himself as a city collector of mortality statistics, and desired to know if there had been any recent deaths in her family. She replied her mother had died some years ago in Baltimore, whereupon the solicitor courteously thanked her and departed. A few days later he called again and exhibited to her a frame resembling an open coffin, bordered with black satin ribbon, inclosing her mother's name and edged with scriptural texts. He offered it at a certain price, but Mrs. S. declined to purchase. He then seated himself and began to read from the bible to her. She told him she did not care to hear him read, for she know more about the bible than he. When he persisted she quietly remarked it would be for his advantage to leave. He then questioned her right to refuse the package, which added to her gathering wrath. She informed him that unless he left the house she would put him out.

The clerical looking individual doubted her ability to do so, whereupon Mrs. Schweizer cleared the decks and proceeded to get into action. Seizing him by the collar and the full of his breeches, she rushed him through the door, bumped him against the porch pillars, and rolled him down the steps. Taking a fresh hold she bundled him through the gate and shot him out into the street, administering a vigorous slap in the face as he went. She then quietly returned to her domestic duties, while the unlucky easy money man slunk down the street to the accompaniment of a chorus of gibes from the women of the neighborhood who had witnessed Mrs. Schweizer's stunt in physical culture. Mrs. Schweizer not only relieved herself of a pest but she uncovered a trio of the same kind to the police and aroused such enthusiasm in the neighborhood that the women in that vicinity are now awaiting these easy money nuisances with hot water, rolling pins, flat irons, hatpins, and other domestic weapons.

There is no greater pest in the community than these smooth, unctuous individuals who work upon the grief of those who have lost friends by appealing to their sentiments of affection and association, and then palm off upon them some grewsome remembrance for an extortionate price. Hardly a day is allowed to elapse after the funeral before the afflicted family is flooded with circulars and pestered with solicitors, some of them swindlers, all of them bores, eager to furnish all sorts of memorial trash. It might be unjust, perhaps, to apply the Schweizer physical culture system in every case, but the success which attended that worthy lady's application in Los Angeles is a valuable hint. There are many cases in which much money and mortification might be saved by the prompt use of the system.

The above is from the Chicago Tribune, and the Mrs. Schweizer remedy should be applied to those who work upon the GRIEF OF THOSE WHO HAVE LOST FRIENDS, by bogus materializations and messages, and they should apply it in a manner that would make it very impressive.

There is any amount of truth in Spiritualism, and any number of honest mediums, but the fakes are an element in our cause that we will have to contend with continually. Don't forget that we should not stop in our efforts to hunt them down any more than the government should cease its efforts to arrest and imprison counterfeiters. Any person who uses wigs, etc., to personate a spirit should have a slight taste of the Whipping Post, and then be sent to a reformatory school.

In the words of Col. Ingersoll, "LET US BE HONEST." Under the circumstances, do you wonder, that I, on looking over our ranks, manifest no little

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Personal Revelation of Spirit Power.

The expression is often made, "I KNOW there is some law relating to mind and matter, which is incomprehensible on any other hypothesis than the interposition of occult forces with intelligence from without." Questioned, and the chances are a hundred to one the narrator declines to relate his personal experiences which justified his positive assertion in the premises, because he does not want his character for veracity called in question. Here is a case in point: Our informant is a gentleman of education, well known to the readers of The Progressive Thinker. Any statement over his own signature would be received without hesitation. We vouch for his integrity. He says:

"It was upwards of thirty years ago. I was alone engaged laboring in the garden, thinking of the seemingly impossible incidents related by Spiritualists, which were counter to every known law relating to matter; coats buttoned around the body removed instantly, without the knowledge of those wearing them, then mysteriously thrown some distance; musical instruments floating about a room, playing all the time; rings and hoops of iron, solidly joined, appearing around the neck, or arms, then disappearing without human aid. And thus on with all manner of apparent impossibilities.

"While thus cogitating on the matter, still using the hoe, I noticed a gold fob chain, one end attached to the watch in the left vest pocket, the other fastened to a button hole, was swinging before me loose from the watch. Strange, I thought. I had worn the chain almost continuously for more than a dozen years, and nothing of the kind had occurred before. I raised the chain in my hand and critically examined the peculiar arrangement by which the link was opened by turning a screw-nut backward about one-eighth of an inch, then the loop could be opened, slid over the ring in the stem of the watch, then closed and the burr turned, making it impossible to be opened and released from the ring without breaking, or reversing the screw. A careful examination betrayed no break, no turning back of the burr; no opening of the loop. Then the thought: The ring in the stem of the watch, to which the chain was attached must have become deranged. The watch received attention. It was intact. There was no possibility of the chain being separated from the watch by normal forces. Of course some tall thinking followed.

"The burr was then turned back, the loop was opened, was closed over the ring of the watch case; the burr was screwed over the loose end of the loop, extra force being applied at the finish to make sure such a mishap could not occur again.

"Resuming work with the hoe five minutes, I question if one minute passed, until the chain was again detached from the watch, and was again swinging loose before me. Then I KNEW intelligent and, to my senses, unnatural forces, had operated on that chain. I hastened to communicate the fact to my wife, which she tells me she distinctly remembers."

Our friend continues:

"These facts, Mr. Francis, which I would verify under oath, I accept as a personal revelation to me. Others of a somewhat similar character, preceded and followed this. Notwithstanding the multitude of frauds which are practiced by fake mediums, I must either reject my own senses, else receive the evidences furnished me as incontrovertible. An incomprehensible law of nature was contravened, and I am more ready to credit the act to some dear friend in spirit life, who wished to furnish ocular proof of spirit power, than to ascribe it to that mighty being we call God, without ability to comprehend his magnificence."

Thus our friend, and thus a wonderful revelation of spirit presence, and activity.

Any tyrant is willing that people should be free and happy in the way he himself prescribes.—American Sentinel.

A Lamentable Arraignment.

The following excerpt was clipped from an editorial in a late issue of the Morning Star, a secular paper published at Rockford, Ill. We commend it to the careful consideration of thoughtful thinkers:

"The liquor consumption in the United States is but little more than half that of the British empire, per capita. But the liquor consumption of the United States has been on the increase in recent years, not merely in the total, but per capita, so much that the consumption of beer is nearly double what it was a decade ago. Whether drunkenness has gained with equal step is not so certain. But drunkenness is becoming a national vice here just as it is in every country in Europe.

"The worst feature of the undue indulgence in intoxicants is that it demoralizes the very classes which have the most to struggle against. It it were the vice of the rich alone it could be dealt with more easily. But it is more the vice of the poor. There is no hovel so dejected that it does not reach and add a stain to its dirty walls. It is a vice which does not confine its ravages to the generation that is addicted to it. The reports of every board of control in the United States show that the asylums and penitentiaries are full of men and women who owe their degeneracy to the drinking habits of their ancestors."

Note especially, it is in Europe and America where the Christian religion is dominant, this vice of intemperance is on the increase. It is not Mohammedans or Buddhists, it is not Spiritualists, Agnostics, Infidels, Jews, or even the members of the liberal churches, as Unitarians or Universalists, who are victims of this deplorable vice; but it is they, followers of the reputed founder of the Christian religion, who at the marriage festival in Galilee, on the third day of the carousal, when the guests were "well drunken," his mother informed him: "They have no wine." Then came that first miracle. Six water pots of stone, containing from two to three firkins (nine gallons) each, were filled to the brim with water. This the Christian founder and exemplar converted into wine. The governor of the feast complimented the production, by assuring the bridegroom he had kept the good wine until now. Jesus' biographer was so pleased with this miracle, John 2:11, he says, Jesus manifested his glory by the act, and his disciples believed on him in consequence.

Sad to relate, this manufacturer of wine gained the distinction of being known as a "wine-bibber." At his last feast with his disciples he took the cup, blessed it and directed them: "Drink ye all of it;" and his followers continue the practice still, though for himself he said: "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." Not enough that he had gained an earth reputation of being a wine-bibber, but he proposed a continuance of the practice in the immortal life.

And then we have the instruction of Paul, the chief apostle of Christianity, to his beloved Timothy: "Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities." Saloonists delight in displaying this text over their bottles of intoxicants, to incite an appetite for the destructive product of the still-worm.

The advocates of war, of slavery, of intemperance, persecution and even death of heretics, get their authority from the inerrant Bible. Worse than all, they censure those who invite attention to its vicious teaching. Do they wish to conceal a disreputable record?

Orthodoxy Pure and Simple.

Rev. J. Furniss, C. S. S. B., of England, has given to the world a "Book for Children and Young Persons," entitled "The Sight of Hell." Starting with the inquiry, "Where is Hell?" which he locates "in the bowels of the earth;" then "How far is it to Hell?" "In the middle of the earth," so hell is just 4,000 miles away.

Without following the Reverend's catechism we want to get into the middle of the thing at once; so we learn that all is darkness in hell, thick, black, heavy aching darkness; one eternal night. The fire burns, but gives no light. The smoke ever ascending, is terrible. The noises from rivers of fire, with oceans of tears running down countless millions of eyes, and the cry night and day forever, with the smell of death that never comes, are grievous afflictions, to say the least. But the individual just gets fits. He will never steal a pin again, or, if he does, he'll believe "Jesus is the eternal son of God," and escape just retribution, which the learned author, with a full knowledge of the facts, thus describes:

"The sinner lies chained on a bed of red-hot, blazing fire! When a man sick of fever is lying on even a soft bed, it is pleasant sometimes to turn round. How will it be when the body has been lying on the same side on the scorching, broiling fire for a hundred million years? All the body is salted with fire. It burns through every bone and muscle and nerve. It rages inside the skull, shoots out through the eyes, it drops out through the ears, it roars in the throat."

But the author excels himself when he comes to depict the duration of this horrible nightmare. Read and weep:

"Think of a great solid iron ball, larger than the heavens and the earth. A bird comes once in a hundred million years and just touches the great iron ball with a feather of its wing. Think that you have to burn in a fire till the bird has worn the great iron ball away with its feather! Is this eternity? No. Eternity has only just begun."

The book with these damnable descriptions, is for children and youth! What child of ten years educated in our common schools can be made to believe such hellish teaching? It is because it cannot be crammed into the brains of properly educated children the Catholic priesthood have founded their parochial schools, and demand Catholic parents shall send their children to schools where such vile teaching is rampant.

It seems almost incredible, and yet it is a fact, only seventy years ago such teaching was common to every orthodox pulpit. There were very few Universalists and Unitarians at that time, and they were classed with Infidels for denying the faith. Billy Sunday's religion is a survival of that period, as is that of Sam Small's, and as was that of the late Rev. Talmage's.

And the moss-backs hate Spiritualists for aiding in giving hell and its defenders a black eye.

Self-reliance, self-restraint, self-control, self-discipline, these constitute an educated will.—Anon.

Be wary of the man who always wears a set smile.—Ethel Payne.

Popish Diplomacy.

How plainly the slimy tentacles of the cunning old octopus are discernible in the movements put forth by the pope, as related in the following statements in the daily press. If Japan well knew the character of Romanism as manifested in the dark ages of the history of the Roman Catholic church, it would shrink from that institution as from the folds and fangs of a vile and poisonous serpent.

Popish diplomacy is more to be dreaded, despised and shunned, than any deadliest cobra or other serpentine monster.

Portland, Me., Sept. 11—Bishop William H. O'Connell of the Roman Catholic diocese of Maine, announced today his intention to leave here Thursday for Japan on a special mission on behalf of Pope Pius X. Bishop O'Connell declines to state the purpose of his visit but it is believed to be an important diplomatic mission from the vatican to the emperor of Japan decided upon about the time of the conclusion of peace between Japan and Russia. It is understood in Catholic circles here that the bishop will present to the emperor the personal congratulations of the pope on the magnanimous manner in which Japan yielded to Russia and also thank the emperor for his kindly interest in the Catholic subjects of Japan and express the hope that the interest may continue.

Rome, Sept. 12—In connection with the forthcoming visit to Tokio of Bishop William H. O'Connell of the diocese of Maine as special envoy of the pope to the emperor of Japan, it is now known that the appointment of such a representative has been in contemplation for a long time. It was thought that the Japanese people could never be converted individually, but would have to be Christianized, if at all, by diplomatic methods.

At the present time the Catholic church in Japan is suffering from imputation that it is a French institution, and, France being the ally of Russia, the church comes in for a share of popular disfavor. To counteract this it was suggested that the pope should come forward as a sovereign and appoint a representative at Tokio, at the same time requesting the Japanese government to appoint a minister to the vatican. The suggestion was well received by his holiness.

It was at first believed that Archbishop Ireland of St. Paul would be sent to Japan, but the honor has fallen on Bishop O'Connell, who is in higher favor at the vatican. Bishop O'Connell's stay in Japan is likely to be a protracted one.

The selection of an American for such a mission is considered evidence of the friendship entertained by the pope for the people of the United States, such missions being usually intrusted to Italians.

Justice to Moses.

P. LePage Renouf, in his Hibbert's Lectures on "The Origin, and Growth of Religion," p. 51, says:

"The opinion which used to be universally received, that Moses is the author of the Pentateuch, must assuredly be abandoned."

Renouf gave a series of eight lectures at Oxford University "to confirm and establish the Christian faith," and the above sentence is quoted verbatim from his second lecture. He was chosen, because of his great learning by the heads of the twenty-two allied colleges which make up the university, as provided for by Hibbert in his will.

In former issues of The Progressive Thinker we have shown that the Lord was libeled when credited with the authorship of the "Thus saith the Lord" so frequently occurring in the Pentateuch. Renouf now exonerates Moses, whom we charged with falsifying. Further on in the lectures Renouf shows that the Pentateuch could not have been written until at least 500 years after the period ascribed to Moses. If so, then Moses was not the libeler. A violent presumption follows that the five books of Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy, with probably Joshua, were compiled from Babylonian records, and adapted to the Jews, by some priests after their return from captivity—provided, always, there was such a people as the Jews, and such a captivity.

Another New Sect.

What is apparently the nucleus of a new religious sect of the strenuous sort represented by the Holy Rollers, Holy Ghost and Us society, etc., is brought to public notice by the reports in the daily press of this city to the effect that, charging that she was dragged from a sick bed and forced to kneel between two men, who compelled her to sing and pray for more than three hours early yesterday morning, Miss Blanche Bingley, 26 years old, caused the arrest of Henry J. Lawrence and his sisters, Marie and Anna Lawrence, 190 Thirty-fifth street.

The storm that had been brewing between Miss Bingley and the Lawrence sisters reached a climax when, after a night of singing and prayer, she was forced from bed and, despite her protests, taken to another room and compelled to renew her devotions till she was exhausted.

In the afternoon she swore out a warrant for the arrest of her fellow "workers." On the way to the police station they held "services" in the patrol wagon. The songs of the women were heard for blocks, and a crowd of boys followed.

Lawrence, who is 50 years old, assisted by his two sisters, founded a new sect a short time ago. They style themselves "Missionary and Charity Workers."

A Valuable Find.

A human foot imprint was found in anthracite coal, quarried in the Eagle Hill Colliery, near Pottsville, Pa., quite recently. It is said to be the first evidence of man found in the coal beds of this country. But here is an amusing statement made by the paper telling of the find. It says:

"The imprint, it is estimated, must have been made 10,000 years ago."

We venture the assertion, there is not a bed of anthracite coal on this globe which was not laid down ten millions of years ago, and, probably, fifty millions of years ago. Geologists laugh in scorn when priest-led philosophers talk about thousands of years in connection with the great physical changes the earth has undergone, to produce the present order of things.

The natural rights of men, civil and political, are liberty, equality, security, property, social protection, and resistance to oppression. Liberty consists in the right to do whatever is not contrary to the rights of others.—Thomas Paine.

Review of Passing Events.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE, EDITOR-AT-LARGE, N. S. A.

The Death of Henry Slade.

The passing to spirit life of Henry Slade has been the occasion seized by the newspapers, especially of the yellow sort, of turning a flood of falsehood on Spiritualism. Every scribbling hack has made the most of the event, and drawn liberally on imagination.

The death of Slade has been almost universally discussed by editors and contributors, and this is the more remarkable, as for the past few years he has been lost to public sight in the quiet of a sanitarium, where he has been cared for by friends and assisted by the National Spiritualist Association. For many years before, he was in Europe, and hence that his complete biography should be at the finger tips of a thousand scribes who are not supposed to be conversant with the personnel of Spiritualism, is notable. On no one subject has a tithe of the clippings been received, as on this. From the great metropolitan journals, to Four Corner "patent insides," they have been taken. Whole columns, and the drawn out falsehoods concentrated into a few sententious lines. Different they are, yet similar, dictated by the same mind, for one purpose, and that to degrade Spiritualism. It would seem that full preparation had been made against the death of this medium that the occasion might be seized to make the attack.

As a specimen and type of the articles that have appeared, containing the gist of the whole, the following is presented, and one would have to look far and wide for a more untruthful and mendacious piece of writing.

"The name of Slade is doubtless unknown to many of the present generation, and yet it has been but a few years since this celebrated slate-writing 'medium' disappeared from view. With clever feats of sleight-of-hand he imposed not only upon Spiritualists but upon some of the best known scientists of the day. He accumulated a large fortune, became an honored guest at European courts and universities—and then was exposed, discredited and ruined. He lost his mind and for the last ten years has been confined in a hospital for the incurably insane.

"Slade's greatest feat was no doubt the complete befooling of the German scientist Zollner. In England he had been exposed and convicted of fraudulent practices. Notwithstanding this, so great were his powers of deception and so mystifying his legerdemain, that he was able to go directly from jail to Germany and there to persuade a cool-headed professor of physics that his apparently miraculous phenomena were genuine. Dr. Zollner, as a result of these seances, published a large book on 'Transcendental Physics,' in which he aimed to prove the existence of a fourth dimension of space.

"All of Slade's tricks were finally exposed by Mr. John N. Maskelyne, the English conjurer, and by Professor E. Ray Lankester, the English scholar. He then disappeared utterly, taking with him the fortune which he had accumulated in the days of his fame. In 1895 he turned up in New York, penniless and ragged. What became of his fortune nobody knew; it was gone, and his mind had gone with it. It is a curious fact that Slade's most famous dupe, Dr. Zollner, also died in an asylum for the insane.

"Slade's death, however, does not plunge him into complete oblivion. He has had the bad fortune to be immortalized in all his trickery by Robert Browning in 'Mr. Sludge the Medium.'"

Spiritualists who have been cognizant of the history of the cause will not require the false in the above to be pointed out. There are many who are not thus familiar. Slade was never exposed in this country, and the Maskelyne and Lankester affair was a farce, and had they not appealed to prejudice would have redounded more to their discredit than to his dishonor. It was considered a disgrace by all impartial minds that he should be haled into court. That was the reason why he was received by the "cool-headed" scientists of Germany who were not too bigoted to be just. Dr. Zollner revived an old theory of the "fourth dimension," to show how spirits can accomplish seemingly impossible manifestations, for he was fully convinced that the phenomena was spiritual in origin. The death of Zollner was years afterward, and from organic trouble which had no relation to his belief in Spiritualism.

The implication is made that the immense wealth of Slade was acquired by dishonesty. His "immense wealth" is a myth of this writer's imagination. Whatever he did have was from the gifts bestowed by the nobility and wealthy before whom he appeared and whom he satisfied.

He returned to New York, it is true, broken in health and destitute. He had met with financial reverses as shrewdest business men do. He was past 70, and old for his years. Paralysis was slowly creeping over his nervous system and his brain was affected. He was not insane, but senile. He was not confined in "an insane asylum," but the free inmate of a sanitarium.

And last, it was not Slade who stirred the ire of Browning to disgrace himself by writing the doggerel poem, "Mr. Sludge the Medium," but the more remarkable D. D. Home, of whom the poet was intensely jealous. Browning never held a seance with Slade.

This peculiar blunder is an ear mark, of all these screeds, all making Slade the original of "Sludge."

"Even the New York Evening Post (copied and endorsed by the Boston Transcript) ends its story with this matter of "Sludge", and the mournful reflection: "Thus the cruel frauds of mediums are made possible by the very intensity of human affection."

The most amusing absurdity is from a correspondent at Lockport, near Somerset, the boyhood home of Slade:

"Slade died last Friday in a sanitarium at Belding, Mich., at the age of 80. On his last visit to Lockport, eight years ago, Slade promised a party of local Spiritualists and one unbeliever that when he died he would return to them in spirit form and make himself known to them by a sign. He made a pact whereby they should be notified of his death, and agreed to meet them four days after his death at his former home, in Somerset, at a specified hour.

"Two of the party, Charles Zimbrist, a Spiritualist, and John Zimbrist, the unbeliever, were notified on Monday of Slade's death, and went to Slade's old home on Tuesday evening, but the spirit failed to appear. Zimbrist has told of the failure, and stock in Slade, who once was regarded here as almost superhuman, is below par, even among his staunchest Spiritualistic followers."

This writer is evidently is outside the ring. He knows nothing of Slade's "insanity" and correctly places him in a sanitarium. He knows nothing about his returning to New York "ragged," his fortune gone "and his mind gone with it." On the contrary about this time Slade returns to his boyhood home to visit old friends and neighbors. They know him and believe in him "as almost superhuman." Then he makes a "pact" to appear four days after his death."

The absurdity comes into this writer's dream when he says that because Slade did not manifest, his "stock" is below par, even among his staunchest Spiritualistic followers." Had he known anything about Spiritualism or Spiritualists, he would have known that they could not expect such manifestations so soon after his death under the circumstances. After long and exhausting sickness and death of the aged, all spirits teach in their communications that time is required for restoration. It is quite possible the promise made so many years before, may have been quite forgotten. Has not this correspondent from Lockport, ever made an engagement, which he found impossible to meet? and because he was not at the appointed place, at the appointed time, does it prove he does not exist? Spiritualists who have gained every step by knowledge, understand the difficulties in the way and are not so fickle as to have their belief shaken by such an occurrence which they would have every reason to expect.

ANNUAL CONVENTION

Of the National Spiritualists' Association.

The thirteenth annual convention of the National Spiritualists' Association will be held in the First Unitarian Church, Eighth street and Mary Place, Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

This gathering will be one of the grandest convocations ever held in the name of Spiritualism; no one, no matter what his sect or faith, should fail to attend, while Spiritualists can afford to sacrifice much, if necessary, in order to be present at every session.

Note the fine array of platform talent expected to be present and participate in the exercises, none better in the world: Prof. W. F. Peck, Dr. Austin, Will J. Erwood, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, Mrs. Ressegue, Oscar Edgerly, Mrs. Lillie, Mrs. Fixen, Eva McCoy, Margaret Gaule-Redinger, and a host of others.

The musical program, under the auspices, for one-half of the convention, of the well known artiste, Mme. Ida May Poulson, and for the other half, of Prof. Paul Zumbach, will be a rare treat which none will care to miss.

The business sessions will be of the utmost importance and interest; come and listen to them even if you are not delegates.

The lyceum movement will be explained to you by its enthusiast, John W. Ring, the general superintendent of lyceums; he has something more than good to tell you of the children of the lyceum.

Come one and all and give your influence and encouragement to the N. S. A. and its hard-working auxiliaries. Secure your rooms at the Nicollet Hotel, one dollar a day for good accommodations—a first-class cafe is attached to the hotel. Be sure and get certificate tickets at your home railroad office and by it secure your return trip for one-third regular fare; bring those certificate tickets to convention with you.

All sessions, day and evening, open to the public, FREE.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.

WITH FOLDED HANDS.

With folded hands she sees the sunglow fade,
Down swooning in the shade
Of evening quiet, and its last beam shut
Beneath the curtain round the couch of days;
The royal purple curtain newly cut,
By the gold scepter which the night queen sways.
Cloud-angels fill the heavens in noiseless bands;
She watches all with listless, folded hands.

The night comes softly out and hangs a star
Low swung from heaven's bar,
A clear and lustrous lamp; then thrilling low
A nightingale pours out her piteous strain
Beneath the window where the jessamines grow,
And fills the night with her impassioned pain.
In shimmering ranks white rose and lily stands
Unplucked, unsought by those calm, folded hands.

A murmuring breeze drifts gently from the South,
Touching the quiet mouth
With sweet caress; stirs the pale golden hair
Upon her bosom, but she heeds it not,
For all life's vague unrest and heavy care
Slips from her heart, and is with life forgot,
Her soul has joined her sister-angel bands.
Sweet dead, sleep on with idle folded hands.

LIFE IMMORTAL REVEALED.

Hail the glad day—beautiful day,
For Error's mists now melt away,
The rays of Truth effulgent shine
With heavenly radiance divine.

Hail the glad light—beautiful light,
Dispelling all the gloom of night;
And Truth's unerring shining ray
Brings in the reign of joyous day.

Hail the glad truth—beautiful truth,
Renewing man in strength and youth;
Glad Day, glad Light, glad Truth, that bring
To man a priceless offering.

Glad souls on Tabor's glorious height,
Behold fair Truth in robes of light;
A nearer glimpse of heaven scan,
And life immortal dwells with man.

Spiritualists, Attention!

Dr. Geo. B. Warne, Who is Ever on the Alert in the Interest of Spiritualists, has Something of Special Importance to Say to Those Who Reside in Michigan. Read His Statement, and Then Act!

LOOK! LISTEN! DANGER!

Spiritualists of Michigan, Now Is the Time to Wake Up!

Spiritualists of Michigan, you have barely escaped a disgraceful disaster. Temporary victory has been snatched out of the jaws of impending defeat. The hour of opportunity has again struck for you. A MIGHTY RESPONSIBILITY IS UPON YOU.

After a hearing on the 19th of September, your Supreme Court granted a peremptory Writ of Mandamus, compelling Judge O. W. Coolidge, of the Cass County Circuit, to certify up your bill of exceptions to his rulings at the trial of the John Goff Will case. The upper tribunal thus decides to later hear your counsel upon a motion for reversal of the lower court, and a remanding of the case for trial before a new jury.

Had this preliminary proceeding ended in the opposite decision your State Association would have lost forever all legal rights to Brother Goff's munificent bequest.

A combination of reasons made necessary the petition for a Mandamus; NOT LEAST AMONG THEM WAS YOUR OWN INDIFFERENCE TO THE ISSUES AT STAKE AND FAILURE TO PROVIDE ADEQUATE FUNDS TO CARRY ON THE CONTEST.

Your attorney, N. Lynn Free, Esq., was obliged to advance over one hundred dollars out of his private pocket for absolutely necessary expenses.

The Court Stenographer delayed the perfecting of your appeal to the Supreme Court, because he was not paid for his transcript of the evidence. Failure to keep pledges of financial payments to him led your attorney to drop the case.

In this condition of affairs the Chicago Member of the N. S. A. official board was hurried to Lansing at Express speed for conference with the officers of your State Association. No lawyer was ready to appear for you and the Mandamus hearing only six days away. It was a time for quick decisions and rapid execution. Immediate payment to him of one hundred and twenty-five dollars and a personal guarantee of another like sum on September 20, brought the lawyer back to make the winning fight.

Yours is now the burden. Indecision means your final overthrow. The State Association must have funds to meet expenses of the litigation. Your State has thousands of Spiritualists and yet other thousands of sympathizers with your views.

Wanted at once! five hundred men and women who will send two dollars each and, five hundred more who will forward one dollar each to Miss Anna D. Chapman, Secretary, Marcellus, Mich., for the struggle!

Greater donations welcome. Give yourself! Ask your friends to give! Lend a hand! Hustle!!!

So act as to command the respect of the public and the courts.

Teach judge, jury and attorney that the wills of your arisen brothers must be held inviolable.

Principles are involved in the contest!

IT IS NO TIME FOR USELESS CAMP FOLLOWERS OR SUNSHINE SOLDIERS. DALLYING DELAY MUST CEASE, OR DEFEAT BE EXPECTED.

Failure of effort upon your part may mean final failure in this fight that Spiritualism may have its rights.

Your Medium's Home at Lansing needs a portion of this money if it is to succeed in its mission.

GEORGE B. WARNE.

"The Light Among the Hills."

In a few weeks we shall commence publishing, from the pen of Mrs. I. L. Lewis of Bethel, Vermont, a thrilling narrative entitled "The Light Among the Hills." It will prove highly interesting and instructive, and every Spiritualist should read it. Mrs. Lewis is an indefatigable worker in the ranks of Spiritualism, and is making a deep impression for good on the Cause she loves so well. Now is the time to send in your subscription for The Progressive Thinker.

Mrs. Carlyle Petersilea.

We have several interesting Spirit Communications from Mrs. Petersilea which we will publish during our Fall and Winter Campaign. Her spirit messages are always interesting and instructive.

Send in Your Subscriptions.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SEND IN YOUR YEARLY SUBSCRIPTIONS. THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER IS NOW UNUSUALLY INTERESTING. IT IS EDUCATIONAL ALL ALONG THE LINE. THE SPIRITUALIST WHO READS IT REGULARLY BECOMES WELL EQUIPPED IN EVERYTHING THAT PERTAINS TO SPIRITUALISM AND OCCULT SCIENCE, FOR NO OTHER SPIRITUALIST PAPER HAS EVER DARED TO DISCUSS THE IMPORTANT PSYCHIC QUESTIONS NOW CONSIDERED CAREFULLY AND CRITICALLY IN ITS COLUMNS FROM WEEK TO WEEK. JUST THINK, TOO, OF THE 12 VALUABLE PREMIUM BOOKS, ELEGANTLY BOUND IN CLOTH, WHICH WE ARE SENDING OUT FOR A NOMINAL PRICE, CONSTITUTING OUR DIVINE PLAN. YOU CANNOT FULLY REALIZE THE GRAND WORK WE ARE DOING WITHOUT SEEING AND READING THE BOOKS. SEND IN YOUR SUBSCRIPTION NOW, AND GET YOUR NEIGHBOR TO JOIN WITH YOU.

SOMEHOW OR OTHER.

Life has a burden for every one's shoulder,
None may escape from its trouble and care,
Miss it in youth, and 'twill come when we're older
And fit us as close as the garments we wear.

Sorrow comes into our homes uninvited,
Robbing our hearts of its treasures of song;
Lovers grow cold, and our friendships are slighted,
Yet somehow or other we worry along.

Midst the sweet blossoms that smile in our faces
Grow the rank weeds that would poison and blight,
And e'er in the midst of earth's beautiful places
There always is something that isn't quite right.

Yet oft from a rock we may pluck a gay flower
And drink from a spring in a desolate waste.
They come to the heart like a heavenly dower,
And naught is so sweet to the eye or the taste.

Everyday toil is everyday blessing,
Though poverty's cottage and crust we may share.
Weak is the back on which burdens are pressing,
But stout is the heart that is strengthened by prayer.

Somehow or other the pathway grows brighter
Just when we mourn there was none to befriend.
Hope in the heart makes the burden grow lighter,
And somehow or other we get to the end.

"WEARY WILLIAMS."

Some Reflections In Reference to Him and Others.

To the Editor:—Please permit a word in the way of kindly criticism. It is this, that no person should discuss a subject of which they are absolutely ignorant.

Some recent writers in The Progressive Thinker have shown up socialism as a proposition in which the "Weary Willies" would applaud over a general hand out of property accumulations. This recalls the argument with which the old-time Abolitionist was met: "Would you have your daughter marry a nigger?"

Not a single advocate of socialism has ever proposed a property division.

They do advocate government ownership of all means of production and that every human being shall be afforded an opportunity to get "his share" by exchanging his labor for it. "Service for its just equivalent."

The Weary William equally with the industrious would be compelled to work if he would eat and be clothed. Socialism proposes that the industrious public get rid of the burden of carrying upon its back the Weary Willie, the grafter, the exploiter, and the classes who by the favors of legislation grow fat at the expense of society at large.

I would recommend that the writers take a course of reading beginning with Bellamy and going on into the study as given in the writings of B. O. Flower, and the many other big souls whose voices are pleading for justice and social betterment. C. H. WEAVER.

The Progressive Thinker does not have a department for the discussion of "Socialism." The secular press is doing in that direction all that is required.

There are truths which are not for all men nor for all times.—Voltaire.

NOT "PSYCHIC HASH."

Some Comments on Charles Dawbarn's Essay.

In The Progressive Thinker of September 2, 1905, there is an article from the pen of the gifted California Philosopher, Mr. Charles Dawbarn, entitled "Psychic Hash."

He says: "For instance some one sees beyond the normal sight of the rest of us, and we call it clairvoyance, which is merely an effect of added vibrations to certain of his nerves. In the same manner his hearing becomes clairaudience, which merely marks another dance of the units with a little change of tune and time. Presently the mind itself grows more active under like stimulus, and we then call the effect 'psychometry,' or perhaps it flashes its way to a distance, when we exclaim, 'Behold the power of telepathic suggestion!' for we see it compel that other mind to its own sight and thought."

Mr. Dawbarn here gives the partial form of psychic activity for its enlargement, and we hope he will take it as kindly as it is meant, to add, that this added vibratory activity to which he refers, raises the one so acted upon, to a strata higher in soul relations. It is a universal truth, that by these vibratory evolving processes, higher octaves are reached in individual harmony, and the man or woman undergoing such developments, becomes conscious of increased mental and soul powers, due to the higher vibratory relations. Such are the processes of individual evolution. It is a change from the strictly mortal ratios of vibration, into those called immortal, and thus mortals become conscious and legally qualified co-workers with the immortals. No fogland is entered here, nor is the mentality weakened; nay; it is strengthened, conditions become clear and perceptions of facts register themselves in the vibratory order of cosmic harmony, and become the individual conscious knowledge, in which is contained the self-evident fact of life's active individual continuation from plane to plane, in ever increasing strength of all that makes life a joy to one's self, and a blessing to all other life.

Mr. Dawbarn reaches his philosophical climax when he says: "I would repeat and emphasize, that Modern Spiritualism has been, for the most part, a system of 'psychic hash' in which dish ninety-nine one-hundredths have been ingredients evolved from the individuality of the mortal, although in many cases we find a trifle of real spirit return, to make up the balance and give flavoring to the whole."

This smacks of surface explorations, and facts only, of the great long-promised spirit outpouring upon all flesh, which world's people have named Modern Spiritualism. Its power for good is proven in the increase of mental activity for results in scientific and general knowledge, especially that of the immortality of all human entities.

Now let us dive a little deeper into the great movement, and turn on the searchlight a little stronger, and note our findings. By searching the cosmic records, we find these periodical vital enforcements to the mortal mind realm, are in keeping with Nature's own statutes and needed for evolutionary progressive changes, inasmuch as, creation is a vibratory network and all its machinery for chemicalizations and advancement are carried on through said fibrous or nerve organism in man and nature, hence these methods are the legal modes of activity. We further find, that the present vital induction of spirit in its strongest form, into nature and man's psychic organism, is a full, not a partial influx, by which we mean, it comes from all planes above Earth, and its connected celestial spheres, even from the "Christ Sphere," above the united number of this eternity, hence a great purpose is so to be served.

This purpose, we find, is to tide this mortal world and its inhabitants over a great crisis now about upon it. The process is not dependent on what is said so much through so-called modern mediums, as it is on the strong vibratory attachments and conditions which have been very carefully established between multitudes of immortal workers upon and with as many mortals who could be psychically worked upon, aroused sufficiently to call out soul fibres, and strengthen the same by this inducted stimuli of higher vitality, so that they could bear connections and do service with those with whom they were to be joint workers in this labor of the world's and humanity's upliftment, which in brief is this: that this presently-known mortal world becomes in part, in a not distant future, the first so-called immortal world. All above it move up and out into larger space. Of course, all mortals to whom this vibratory anchorage to the immortal forces is attached, rise also, for this vibratory annexation and its connections form the leverage by which this higher raising is accomplished, and we repeat, it does not count so much how many persons a speaker or medium reaches by voice, or tests, or any service rendered, as it does how many become psychically aroused by such service, to become anchored securely to these higher vibratory lines, for their own and the general welfare.

We said that this world would pass through the crisis of being raised higher, and would add, that as new continents are constantly forming in unison with nature's evolutionary processes, some there be, even at this time, in their birth throes and by convulsions and some specific upheavals will be launched as habitable world-parts or continents.

Prior to the enactment of this great movement, Modern Spiritualism, there was much and serious counselling by all the upper world's convened congresses for the purposes of arriving at the best possible solution of ways and means to launch these works. It was unanimously voted that it should be done in accordance with Nature's own code of vibratory action, and as the electric rap stands for all those psychic operations it was decided upon. The results are now before the world, the court of public opinion, and although there is not as much accomplished to mortal view, as could be wished, yet, to the deeper view, in a larger sense, the great work is constantly propelled onward to purposed consummations, and is it well to dub it all as, "Psychic Hash?" WHEN THE DEW IS ON THE GRASS.

When the dew is on the grass,
And the star-ray gilds the tree,
All my longings turn to thee,
And in dreams I see thee pass.

Knight and lover, bard and sage,—
Of the wise and good thou art,—
And thou enterest on my heart
All its rapture to engage.

Through ideal realms of light,
Moving in divinest wise,
With an uplift of the eyes,
And in glory-robes, bedight,—

Thus, in dreams, I see thee pass;
And my longings turn to thee
When the star-ray gilds the tree,
And the dew is on the grass.

A Scientist Says Science Proves a Future Life.

J. Hudry-Menos, perhaps the most advanced and startling thinker of Europe to-day, has declared, and claims to have proved, that science teaches the immortality of the soul. Further, this man declares that the Early Christian church openly taught and exploited immortality of the soul through reincarnation.

Hudry-Menos, whose spiritual eye sees "ghosts" of all shapes and colors, who believes he can tell by the colors of the halos and aureoles that his mind eye sees around the mind bodies, has supported his position strongly by arguments that have aroused a thrill of applause among the Spiritualists and kindred believers.

BY J. HUDRY-MENOS.

"If an Asiatic asked of me a definition of Europe I would be obliged to reply to him: It is that part of the world that is haunted by that incredible illusion that man was created of nothing and that his actual birth is his first appearance in life."—Schopenhauer.

At first glance science and a future life seem to have nothing in common, but, as soon as we occupy ourselves seriously with the problem of our survival after death we see that much preliminary work has been done upon it by science, that biology, physiology, chemistry, physics; all the natural sciences have given to psychology a solid foundation that psychology, in its turn, has discovered in its substratum of the human being, that which they call consciousness.

Hypnotic experiments demonstrate that the individual consciousness is disposed in layers. The more profound the hypnosis the more deeply the hypnotizer penetrates into the personality of his subject, there awakening dormant memories and an activity which it does not at other times possess; acuteness of hearing and prodigious knowledge. These terms, various layers of consciousness, various states of consciousness, and, as some put it, the various bodies of man; do they correspond to something concrete, something that is palpable to a certain point? Darwin rediscovered one of the greatest laws that govern our cosmos—rediscovered because some others prepared the way for him. Antiquity knew the law as it knew the movement of the earth around the sun and the precision of the equinoxes. It is found in the grand philosophical systems of India and under the obscure symbols of some of their sacred writings.

Question of Invisible Matter.

The disciples of Darwin hold that all organisms are the product of a natural genesis. But this theory is not admitted in all its rigor by all thinkers. Some make an exception in favor of the human spirit. These two views will ever remain irreconcilable and will never find a common ground for discussion if the universe contains such matter only as our hands can touch, our eyes see, our microscopes or telescopes distinguish in the infinitely small or the infinitely large. But our modern physicists have ventured to say as an hypothesis that our palpable, visible matter is only a condensation of a matter, less dense, that the last physical atom, the gaseous atom, is only dissolved in order to pass into other states which are called etheric. Thus is revived what seemed dead; the pater omnipotens ethers of Virgil, the grand ether. The Hindoos called it akasha, synthesis of ether, which they said was composed of five ethers; nay, seven, each more and more subtle.

Theory of Etheric Fluid.

Anaxagoras taught that the prototypes of everything, as of their elements, existed in the infinite ether where they were generated and to which they returned. Except for the first words this opinion reproduces that of a number of modern physicians. Dr. Richardson says this fluid penetrates everything. A world is built in the center of the etheric fluid and moves in an ocean of this fluid.

For the physicists there is no longer merely the chemical elements but also meta-elements, those which Sir William Crookes terms semi-material elements; minerals, chemical elements, meta-elements, neighboring on the etheric state, etheric atoms, without doubt of divers degrees; such it seems to him is the claim which connects the grosser matter with a primordial sumstance. This conception harmonizes perfectly with the law of evolution, which without it is incomplete.

Dissolution of Consciousness.

The actual progress of science, which always is a perpetual becoming, permits us to infer that if this human consciousness has at its disposal a vehicle less dense than that which is dissolved at death, it can persist after this dissolution without immediately entering the reservoir of cosmic energies. Even what we know of the permanence of energy in the atom, which never dissolves save to reincarnate, permits the hypothesis of a consciousness preserving its acquired force for a period which will last as long as the systems in which it evolves, time being only an arbitrary conception of our brains.

But if science succeeds in establishing this fluid vehicle, composed of matter in the theric plane, that furthermore our consciousness can function in it independently from the physical body in certain morbid states or states simply not yet classified, will it then have discovered a theory which never was formulated by our predecessors? Not at all, and it is this fact which lends value to the hypothesis.

Double Body Theory Is Old.

All the peoples of the world, from the savages to the most civilized, have admitted the existence of this vehicle, even when they did not profess full faith in our survival. Innumerable traditions have been gathered on this subject. Nearly all the peoples of antiquity and at the present time many of the nations outside our occidental civilization gave and give to the human body a double, often called the astral body, which carries its soul into another world. They call it visible. Some believe it triple in its nature. Thus thought the Hebrews. As for the Old Testament produced by numerous compilations, altered by passing through our European tongues, be it by the ignorance of the translators, be it by the desire to make it harmonize with more recent theological conceptions, it contains certain passages which, faithfully rendered, express the same belief. Man besides his physical body has a terrestrial spirit. Nephesa, a soul, neshamah, a divine spirit, rauch. (Job xxvii:2, 3.)

Egyptian Septuple Theory.

For India and Egypt man is septuple; but this division really corresponds to but four planes, physical, etheric, mental divine. They are: (1) physical body, (2) etheric double, (3) vital principle or solar energy, (4) animal soul or bodily desires, (5) intelligence, (6) spiritual soul, (7) mental divine.

The three first principles are dissolved at death in order to enter new aggregations separately, the etheric double following the corpse and slowly dissolving above the tomb, at the same time if it is cremated. The animal soul is dissolved in its turn more slowly. The intelligence or the Manes of the Hindoos serves then as the vehicle of the two others, awaiting the hour of reincarnation. The divine spirit alone would me immortal.

It is curious enough to note that these beliefs scattered through the sacred or philosophical writings of India reproduce the scientific theories of the involution and evolution of the elements. Buddhism, among others, was evolutionistic on a scale far vaster than that adopted by Darwin. Its Nirvana is not annihilation, as is thought, but a state through which the elements comprising the substratum of consciousness acquired by man passes in order to go to other cosmic destinies. And this conception is grandiose.

Then, however immaterial, the soul is a substance, for it is a substratum of qualities, teaches the Hindoo philosophy. It ceaselessly reincarnates, like everything in the universe, by its natural love of life. When the system in which it evolves is in repose it also enters into rest. After the days of Brahma, the night of Brahma. But the germs are only sleeping, and the hour of waking sounds. They then undertake a new evolution, or rather they pursue their evolution with all the qualities, all the energies acquired in the course of the minor evolutions which they have already undergone.

Soul Corporality of Greeks.

Greece remodeled according to its genius the ideas of India and Egypt. The doctrines of many of the Greek thinkers were received from Egypt and above all from India, passed to the Neo-platonic school of Alexandria, and exercised a great influence on the Jewish world, on the Pharisees and the Essenes, and that slightly before the coming of Christianity. We also find during the first centuries of the church the belief in the corporality of souls and that of reincarnation.

Many fathers of the church defended both. St. Irenaeus said that souls were not incorporal save by comparison with the grosser bodies of men. Tertullian said that the soul was of the same type in its form as the body of man. Tatian, St. Hillary, and St. Ambrose all taught that the soul was corporal.

There has been much discussion in the various churches on the resurrection of the flesh based on the words of the Apostle Paul. In speaking of the body sown corruptible which became incorruptible, he could not but have had in view the fluidic body; because he was a learned doctor, and, as we have said, the Neo-platonic ideas had penetrated Judea before Christianity. It is easy to show that these were the accepted beliefs in the New Testament and that Christ did not dispute them. They were rejected finally because of the ultra-materialistic interpretation put upon the resurrection of the flesh.

Soul Corporality and Church.

We find the belief most vivid during the first five centuries of our era. Lactance declared at the end of the third century that the idea of immortality implied that of pre-existence. Origen professed it openly. St. Jerome notices it in a letter to Demetrius. St. Augustine in his confessions says: "Have not I lived in another body before entering my mother's womb?"

These words are one of the last echoes in our occidental world of a truth anciently known, which will probably revive during the twentieth century. Because everything in nature reincarnates, it remains to prove that the consciousness acquired reincarnates also, as it certainly does in an impersonal way, as all the phenomena of heredity prove in all the kingdoms. But an individual consciousness, does it preserve an individual life through these mysterious changes to which its vehicles are submitted. The first step toward proving this is the existence of some etheric vehicle, which is now being demonstrated by means of psychical and hypnotic experiments.

Let us commence with telepathy. Just as wireless telegraphy requires a receiver and a transmitter, so the etheric atoms which transmit the vibrations of our thought require an etheric receiver. And we return to our hyper-physical vehicle interpenetrating our physical body which it informs concerning that which it knows more or less clearly and according to convictions which are still declared morbid. The ether is a register of primary force, not only of sounds but of images. Every particle of matter registers everything which it has passed, say Jevons and Babbage in the "Principles of Science."

Thoughts, ideas have an objective existence. Telepathy has nothing astonishing in it. It will suffice to acquaint ourselves with its mechanism, to perfect the transmitter and receiver and then to experiment with perseverance in order to obtain results more and more worthy of our confidence.

Heredity and the Etheric Fluid.

This etheric substance, according to Ed. Perrier, transmits hereditary qualities and explains what we term the human soul. This opinion resembles with irregular fidelity the views of the ancients, and we fairly have before us the mysterious vehicle which permits consciousness to survive the dead body. Is science going to give us a certainty, and will human thought, thirsting for immortality, know at last, that death is only one of the innumerable transformations of life?

The moment that physicists admit ether and a primordial substance whence have come the minerals through involution, they can admit states of etheric matter invisible to our physical sight and where forms can exist which are equally invisible. Organic life could have evolved from etheric elements. It would evolve ceaselessly because this subtle matter does not exist per se as experiments of chemists and physicists show. Of divers degrees of density, it penetrates all bodies. Man, composite like all bodies, would preserve throughout his cosmic evolution, his etheric double. Radio-activity is an index of it.

Nerve Phenomena as Proof.

Certain maladies of the nervous centers permit us to observe phenomena which seem to indicate the existence of a vehicle other than the dense body, and it is said that it is the true seat of our sensations and of our memory. The facts seem to imply the existence of hyperphysical senses. More than this, persons in normal health, among whom these senses are awakened in intervals or continuously, affirm that they see this vehicle and certain phenomena happening in the plane to which it belongs by its material constitution.

Nothing abnormal or supernatural can manifest in the universe, but we know only an infinite part of what it holds. In order that a fact shall be supernatural or abnormal it must come from outside the universe. However, although we know as yet but an infinitesimal part of that which the cosmos holds, man contains in himself in a potential state all its constituent elements, a microcosm of the macrocosm, just as the seed contains an entire organism, and he can understand all that it produces according to the measure of his progress.

Perhaps he is approaching the moment when he shall have discovered all that his senses can show him, and since he wishes to know more he must develop his hyperphysical senses, which we have seen already exist but are not manifested save among extremely rare individuals.

When one of these individuals wishes to make use of one of these senses he isolates his consciousness from the exterior world in order to obtain a vision, a bearing, a hyperphysical sensation. This would seem to indicate that in order to obtain these same faculties of perception we must try the same means; the extra lucid person who reads for you the scenes from your past life does so in no other way. All his consciousness is withdrawn from the physical senses and then you do not exist for her in the dense state.

Thoughts are Fluid.

Some rare individuals have a direct knowledge of this. This vehicle, or body, or layer of consciousness, has senses corresponding to the state of the matter in which it functions. Here is the reservoir wherein float the images and the forms of all that humanity has thought and thinks. We take a bit of it and remodel it and we impress it anew in the ether more indelibly than a picture, a statue, or a book.

These ideas are not new. Many Greek philosophers have defended them and before them the Hindoo philosophers. And the most advanced minds of our age begin to divine that the pendulum of the great clock of time, after having oscillated toward the west, turns again toward the east. More than this, they foresee that if the occidental thought and the oriental thought will some day unite their harmony will prepare a prodigious impetus to human consciousness.—Chicago Tribune, Sept. 17, 1905.

LAKE HELEN, FLORIDA.

Southern Cassadaga Camp-Meeting Association.

This prosperous association will hold its twelfth annual convention on its beautiful grounds overlooking Lake Colby (postoffice Lake Helen), beginning Feb. 4, 1906, and closing March 18. The camp is located 145 miles south of Jacksonville on the Atlantic and Western railroad, a branch of the Florida East Coast railroad—a line between New Smyrna and Orange City Junction.

Hotel Cassadaga on the grounds will be opened Nov. 1, 1905. Board and room from $7.50 to $8.50 per week.

There are now built and in construction some fifty cottages and public buildings. Light housekeeping rooms can be found in the Apartment House, at very moderate cost.

Mrs. A. M. Spencer furnishes table board at reasonable prices, the year round.

The public buildings are the Auditorium, the new entertainment, the store, Brigham Hall, Apartment House, Library, and Hotel.

The speakers and mediums engaged at this meeting are J. Clegg Wright, Carrie Tying, W. F. Peck, Laura G. Fixen and Carrie Curran.

Mr. Peck and his niece, Grace Hawtin, will lead in the singing, and Anna Duncan will preside at the organ.

The trumpet medium, Mrs. Bartholomew, will give seances. Other mediums are expected.

Dramatic entertainments, weekly dances, card parties are features of the camp.

After December 1, there will be meetings each Sunday in the Auditorium.

The association has put down a deep artesian well, from which pure water is pumped into a reservoir on Prospect Heights; our cottages and other buildings are supplied with running water, free from sulphur.

New cottages are going up outside the gates, to be occupied by coming campers; some of the cottages are to let. For information about cottages to let, write to Mrs. A. M. Spencer on the grounds.

For rooms in Apartment House, write to Mrs. J. D. Palmer, Willoughby, Ohio.

Charles Myers will meet travelers at the station and convey them and baggage to the camp, three-quarters of a mile.

Southern Cassadaga camp is a healthy location, 'mid pines, on elevated, dry, sandy soil, the air bracing from the resinous pines; jasmine is in bloom in February, mocking birds make the air musical in March, Drummond phlox carpets the fields and yards in early spring, orange groves are plenty within a mile of camp—one in sight. Fires for warmth are seldom needed, hence the expense for fuel is but a trifle.

My excursions begin October 6. The dates following on October 27, November 10 and 24, December 9 and 29, 1905, and January 9, 1906.

All these excursions by the Clyde Steamship Co., from New York City. Write me for low prices—circulars, folders, etc., (enclosing 4 cents in stamps for postage). Full information will be given. H. A. BUDINGTON.

THE GOD-IDEA.

How many expeditions men have sent
Toward the infinite to find their God,
And only found their own transcendent dreams!

These have they deified, and worshiped them,
And sacrificed according to their wealth
Of mind and treasure.

Savage, saint and sage
Have built a dream-God, like unto themselves
And with their best conceptions trimmed Him up
Fit to be Ruler of the Universe.

Man never yet has seen Him face to face;
For He is hidden in a labyrinth
Of His own laws, which He can never break,
Nor set aside for any man's appeal.

A QUERY AND ITS ANSWER

Concerning Apparitions of the Living.

"My husband is a traveling man. We are not congenial. He is absent most of the time. An apparition comes to me, during his absence, in every particular identical with him. I see the form plainly and hear every word it speaks. Its stock of knowledge, phraseology, gestures, color of hair, eyes, etc., are an exact duplication of my husband. When I tell him of the affair he says I am crazy and admonishes me to keep still about the whole thing, because there is no foundation for such hallucinations. I want you to tell me how to get rid of the delusion, if such it be, for I am not ready for Kankakee just yet, and I will certainly land there if this thing continues. I am not a believer in witchcraft or any other superstition."

The foregoing is, in part, a letter received by me a few days ago. Believing it to be of interest to your readers I have taken the liberty to subjoin it, and to make a few suggestions as to the probable cause of my friend's experience.

The first and most likely answer would be that she herself is correct in her diagnosis. It probably is a spirit. Considering the easy access an excarnate spirit has to the mind of the living and its power to improvise or create forms out of the matter of the spirit world, I would not be at all surprised to find the supposition correct.

On the other hand, it could be the projected double of the husband. It is not necessary that the person whose apparition hangs about a place should be dead. There are many living people whose "ghosts" are seen about the places where they formerly lived. An intense desire to be at a certain place sometimes creates a form so dense as to be visible to any one who has the slightest touch of clairvoyance. I once heard a reputable man, who was formerly a minister, tell about meeting his own double at the altar where he was holding divine services. He said that his own phantom, when he ascended the rostrum, was occupying his parochial chair.

It is said that each intense thought, beneficent or maleficent, may haunt a house or locality. The ghost will have its clearness and duration in exact proportion to the dynamic interest of the thought. It is probable, too, that the husband, being, as the letter elsewhere relates, of a prying, suspicious nature, finds himself inadvertantly at his home as soon as he falls asleep. His consciousness would then be focused in his astral body. In such an event, distance would be no barrier.

Again, the entity that my correspondent sees, converses with, etc., may be a creature of her own begetting. Memory reconstructs out of matter of the mental plane objects formerly contacted. This is known as re-collection, and is called subjective creation; but if we come down to a closer analysis we find that objective and subjective things are alike the result of imagination. When we see an objective thing, that thing does not enter our eye, but its picture appears in our mind. If we look at a subjective image, whether it is the outgrowth of our own thinking or caused by the act of another person or thing, we perceive the image produced in our mind; and thus you see that in both instances we can perceive nothing except that which impinges on our mind. Everything, external as well as internal, is in consciousness. The within and the without, paradoxical as it may seem, are one.

When we think of a thing or person, an objective form of that thing or person appears in our mind. By concertive practice, voluntarily or involuntarily, we gain power to hold on to that thing and we can project it upon the mind of others. If we are partially clairvoyant we can so project this mental image as to bring it into visual range of ourselves, and it is not unusual in such cases for the creator of the image to endow it with all the intellectual and other attributes of the model of which it is only a pattern. This capacity of creating a clear mental image and projecting it upon the mental horizon of another person is one of the fundamentals of thought-transference.

The remedy for divesting oneself of haunting creatures, no matter of what source or origin, lies in our own hands. I can give no better recipe than that of Miss Nora Batchelor, which appeared in The Progressive Thinker recently. Read her article closely and it will give all the information necessary.

A FORTUNATE PREMONITION.

Did Not Some kind Guardian Spirit Inspire the Dream?

As psychic phenomena are being so freely discussed in scientific circles, some reader may be interested in the following story, which is literally true:

In 1862 two brothers, north of Ireland men were in Valencia, Spain, engaged in growing and shipping fruit for a house in Maiden Lane, London, England. Previously the younger had been a newspaper reporter in the city of Londonderry, Ireland, and while there had made the acquaintance of a young woman to whom he became engaged. The time was approaching for the marriage, and it was necessary for him to make a long voyage to reach the home of his fiancee. The marriage day was set, and he had engaged his passage in a certain ship. Before the date of sailing his elder brother dreamed that he saw the vessel with his brother on board move out to sea. Without any apparent cause she suddenly careened and turned bottom upward.

The dreamer smiled at the vision, dismissed it from his practical mind, and was soon fast asleep again. He would doubtless have never given it a second thought had it not occurred exactly in the same form in each of the two succeeding nights. It then so impressed his mind that he concluded to tell his brother and persuade him to postpone his trip and sail by the next boat. The ship of the dream was lost on her voyage, and all on board perished.

The brother sailed the following week, reached Londonderry, the home of his bride, and was married on March 10, 1862. In the meantime the elder brother had written to his sister in Dublin telling her his dream and explaining that their brother had postponed his voyage as the result of it, and his letter reached the sister much to her relief, for she had already learned through the public press of the loss of the ship, on which she supposed her brother had perished.

Was this dream the result of a disordered brain, or can it be explained on religious or scientific grounds?

REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342R, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

DEATH ITS MEANING and Results.

By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting narrative relating a series of wonderful psychic manifestations occurring in the writer's experience. Cloth, Illustrated, $1.25.

The Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake

This fascinating Book by the well-known Author and Scholar,

HON. A. B. RICHMOND,

Should be in the hands of every Spiritualist in the land. It is based on a historical fact, but through the narrative is woven a psychic web of thought in the style so natural to the great criminal lawyer that one can feel the author's very presence during its perusal. It is certainly interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

In the World Celestial

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance medium, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness.

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

President Bowles of the National Liberal League, says: "It is one of the choicest pieces of literature of this marvelous age of books."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

Talleyrand's Letter to the Pope.

This work will be found especially interesting to all who would desire to make a study of Romanism and the Bible. The historic facts stated, and the keen, scathing review of Romish ideas and practices should be read by all. Price 25 cents.

THUMBSCREW AND RACK.

Torture implements employed in the 15th and 16th centuries for the promulgation of Christianity, with pictorial illustrations. By George E. Macdonald. Price, 10 cents.

ORIGIN OF SPECIES.

By means of natural selection, or the preservation of favored race in the struggle for life. By Charles Darwin. Gilt top, cloth bound. This book is the grandest achievement of modern scientific thought and research. It has passed through many editions in English, has been translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and has been the subject of more reviews, pamphlets and separate books than any other volume of the age. Most of the great scientists of the age fully support his position. The thought of this book has become a part of the common inheritance of the race. For sale at this office. Price 75 cts.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

THE SUNFLOWER CLUB.—Henrietta L. Lichtig, corresponding secretary writes: "The ladies of the Sunflower Club will give a tea party, Tuesday, Sept. 26, from 2 to 5 p. m., in their room, Lincoln Hall, Fraternity Building, 70 East Adams street. Tea 10 cents a cup. For every cup you buy you will receive a reading. Come and bring your friends. Chicago's leading mediums belong to the Sunflower Club and will preside at the tables."

Notice to Spiritualists:—The ex-priest, P. A. Seguin, well known among the Spiritualists, has a large house in Minneapolis, where rooms can be gotten by married couples, four large rooms, and also by single people in three smaller rooms, at the rate of 50 cents each occupant for one night, and besides giving meals at 25 cents each—all of which is considered cheap in Minneapolis. Street cars pass Mary's Place, the location of the Unitarian church, at the door of the Working Girl's Home, managed by P. A. Seguin and his good wife. Write at once for applications, to P. A. Seguin, 1500 5th street So., Minneapolis, Minn.

A Boston scientist says that hypnotism can develop only natural instincts and that the best hypnotist in the world cannot make a really moral person do wrong. From experiments he has made he believes that 75 per cent of the human race, if unrestrained by family pride and other like considerations, would steal.

Dr. S. Clay Markley writes: "I would like to suggest that Mrs. Clara Watson of Jamestown, N. Y., is the right person and best fitted to be president of the N. S. A."

G. S. Klock, secretary, writes: "The State Spiritualist Association of Nebraska will convene at Lincoln, on Tuesday, October 10, at 8 o'clock p. m., in the office of the secretary, 2900 P street, when an adjournment will be taken to convene again October 14, at 8 p. m., for the ratification of the work of the officers in the past year, and to set a date for the election of officers. All true Spiritualists are requested to be present at the ratification, as a good time is anticipated."

A. C. Nunbson writes from Superior, Wis.: "Herewith please find $1 for one more year's subscription to your dear Progressive Thinker, my twelfth year, I think, and if I live as many more years—I am 62—I must keep it before me as my guide. There can not be any danger of The Progressive Thinker dying out as long as the progressive spirit of our champion worker, Mr. Francis, stands at the helm."

Claire and Agnes Tuttle, who have recently been the guests of Mrs. Marian Carpenter at her delightful home in Detroit, Mich., write that Mrs. Carpenter has been highly successful in her camp work this summer, pleasing the large audiences for two weeks at Lake Brady, Ohio, Haslett Park, Grand Ledge, and Grand Rapids, Mich. The last two Sundays of September she will serve a society at Columbus, Ohio, where she has many friends. She is a winning speaker who draws well.

Mr. John W. Ring, National Superintendent of Lyceum Work, lectured in Conneaut and Ashtabula, Ohio, the first two Sundays in September. The attendance was all that could be expected for the beginning of the season, as all attention and energy had been centered at Lily Dale, the great camp of the central east. He was at Titusville, Pa., where the society owns a lovely temple and are doing a good work with the adults and young people as well. Mr. Ring will be in Indiana the latter part of September, and comes to Chicago for the first two Sundays of October. After a short stay in Milwaukee, Wis., he will attend the National Convention to be held in Minneapolis, Minn., where he has a very interesting report to make of the lyceum work during the year just past.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

GEORGIA GLADYS COOLEY IS NOW READY TO MEET HER FRIENDS AND PATRONS IN PRIVATE WORK AT HER RESIDENCE, 567 EAST 62ND STREET. SHE WILL BEGIN HER PUBLIC WORK ABOUT OCTOBER 1. WATCH THE PAPER FOR LOCATION OF HALL, ETC.

THE CHICAGO SPIRITUALISTS LEAGUE.—H. F. Arnold writes: "The next public meeting of the Chicago Spiritualists League will be held in Handel Hall, 40 East Randolph street, on Saturday evening, October 7. Our speaker for the evening is Mr. John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas, one of the most eloquent and forcible speakers upon the Spiritualistic platform. The message bearers will be Mrs. Isa Cleveland, Mrs. C. Schwahn, Mrs. Dr. Caird, and Dr. Burgess. An excellent musical program is being arranged. Let every Spiritualist in Chicago be present and enjoy the good things in store for them."

Georgia Gladys Cooley is now located in her new home, at 567 East 62nd street, Chicago, where she will be pleased to meet her friends and patrons between 10 and 4 o'clock daily, with the exception of Saturdays and Sundays. Readings given outside of those hours by special appointment only. She anticipates opening public meetings in the near future. Watch for further notice.

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "The Rising Sun Mission will have for its speaker on Sunday afternoon and evening, October 1, Mr. John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas. Brother Ring is Superintendent of Lyceum Work of the National Spiritualist Association. An able orator and forceful lecturer. Don't miss this treat and come early to get good seats. Brother Ring will also lecture on Wednesday evening, October 4, at the home of President Kirchner, 22 Jackson Place, between Jackson Blvd. and Van Buren street, west of Hoyne avenue. Come and hear some spiritual truths. All Welcome. Those who attended the afternoon meeting Sunday-Sept. 17, of the Rising Sun Mission were well repaid for their visit, as we had with us Brother H. M. French. He will be with us again in the early part of October. Brother Thompson also gave some grand demonstrations. In the evening Dr. J. H. Randall delivered one of his forceful lectures. Mrs. Dr. Caird of Lynn, Mass., gave a number of tests through automatic writing, a phase of mediumship which she has thoroughly developed, which was demonstrated by the quick recognition of those who received them. Our sister will be with us for a few more Sundays we are glad to state. We cordially invite all to attend our services Sunday afternoon at 3 and evenings at 8 o'clock, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western avenue. Our next social will be held at Sister Kepner's home, Saturday evening, Sept. 30. Address 285 Walnut street, near Leavitt street. An elegant time was had at the social given for the benefit of the Rising Sun temple fund, by Sister Sinn, at her beautiful home 515 E. Fullerton avenue, on Saturday evening, Sept. 16."

J. P. M. writes from Wichita, Kans.: "The Independent Spiritualists are enjoying an intellectual feast. Mrs. E. J. Jaquet, so well known in Chicago, spoke to a large and appreciative audience Sunday evening, Sept. 10. After the lecture, 'Sunbeam' took control, and not only charmed her hearers, but gave the most convincing tests that have been heard in that hall, or any other for that matter, for many a day. The comments on both lecture and tests have been of a highly complimentary nature, and no medium ever in this city has attracted the attentions bestowed on Mrs. Jaquet. How long she will remain with us, she is unable to say at present. She is in demand for circles in the city, and several calls from distant points are awaiting her decision."

J. Raber writes: "The Elkhart, Ind., Spiritual Society is now regularly chartered in the state association, and is striving hard to hold aloft the banner of Spiritualism. It invites the cooperation of all friends of the cause in this city and surrounding country. Oscar E. Edgerly has been engaged as speaker for the first three Sundays in October. There will be a meeting in the morning and one in the evening on each Sunday; also a test seance during each week. Come out and encourage us with your presence."

Henrietta L. Lichtig writes: "The spacious parlors of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Francis were crowded with the ladies of the Sunflower Club and their friends, Wednesday evening, Sept. 13. Everybody was at their best, and a general good time was had. The evening's entertainment was so diversified one was kept wondering what was coming next. The ladies are proving themselves excellent entertainers and their friends are anxiously awaiting their next. Among their out-of-town guests were Miss Elizabeth Harlow of Columbus, Ohio, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, Mrs. Dr. Caird of Lynn, Mass., and Mrs. DeWolf Kiser of Iowa."

H. Smith writes: "Sunday evening at Van Buren Opera House, the Spiritual Society Students of Nature was greeted with a large audience to listen to the subject, 'Appeal to the Pious, and Divorcement,' delivered by the pastor. The assistant, Dr. L. C. Koehler, gave an instructive, soul-stirring discourse that was heartily applauded. Messages were given by Mrs. Schumacher. The young people expressed themselves as satisfied. We as a society feel repaid in our success."

We are sorry to say that Mr. Edgerly's present engagement with us concludes with Sunday, Sept. 24, but we shall try to arrange to have him with us again later in the season. We expect the Jackson people will patronize the Grand Ledge camp-meeting very largely next year, for we are all delighted to know that Mr. Edgerly has been re-engaged to act as chairman there again next year."

Benson Gray writes from Jackson, Mich.: "The guides of our present speaker, Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly, continue to give us grand and uplifting discourses. The two lectures of Sunday, Sept. 17, it seems to us, would have almost done credit to an Ingersoll.

J. L. Foster writes: Mrs. F. V. Jackson is attending the Progressive Spiritualists society at Elwood, Ind., and will answer calls in a reasonable distance through the week, to attend societies, marriages or funerals."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Dr. Peebles is coming to Chicago to speak for the League, Saturday evening, Nov. 4, and he will speak for the Rising Sun Mission, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 5, and in the evening for the Aitken Society, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue.

Mrs. M. A. Merrell writes: "I really cannot do without your valuable paper. I am glad to know that it is so largely circulated."

Mrs. Alfred Olson writes from Sabine Pass., Tex.: "You will find enclosed money order for $1 to pay for the renewal of my subscription to The Progressive Thinker for another year, as I see my time is about up. If there is any one who would like to have The Progressive Thinker, but is unable to pay for it, if such an one will make it known to me I will see that they get the paper."

Joseph Griffen of Alexandria, La., expresses his great appreciation of the six Premium Books he ordered.

Church of the Soul Communion meets every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., in Lincoln Park Lodge Hall, 869 N. Clark street, opposite main entrance to Lincoln Park. Lecture, tests and messages at each meeting. R. S. Ray, pastor.

John W. Ring lectured last week at Waldron, Ind. He creates a lively interest wherever he lectures. He will be in Chicago October 1, and will remain several days, and deliver two or three lectures.

Correspondent writes: "The Spiritual Alliance Society, 3514 Vincennes avenue, corner Cottage Grove avenue, are holding some very interesting meetings every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m. We are pleased to find our hall well filled with strangers, seeking the truth. We are enjoying some very interesting lectures through Mrs. Elmo by her guides, as well as messages from the other side. Every Wednesday evening, a test and reading seance is given by 'Blue Bell,' Mrs. Elmo's guide and message giver. Every Saturday evening we hold a social and invite you all to come and enjoy yourselves. Remember that Mrs. Elmo's residence and assembly hall is in the same building."

G. H. Brooks lectured for the Spiritual Science Society of Rockford, Ill., for the two last Sundays of September. He speaks in Milwaukee, Wis., in Severance Hall, Milwaukee street., near Niseon street, the Sundays of October, and perhaps longer. He does not as yet know what his permanent address in Milwaukee will be, but letters and telegrams sent to his home address, 114 President street, Wheaton, Ill., will reach him.

Rolla Stubbs writes from Long Lake, Minn.: "The good work of building up true Spiritualism is progressing finely here. The Minnetonka Spiritualist Association has had a number of good workers the past season. As we have a temple and home of our own now where we entertain them, we find conditions much better. In July we had that pioneer worker and inspirational speaker, Mrs. S. M. Lowell of Anoka. For thirty years she has been doing a good work in upbuilding true Spiritualism. In August we had Mrs. A. Talcott of Minneapolis, a splendid inspirational speaker and test medium. The poems given through her from spirit side of life are excellent. She is a thorough worker for the cause. On the 16th and 17th we had with us that venerable old worker, Moses Hull, president of the Morris Pratt Institute. He is a teacher instead of a preacher. His meetings were well attended and all felt that his lectures were great and good. Besides our home talent we expect to have others with us during the fall and winter months."

Alice Turbett writes: "The Band of Harmony gave a reception to the pastor, Mrs. Richmond, upon her return from the camps, Thursday, Sept. 21, afternoon and evening, with addresses of welcome from members and friends. The christening of Mr. and Mrs. Brunton's infant son was one of the features of the evening. Poetical readings by the pastor were also enjoyable. Music by Chicago's soloist, Miss Ariel Nichols."

The Lake View Spiritual Union announce that their Sunday afternoon meetings have been resumed. Meetings are held at 3 o'clock at Wells' Hall, 1629 N. Clark street, corner Fletcher street. Conducted by Dr. and Mrs. C. A. Wickland. Friends and co-workers are cordially invited to assist.

Bertha Wiers writes: "We of Elyria, Ohio, are still in the ring, and dealing out spiritual unfoldment. We have elected the following officers for the coming year: F. W. Martin, president; C. D. Van-Hoesen, first vice-president; J. M. Wooldridge, second vice-president; A. F. Reinke secretary and treasurer. The above officers and F. H. Davis, Harry Farrell and Tom Henson were elected trustees. Our society is in very good condition, having enrolled several new members in the past few months, and we hope to make next year one of the best since its organization."

President Hassmann writes: "The announced opening services of the incorporated society, North Star Spiritual Union, were held with a large attendance at its hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, on Sunday, Sept 3. A fine lecture was delivered by Koehler, Rev. P. M. Esser, the regular speaker of this society, being absent. The second spiritual meeting was held with many investigators of Spiritualism. Dr. Esser was at his post and held the audience spellbound with his lecture on the Spiritual Unfoldment of the Human Race. His oriental guide has promised rare revelations during the winter season. Come and attend the regular course of lessons. Mrs. Johanna Rennau was also very good in demonstrating spirit return and communication in tests. The society has also purchased a fine concert organ to bring the people in a harmonious state. Healing and flowers free at every meeting; also The Progressive Thinker is not forgotten. It is sold at every meeting. Come and attend; we do the rest. Sundays, 8 p. m."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "On Sept. 10, the Hyde Park Occult Society, was entertained by a lecture from that gifted lady, Mrs. Eva Fravel of Austin. The subject was taken from a song that was song which was 'Tyranny Must Fall.' She handled it fine and left the impression that we should assert our own individuality and not be controlled by the tyranny of others. On Sept. 17, we had with us Mr. H. M. French, who for the past few years has been doing some good work in Ohio. He gave us a fine discourse from the Bible that did us all good. He lectures under control and gave full satisfaction to the audience. On Sept. 28, we have our opening of a series of social dances, which we will keep up on Thursday evening of each week. Norton will furnish the music. Admission will be 25 cents, including refreshments."

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, Oct. 1, 1905: "Riches About Us."

Gem of Thought:

Let us find and hold the riches,
Strewn about us everywhere;
Nature's fulness, joy and pleasure,
Here and now, not over there.

If with cheer we take each lesson,
And enjoy the fruit that's given,
Earth will be a place of gladness,
And to-day we'll live in heaven.

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Wm. C. Lee writes: "Angels bless you and yours for the stand you have taken the past year, in one of the best papers published, and good is being felt under the surface of public opinion. Soon the bonds will burst, and then, hurrah for spirit intercourse!"

D. G. Hill writes: "Circumstances over which your correspondent had no control prevented him from giving to the readers of your valuable paper notice of the meetings of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society on Sunday, Sept. 10. I wish to say that the afternoon service took the usual course of short talks and messages, and in the evening a very large audience greeted the speaker, Mrs. De Wolf Kiser, who held the close attention of her many friends and the strangers as she so forcibly presented the truths of Spiritualism, assisted by that other veteran worker, Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner. In talk and messages, these with our home workers making a most enjoyable time for all. Sunday, Sept. 17, was another day given to the same work, with short talks by Dr. Koehler, Jas E. Coe, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, Mrs. Nora E. Hill and others, and for the evening owing to the failure of the expected speaker, W. L. Snell, to be present, Mrs. Nora E. Hill held the rostrum and gave one of her telling lectures, followed with messages by Mrs. Kittie Gifford and Mrs. Alice Sexsmith, the accuracy of which brought the truth we are trying to teach close to the hearts of the people. Our speaker for Sunday evening, Oct. 1, will be Mrs. Nora E. Hill. Our open door plan of meeting seems to please, as evidenced by our large and growing attendance, and it certainly is gratifying to the society and we shall continue in the future as in the past, to make these meetings what we claim for them, Spiritualist meetings. At the old place, O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street, between Washington Blvd and Park avenue. All Welcome."

Mrs. B. F. Allen writes of the good work being done at Pittsburg, Pa., by Mrs. Margaret Gaule-Redinger.

T. Spangler writes that the interest in Spiritualism is increasing in Pittsburg, Kansas.

C. A. Sollinger writes: "Dedication of Fullerton street Spiritual Temple, between Broadway and Marceline avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 1, 1905. Doors open to all." Services will be held morning, afternoon and evening. Fred D. Dunakin, president of O. S. A., and Dell A. Herrick will officiate in English; C. A. Sollinger in German; Miss Edna Grant, the spiritual nightingale, of Conneaut, Ohio, soloist; Prof L. Quedenfend and his three sons will furnish the musical program; other speakers and good mediums will be present. Lunch will be served at the temple. Everyone, far and near, is invited to attend."

Marguerite Mac writes: "On Thursday evening Sept. 28, Mrs. M. A. Burland will hold her regular monthly sociable in her parlors at 3019 Vernon avenue. Prof. Leon and other good psychics always present to give spirit messages and tests, and palmists to read the lines in your hands, so all have a good time. Our hostess always serves some dainty refreshments, all for the small sum of 25 cents."

H. D. Morgan writes: "W. J. Colville has been secured by the First Association of Spiritualists of Washington, D. C., for the month of October. Services every Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:45 p. m., at Masonic Temple. Mr. Colville will also give a course of 20 afternoon lectures at the residence of Dr. Alice Harvey Butts, 1402 L. street, N. W., on special topics, and a course of twelve evening lectures at 402 A street S. E."

Sylvia Carey writes: "The ladies of the Kenwood Spiritual Society will give a Harvest Festival and dance on Friday evening, Sept. 29, at Kenwood Hall, 4308-10 Cottage Grove avenue. Refreshments served in banquet hall. Music by Reed's Orchestra; wardrobe free. Come and bring your friends. We will insure you a good time. We hope to see all of our old friends and many new ones on this occasion. Come and be royally entertained."

Maggie Henry writes: "Sunday, Sept. 17, at (old 77) Spiritual Mission Chapel we had a very fine meeting. A large and intellectual audience. Our speaker, F. M. Stoller, read for the scripture lesson a portion of the 28th chapter of I. Samuel, where King Saul visited the Woman of Endor (a medium). After a few remarks he took up the questions and answered them all in an interesting manner. We had with us again our musician and test medium, Madame Lucile DeLoux, who will be with us every Sunday, now that she has returned to the city. She favored us with spirit messages, and I think Mr. Stoller answered a personal question for every one in the audience, as well as giving a number of psychometric readings. Strangers and investigators welcome at our meetings, at 8 p. m. every Sunday."

FRANKLIN CAMP, NEB.

Closing of a Very Successful Season.

We have closed one of the most successful camp-meetings ever held at this place. At first the outlook was anything but encouraging. Before opening our camp two orthodox camp-meetings were held in the grove, also a county fair, close by; these together with a heavy fall of rain on the 4th and 5th, made it seem as if our efforts would be futile. On the 6th, however, the weather changed and the welcome sunshine peered through the trees, while the leaves threw off the rain drops, making nature weep while she smiled with promise of success and harmony for the remaining eleven days.

The workers who had gathered around the camp-fire during the storm, with sedate countenances, came forth now, with beaming faces and merry repartee upon their lips. One could hear the ringing laughter of the ladies mingled with the bass and heartfelt tones of their gentlemen companions, all of whom were determined to cause the old grove to reverberate with the good cheer and harmony, felt by every one present.

The dining tent every morning resounded with good cheer, good food and merry-making, intellectual discourse and harmony that challenged the aid of the gods in bringing about success. The lines of attraction were laid to every town in the vicinity of the camp. People poured in from every direction, until each worker had all he or she could attend to. C. H. Moody was appointed chairman of the meetings; everything was kept in order, and harmony prevailed everywhere.

His courteous attention to the workers, and kind address to the public, won for him the highest esteem, which made the good-byes at parting with him and his estimable wife, be felt deeply by us all.

Mrs. E. M. Hull of Kansas, who is a highly cultured lady, interested her audience with historical readings and comic character illustrations, that pleased everyone; she did not remain during the last week of camp, duties calling her home, to the regret of all.

Mrs. Bessie Bellman, from Howard, Kansas, an inspirational speaker, delighted her audience with historical and biblical illustrations and citations from leading authorities, together with her graceful appearance and perfect delivery, she wins the hearts of her hearers. There is not a more competent nor attractive speaker on the spiritual rostrum; she will always receive a hearty welcome whenever she returns to us in the future.

Mr. E. F. Barrows, who is a simple reader and medium, has no peer in his line of work, which is individualized; he never fails to give perfect satisfaction to those who seek spiritual counsel and communion with their departed ones. He is one of the rare gems on earth and should be more widely known.

Rev. E. E. McCarthy, from Denver, Colorado, is an elderly lady with gray hair, but her bright intellect and ready wit wins every one. She has no equal in the lecture field, her batteries aimed towards the enemy's lines, are ablaze with intellectual fire, with which she slays all opposition, never ceasing till the work is finished and she has won a victory for Spiritualism, which she seems to prize above all else. When giving messages from the rostrum she keeps her audience laughing and weeping alternately. This lady can occupy the rostrum for two hours and still they cry for more. She is a student of the occult and we confess, through the knowledge thus obtained, she has developed wonderful powers. Her address is 1242 Curtis street, Denver, Col. Mr. E. F. Barrows' address is Franklin, Neb.

We would like to relate an incident of rare mediumship.

A gentleman from Montana who had recently come to Franklin on private business, brought with him a skull of an Indian woman, which bore a remarkable history of twenty years' standing. Not one person present knew anything regarding it but himself and some friends who came with him. The skull was well wrapped in a newspaper, which excluded every trace of form; it was placed in the circle, on the ground, the mediums were told there was a history connected with the bundle which they were asked to solve. Miss McCarthy rose quickly to her feet, after slapping the parcel several times, took it, placed it on her head; her hair being done up in pompadour style, the parcel was light and didn't seem to fit, yet the lady placed it there, talking all the time in Indian dialect and manipulating the light parcel till it remained where she placed it; then she hurried back and forth as if frightened, suddenly she gasped as if in pain, caused by some concussion and fell to the ground as if dying. She said "I am killed," and then seemed to get a hatchet showing how her limbs were cut from her body by some one who left her to die. She wanted some one to find a small tin box which she lost in the struggle, that contained the secret of her persecution and death. Mr. Barrows finished the scene by dancing a war dance, hanging the Indian that murdered the young Indian woman.

The gentleman related the story as far as he knew, which corroborated what the medium had disclosed. It was the first time they had ever witnessed anything of this nature and they were astonished and convinced by the tests they received. No secrets can be hidden from a true sensitive.

Mr. J. D. Reeves with his wife and beautiful daughter Alther, furnished the music during the time of camp. Their home is in Asherville, Kans.

In closing we wish to say to the friends, that after two years' disaster from fire and flood, we are yet in hopes that the fires kindled in this center of spiritual education will not be allowed to go out. The grand work done here this year by our noble workers, who put forth every effort to give the camp a new start, will be followed by financial aid, so that the camp will live to kindle anew each year, the hope of spiritual development in the hearts of those who are seeking truth from within.

There will probably be a new management, as myself and wife will retire from the labors necessary to sustain a camp, to enjoy the spiritual rest among those of our friends who will attend next time, and let younger and stronger people, of whom we have many, take our places. Whatever is done, however, for the welfare of the camp, which is somewhat in debt, will be published in The Progressive Thinker.

FRANKLIN CAMP.

Meeting and Overcoming Opposing Obstacles.

We are just in the close of a rather unusual experience in the history of this once very successful camp. It seems within the last few years both the elements and opposing thought of the vicinity have combined to hinder the influence of the advance thought sent forth from this center of evolutionary education, yet strange to say we believe the camp will live and flourish, and yet will shelter under its magnificent old trees the forms of those noble souls who sacrificed so much in coming here, from different parts of the country in order to pour out their grand thoughts that will vibrate through endless time, meeting in sweet intonations the spiritual demands of many who are yet to come upon the stages of material experiences.

When we arrived here after a short but tedious journey from the Delphos, Kansas Camp, the weather had changed from 95, falling to 50 degrees in twelve hours, remaining low two days, when it commenced raining, water falling steadily and heavily for forty-eight hours. Not very encouraging outlook for either the management or workers. One whole week was spent without any visible good results. The weather cleared, however, and the sun came forth with warming rays to cheer us, and we soon observed the white dresses and gay hats of the young girls approaching, together with spanking teams and carriages well groomed, bringing happy, smiling faces, and for us best of all, well filled pocketbooks. Our circles were well filled and each lecture well attended; collections liberal and to-day, the last Friday of the camp, we look forward with much hope and enthusiasm to a successful closing.

Hoping each friend who reads these hastily written lines will send out to this camp thoughts of success and financial recognition, so that not even one of our centers will be overcome by opposition. We need them all, and let us demand that Camp Franklin will live to continue the noble work it has started. We also wish to say a few words in honor of the grand old gentleman and his good wife, Mr. and Mrs. Hawes, who have with herculean effort stood firm to their post, while the enmity of the gods worked to unfold more power and illumination, that will still resist the opulence of money and creeds that surround this camp. May the Infinite spirit of truth bless and protect them in their declining years.

BOOK REVIEW.

A Dweller on Two Planets, or the Dividing of the Way. By Phylos the Thibetan. Baumgardt Publishing Co., Los Angeles, Cal. Cloth, $2.

This book is remarkable for the manner of its composition and the nature of its contents. We cannot give a better idea of it, than quote these descriptive words:

The initial chapters open with a description of Atlantean times, 12,000 years ago, and vividly depict that age of the world, startling the reader with the almost unavoidable conclusion that in art, science, religion, social customs and all other things of which we to-day are so proud, those ancients were not merely our equals, but our superiors. How many of these things were lost, and how, to-day—towards what is almost universally believed to be the end of a grand cyclic period, perhaps indeed of the world itself—these lost marvels of nature's hidden forces and secrets are to be re-discovered, are so being, indeed. And here, for many, will be the chief charm of this book; that in the nineteen years since it was written many of its amazing prophecies have been most startlingly verified, as for example, the X-ray, wireless telegraphy and hundreds of lesser marvels, a man's belief in which in 1886 would have been title to life in a mad-house. And witness this marvel of to-day, April 20, 1899: "Axell Orling gave a private demonstration in London yesterday of his marvelous invention of steering a vessel by transmission of motor force by waves of light similar to the X-ray, the force being transmitted through two walls interposed." Yet "A Dweller on Two Planets" contains the forecast of this marvel, though written in 1886. One reads of yet greater wonders to be re-discovered, and feels that they will also come to pass because so much that was pure prophecy in 1886 has already been realized.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mr. Birdsell Manley, eighty years young, fifty-five years married to Elizabeth Morley Manley and a life-long resident of Andover, Ohio, passed to spirit life Sept. 9, 1905. Mr. Manley had enjoyed the knowledge afforded by Spiritualism for more than thirty-five years, and with his companion looked forward to the passing with certainty. The funeral was held Monday afternoon. Mr. John Wallace, a friend of the family, made an address such as one friend can make of another when the hand of the angel of a higher life has reached forth. A select choir rendered appropriate songs from the Spiritual Harp, and Mr. John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas, conducted the service at house and grave. A large crowd of representative citizens were present and enjoyed the spiritual discourse.

Passed to spirit life, John W. Dibble, aged 74 years. He had been a Spiritualist for many years. By his special request Frank T. Ripley was called to officiate at his funeral. He was loved and greatly respected by his neighbors in Boswell and the adjoining towns. He was a great reader of The Progressive Thinker. By his will, which was read, he left for Spiritualism quite a sum. The front yard of his home was thronged with friends and neighbors. The Masonic order performed the service at the grave. COR.

HIMALYA
(THE KOLA COMPOUND)
The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific, proving that HAY-FEVER
—AND—
ASTHMA can be CURED.
Mr. W. H. Kelley, 317 46th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma by Himalya, after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Closson, 128 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes, Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. P. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.
Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write today to the Kola Importing Co., 1165 Broadway, New York.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been ringing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

Heroes and Hero Worship, and the Heroic in History. The Hero

Dr. Henry Slade.

He Has Passed to the Realm of Souls.

BECAUSE DR. SLADE IS DEAD.

But Now Still More Alive Than Ever, the Secular Press Paints His Earth Life White or Black, Just as the Mood Takes the Writer, Without the Least Regard for the Absolute Truth —After Reading These Extracts, See What the Editor-at-Large, Hudson Tuttle, Has to Say.

Lockport, N. Y.—Henry Slade, the great slate-writing medium who achieved fame and fortune, died at a sanitarium in Belding, Mich. There is no one to claim the body. Slade was a former Niagara county resident, born in Johnson's Creek. He spent the early years of his life there, and was always gifted with the strange power which in later years brought his name into prominence among Spiritualists.

Mr. Slade was the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Slade of Johnson's Creek. He attended the district school there and on more than one occasion he startled the students and the teacher by the strange phenomena which he produced. As he grew older his power increased and when 18 years old he was known as one of the foremost Spiritualistic mediums. He went to New York and other large cities, and became so well known that for a time he could not handle the crowds that come to see him.

He made a speciality of slate-writing, and so great did his reputation become that he was invited by some of the crowned heads of Europe to appear before them and demonstrate his strange power. Slade made a tour of the world, appearing before every crowned head of note. When he returned to the United States he was a wealthy man. He was entertained by royalty in a lavish manner, and the emperor of Prussia kept him at the royal palace for six weeks. Napoleon III. presented Slade with a valuable diamond.

The residents of Johnson's Creek never tire of talking of Slade and his strange deeds. When but 19 he was able to cause a table with a lighted lamp on it to turn on its edge without upsetting the lamp. This was done while Slade was five feet from the table, and no part of his body touching it. Another feat of Slade's was to place his hand six inches above a piano and cause the piano to raise from the floor. He was able to get slate-writing from some of the most noted persons that had departed this life. Slade was the inventor of of slate-writing in gold. He used to place two slates together and, breaking a small piece of slate pencil, place it between the slates, then, holding the slates in his hand, one could hear the pencil skipping around between the slates. In a few moments a message from some departed friend would be received. Slade conceived the idea of having the slate writing appear in golden letters. He caused a gold watch to be placed on top of the slates between his hands and when the slates were opened the writing was a bright golden color. There are many slates in existence in this city which were written on through the power of this noted Spiritualist.—Buffalo (N. Y.) News.

What the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle Says.

On September 11, 1876, Professor Lankester attended a seance. He caught Slade in the act of writing, under the table, a message on a slate, using a thimble colored like his skin, to the end of which a bit of slate pencil had been attached. Slade was arrested, convicted and got three months in jail, the limit for that misdemeanor. On appeal he got off through a defect in the wording of the commitment.

The case attracted some attention in Europe. The Russian court wanted a medium, real or false, for its diversion. They sent for Slade. He exhibited before the Czar, and was a court sensation for a St. Petersburg season. He dropped out of sight very suddenly, but bobbed up again in this country in the early 80s, dead broke and showing in small towns. He went abroad again, and had a renewal of popularity in Berlin, where he exploited ideas about the fourth dimension. He was even honored by a heavy German treatise, "Transcendental Psychics," by Professor Zollner.

For ten years the world lost sight of him, until in 1895 he appeared again on the streets of New York, old, ragged, walking on crutches. He had a paralytic stroke the first day after he landed and was treated in Roosevelt Hospital. The physicians noticed that his hands were calloused, as though he had been doing hard work.

He went West and showed up at last in Detroit. There he lived, old, broken and half insane, in one room, and made his living by giving "tests" to servant girls at 10 cents a sitting. In time he got too broken even for that and was sent to a sanatorium, where he died. How he lost his great fortunes is unknown, for Slade never made anyone his confidant.

What the Duluth Herald Says.

Henry Slade, noted for many years as the chief exponent of the peculiar features of Spiritualism, most fantastic of civilized religions, is dead at Belding, Mich. His last days were spent in poverty and misery. Of course everybody knows what Spiritualism is. Its advocates believe that the spirits of the departed hover around those still treading this sphere, and that through the medium of certain gifted individuals they will condescend to do tricks, and communicate banal and very earthly messages to their living friends and relatives.

While naturally its advocates have been drawn largely from those of superstitious tendencies, often people of high standing and keen intelligence have been attracted by its peculiar tenets, and have embraced it with full belief in all its phenomena. Like all other eccentric cults, it has suffered much from the character of its advocates. The majority of those who have investigated Spiritualism, either through curiosity, desire for amusement, or more or less full-fledged belief in its theories, have been struck by the venality of the spirits summoned up by the mediums, and by the universal fondness they expressed for talk about money matters. In short, Spiritualism, like fortune-telling of various sorts, has too often been made a means of plundering the innocent and unwary.

"There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

Hamlet's sage remark has been quoted so often in this connection that it has become trite, but it expresses the final attitude of most of those who investigate these occult subjects thoroughly. There is less belief in them than there ever was, of course. We have been steadily materializing our beliefs since the days of ghosts and witchcraft, but we have not yet come to the undivided opinion that there is nothing but materialism, that there are no supernatural occurrences, though we have discovered that many things once deemed supernatural are entirely material and commonplace. This process may lead us to the generalization that the supernatural things are the things we do not understand, and that therefore superstition has its roots in ignorance. As we progress, and add to our knowledge, things supernatural, meaning things we do not understand, pass one by one from the realms of the occult to the safe precincts of the commonplace, meaning things we understand—or think we understand, which is the same thing.

Slade was one of whom the most marvelous stories were told. Even at an early age, it is said, there were evidences of strange powers. Standing five feet away from a table he could cause it to tip over by a wave of his hand, while a lighted lamp on the table preserved its equilibrium most soberly. Some of these stories are doubtless apocryphal. Many strange things he did. But so did Herrmann, Houdin and other plain magicians claiming no supernaturalism. It is hard to believe that if the spirits of the departed do abide near us, they are idle enough to descend to common jugglery and parlor tricks for our amusement and edification.

What the New York Evening Post Says.

Henry Slade was one of those who rose to the top of the profession. He exhibited his slate writing to Henry Ward Beecher, who, according to common report, confessed that the mystery baffled him. He attracted the notice of the distinguished naturalist, Dr. William Benjamin Carpenter of England, and also of Professor E. Ray Lankester, who exposed his trickery. But Slade's career was less successful than that of Daniel Dunglass Home, whose seances in this country provoked the curiosity of William Cullen Bryant and men of like standing; and in England of Lord Brougham, Sir David Brewster, William Howitt and Sir Edward Bulwer (afterwards Lord) Lytton. He made a convert of Dr. Robert Chambers; he held seances in 1857-58 before the emperor and empress of the French, the king of Prussia and the queen of Holland; and he actually had an audience with the pope. Home is the man who turned Mrs. Browning's mind toward Spiritualism and thus incited her skeptical husband to write "Mr. Sludge, the Medium."

But above all Spiritualism in one form or another allures and will continue to allure those who mourn for lost friends. While men have power to love they will regard death as a hideous and irrational tragedy, and will seize upon even the slenderest hope of peeping into the spirit world and cheating the grave of its victory. Thus the cruel frauds of mediums are made possible by the very intensity of human affection.

"Sludge begins
At your entreaty with your dearest dead,
The little voice set lisping once again,
The tiny hand made feel for yours once more,
The poor lost image brought back, plain as dreams,
Which image, if a word had chanced recall,
The customary cloud would cross your eyes,
Your heart return the old tick, pay its pang!
A right mood for investigation, this!"

REVISES MEANING OF SIN.

Theosophist Fullerton Reveals New Definition—Says It Is Anything Which Interferes With the Evolution of Manhood into Godhood.

Delegates from various parts of the country, Chicago Theosophists, and a few uninitiated outsiders, filled Steinway hall last night at the first public session of the nineteenth annual convention of the American Theosophical society. About 250 persons were in the audience.

Two addresses on theosophical subjects were given—one on "Sin," by Alexander Fullerton, secretary of the society, and one on "Man's Divine Inheritance," by C. Jinarajadsa.

Give New Definition of Sin.

"Previous definitions of sin have been unfair to human beings," Mr. Fullerton said. "They have pictured the Divine Being as afar off, impressing on mortals his own law. Theosophy conceives of the universe as having its conception in millions of sparks of the divine essence which emanated from the Being ages ago, each of which is to be incarnated and ultimately become a divine being. Sin is anything that interferes with this evolution from the incipient man to the god.

"We get our ideas of sin from the conscience, from the great preachers of humanity, and from sacred books. Punishment follows sin as the cart follows the horse. Whatever wrong a man does shall revert upon himself. It is a system just, fair, and unavoidable."

Hindoo Talks Theosophy.

Mr. Jinarajadsa is a Hindoo, a dark dapper young man. As he advanced, clad in an immaculate dress suit and smiling through his spectacles, the women in the audience prepared to listen with all their might.

"Theosophy is a new standpoint of life," said Mr. Jinarajdsa. "It has had an existence in the past, but only in broken gleams. Now, in this modern age, it shows itself in a broader, more magnificent way. It presents answer to the problems of existence which may be accepted by the analytical mind, not by intuition. Study Theosophy and see whether a new peace does not come into your life; whether you do not detect in every human face a strain of music."

The American Theosophical society is a part of an international body which has its headquarters in India. Each country is organized as a section, with a general secretary at its head. The society has a prosperous branch in this city, with headquarters in the Auditorium building. C. G. Snow is chairman of the present convention.

THE REAL SPIRITUALISM.

What Is Spirit and What Is Spirituality?

Spirit is life. Spirit is the potentiality of thought, of feeling, of emotion, of passion.

We are spiritual beings. To the degree that we realize this and seek to control the expression of passions, of animal qualities and propensities, we are spiritual.

What is the most beneficent and far-reaching blessing to humanity of the recent demonstrations of continued life beyond the grave?

The sweeping away of theological error. The opening of the way of self-knowledge and growth which constitute a living soul, a soul continuously vitalized by spirit, the source of life.

The movement called Modern Spiritualism came at the stage of evolution of the human organism when its vibrations could be utilized by decarnate spirits. Spiritualists as a body have held to the initiative stage of the movement started by the spirit world to arouse the slumbering spiritual faculties of mortals on this planet.

Spiritualists have learned the truth of the words of Paul, that the things which are not seen are greater than the things which are seen.

But it seems that so great is the satisfaction in finding that death does not end all, and that the departed loved ones are not separated from us, that no vital purpose of existence no effort to make the conditions of mortal state better here and now quickens ideals and impulses,

The interminable seeking for "tests" is not alone by the newly awakened and inquiring, but by those who have received over and over again incontestible proof that we can communicate with the spirit world, and that they are cognizant of our conditions.

If we believe that existence had a meaning, our first effort should be to find and fathom its meaning and so make our experiences profitable. No great advancement in this direction is needful to teach that the ordering of individual and collective life here and now, is the supreme responsibility of mortals.

The orthodox religionists are criticised for so much dwelling on the future life as the incentive for doing good now and here, for making salvation and gaining a place in heaven the chief end and aim.

Certainly the Spiritualists whose thought and aspiration are fixed upon the spirit world chiefly, are not demonstrating a higher consciousness of being, or estimate of the opportunity and demand for wise activities of the life here and now, than the creedist who is dwelling upon what may be obtained hereafter.

In looking over the field of the Spiritualist movement I am often reminded of an incident that occurred one Sunday some years ago. It was in the hall in Ada Street. I can't recall the name of the speaker. He gave an excellent discourse bearing upon practical life here, indicating how Spiritualism could make better mortal conditions for individual and social progress.

After close of service I said to a brother, wasn't that a fine discourse? He replied—and in a whining tone—"O, I want some comfort."

Are those who have the knowledge that this struggling mortal state is but one step in an immortal career to be satisfied with that knowledge? Because the hell of everlasting burning is abolished, is there no incentive for the activity of higher aspiration and the perfection of individual and social life?

Because the kindergarten gives babyhood the freedom and comfort of play life, would we be glad to have the child remain in babyhood?

Because the spirit realm has brought us freedom from the stultifying errors of old theology and taught that we are spiritual beings and not a fallen race, but possessed of capacities and powers which are capable of developing and therefore responsible to cultivate, should we simply seek the comfort of communication, and everlastingly a demonstration of the fact? Is not that the baby kindergarten stage?

Spiritual evolution is indispensible to the completion of human being. And this can only be accomplished by the co-operation of human spirit, intelligence, love and wisdom, with the universal spirit, the Infinite intelligence, love and wisdom.

The greatest blessing to humanity of the fact of communication can only come when mortals seek and find how to co-operate with the higher spirit realm in perfecting mortal conditions and humanity.

Regret is often expressed that spirits do not give to us more satisfactory knowledge of their life and activities. It is far more important that we should find how we can make most valuable to the present and the future generations of mortals, our life here.

The realm of high purpose and uplifting thought is one and the same in this visible and the invisible realm. If we fill our lives with noble ideals and aims and concentrate thought and effort upon their fulfillment, we are already in that realm of spirit life.

What we need as spiritual beings is not a repetition of tests and phenomena, but to seek ever the activity of spirit in search for truth, for the love that never faileth, for the wisdom that is true guidance.

We need to bring ourselves up to spirituality, to the mastery of mind and body by spirit. Till we do we are not spiritualized, and this is of vastly more importance than that decarnate spirits shall be materialized. That process cannot help us as spiritual beings. But our thought and purpose fixed upon attaining the mastery of spirit will make accessible to us its illimitable powers.

This is vastly more important than to learn of conditions and occupations beyond the veil of mortal sight. Not to bring into earth atmosphere the spirits released from fleshly limitation, but to so develop our spiritual perceptions, powers, and high purposes that we can realize our nearness to and the blissful atmosphere of higher spiritual realms and intelligences, is the greatest grandest work of Spirituality,—is the Real Spiritualism.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Washington State Spiritualist Association.

Resolved. 1. That we recognize in Spiritualism phenomena not attributable to the supernatural or miraculous, but with its concordant philosophy is found not only in perfect tune with all known scientific laws operative in nature, but a marvelous revelation in the scientic field.

2. That among its grand purposes is the demonstration of a conscious future life and the establishment of a universal brotherhood of man on earth upon a just and equitable basis.

3. That universal brotherhood implies the necessity of active steps in the transformation of existing political, social and industrial conditions into such a system that would recognize and guarantee to each individual a full measure of justice in equal rights and opportunities.

4. That to fight, slash and slaughter upon the field of battle, to erect to the dead heroes marble monuments chiseled with falsehoods extolling their virtues, is a deplorable murderous insanity paraded in the name of patriotism and civilization.

5. That we condone the practice of murder or capital punishment under no circumstances, whether perpetrated by private individual or the imposing false dignity of law or patriotism.

6. That as we recognize the power that is clothed in thought, and, that as the character of men correspond to their thought, the endless chain of evils and crime now extant we regard as inevitable effects, and we each and all as factors in the great and crushing cause, and accessories to the crime in exact ratio of our indulgence, indifference and toleration.

7. That we espouse the cause of the fullest play of mental and personal liberty wherein the same rights of another are not invaded.

8. That we would treat crime as a disease, and suggest institutes of reform for the penitentiary equiped with efficient specialists in the chairs of criminology, ethics and moral philosophy to succeed the hangman, mob, lynching parties and the genius that presides over the electric chair.

9. That recognizing mediums or sensitives as the gateway between the sphere of the incarnate and excarnate, notwithstanding that we deplore deception, we would urge the example of this association in seeking honestly and faithfully for only the good in mediumship, and granting to each individual the right to judge, accept and reject all he may see fit.

10. That Spiritualism knows no limits in research, but its concern for the well being of the race is revealed in proportion to our mergency into its claims. We would therefore urge all investigators to strive for its full fruition by progressive study and spiritual growth, especially among our lecturers and teachers.

11. That this association extend a vote of thanks to the press for its friendly and unbiased attitude toward our most successful camp-meeting, also to our president, speakers, mediums and others who with their untiring efforts, contributed to our success.

12. That we heartily endorse the N. S. A. in its earnest efforts for the betterment of and protection to our state and local societies, but we would request the caution of the N. S. A. against imposing in their regulations any interference with the full play of liberty of thought and the right of discretion in local propaganda.

13. That the secretary of this association be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the Spiritualist papers, also the leading secular papers of Washington.

DR. PEEBLES ON MAGIC OF INDIA.

Gives an Interesting Talk at the Spiritual Church on West Franklin street, Baltimore, Md.

At the Spiritual Church, on West Franklin street, last night, J. M. Peebles, M. D., who has traveled extensively in the Far East, delivered a lecture on "India and Her Magic, Black and White."

He said in part:

"The vast majority of India's people are ignorant and exceedingly superstitious, but the learned, high caste Brahmins are intellectual, metaphysical and even brilliant. They are natural logicians. Missionaries have made but a slight impression upon the better classes. While they have four castes, they have more than a dozen of subcastes, but this caste system is gradually dying out. There are nearly a hundred languages and dialects spoken in this country, and there are 40 religious sects, the Mohammedans alone numbering 40,000,000.

"On one of my journeys around the world I stopped two months at Adyar with the Theosophists, devoting much time to the study of the different phases of magic. Col. H. S. Olcott, though one of the founders of Theosophy, wears the Hindoo sacred thread. These Hindoos pronounced Madame Blavatsky a black magician. The genuine adepts and Yogis have wonderful gifts and do astounding things under the open sky, in broad daylight. Of course, there are illusions, and there are tramping, lazy jugglers in India, but, eliminating these, there are marvelous phenomena performed by the real Yogis.

"These demand no pay. They live what they term 'the holy Brahmanic life.' These were seen to swallow quantities of stones, and then cast them up by will—stones and balls weighing pounds were tossed up in the air and continued rising out of sight; my handkerchief was burned to ashes before my eyes and others, and then restored unscorched; and one old adept from the mountains moved books, pamphlets and other objects about the room by his will. Do not say that members of our party were hypnotized—nothing of the kind. These and still more marvelous things are actually performed.

"Inquiring of this venerable Yogi how he moved these things by his will, without touch, he replied quite sarcastically: 'Why do you Christians inquire of us heathen how we do these things, and how we heal the sick by the touch? * * I believe in Brahm, who moves all the starry world by his will, and in the ratio that I crush down the lower passions and live the holy Brahmlike life, do I have the power to move these smaller things.'

"These Yogis never taste of animal flesh; they subsist mostly upon rice. They are men of prayer, calling their prayers 'tantras.' They have great healing gifts. India is restless under the English yoke. The enlightened Hindoos of the higher castes consider American and Christians nations generally as semibarbarians, given to war, money-making and a world-wide commercialism for greed and glory."

CHESTERFIELD CAMP.

Another Echo From the Article Written by L. O. Hull—Indianaians Desirous of Redeeming This Camp From the Pestiferous Horde of Fakers Who Have Afflicted It, and Cast a Blight on Its Beautiful Grounds.

To the Editor:—I was very much interested in an article in last week's issue of your paper, written by L. O. Hull of Fort Wayne, Ind., on the subject of "Fakes and Frauds" at Camp Chesterfield, and I agree with him when he says: "THE PUBLIC IS IN NEED OF PROTECTION FROM THE IMPOSTORS AND MOUNTEBANKS WHO DO THEIR VILE WORK UNDER THE NAME OF SPIRITUALISM."

I have been reading Spiritualistic literature for several years, and I am inclined to believe in the philosophy of Spiritualism; to me it has been a beautiful, helpful and healthful study, but so far as I have investigated the phenomena, it has been a ridiculous humbug and failure. Unfortunately, so far my experience has only been with the fakirs. However, my contact with the frauds and fakes of the seance rooms does not make me entirely skeptical of the truth of Spiritualism. While I have no proof, so far, of continued life after death, I do not believe the proof impossible; but I think I will be safe in saying this much: Unless the proper officers of Camp Chesterfield are more careful in their selection of the mediums permitted to do business on the premises in a few years these beautiful grounds will be offered for sale.

Two others with myself went to a trumpet seance on the afternoon of August 16. The medium, a Mr. and Mrs. Somebody, whose names I have forgotten, were recommended to us by prominent Spiritualists as the best of their class. They proved to be fakes and frauds of the first water. They were a disgrace to Spiritualism and to the human race. A child four years old could easily have detected them as frauds.

It is sometimes worth the money we part with to be tricked by a smooth, skilful fakir, but these two humbugs were even poor blundering tricksters. We left that dark room thoroughly disgusted, and my two friends who were honest investigators, left confirmed skeptics.

I still believe there is a truth in Spiritualism, and I earnestly hope that all honest lovers of truth will aid you in your noble efforts to unearth these frauds and fakes, and sweep them out of the ranks of Spiritualism, and into everlasting oblivion where they belong.

C. W. HEOFFER.

Richmond, Ind.

DECEPTION AT CHESTERFIELD.

How It Was Practiced on a Visitor From Illinois.

To the Editor:—I believe, if we are to get clear of the frauds in mediumship, the Spiritualists will have to get after it themselves. Reading of the article by Brother L. O. Hull of Fort Wayne, Ind., regarding his experience at Chesterfield camp, reminds me of my own while there two years ago; and by the way his article reads, I judge it was the same medium who "done" each one who was there out of a dollar for the farce.

The medium had called several of the sitters to the cabinet, and finally requested me to take a seat in the chair inside the cabinet, when immediately the medium turned to the opening of the cabinet, and stood there, some of those outside exclaiming, "Why, there is Gen. Logan!" Now I suppose the medium when she turned from me, slipped on a false mustache to complete the likeness.

Such a deception is a great injury to Spiritualism. I denounced it the next morning. I think the management at camps are not particular enough. They ought to allow no medium to act as one on the grounds without they know positively they are genuine. As Brother Hull says, we go there to hear from our dear ones and friends who have passed out, therefore we want the real thing.

Harvey, Ill. R. BAYLES.

ORIGIN OF THEOSOPHY,

As Set Forth by One of Its Prominent Devotees.

The word "theosophy" dates from the time of Ammonius Saccas—the third century of our era—and means divine knowledge or science. The word theos in Greek means a god; i. e., one of the superhuman evolution, not God in the sense of the supreme creator. Ammonius Saccas and his followers were also called "Analogeticists," because "they sought to explain all sacred legends and narratives, myths and mysteries," according to Dr. Alexander Wilder, "by a rule or principle of analogy and correspondence; so that events which were related as having occurred in the external world were regarded as expressing operations and experiences of the human soul. They were also denominated neo-platonists. Though theosophy, or the eclectic theosophical system, is generally attributed to the third century, yet if Diogenes Laertius is to be credited, its origin is much earlier, as he attributed the system to an Egyptian priest called Pot-Amun, who lived in the early days of the Ptolemaic dynasty. The same author tells us that the name is Coptic, and signifies one consecrated to Amun, the god of wisdom. In India it is synonymous with the Brahm-Vidya or knowledge of Brahm."

As to the question whether or not Mme Blavatsky was a fraud, there are differences of opinion. If we are to accept the verdict of those who did not know her; if we believe in the infallibility of the notorious Society for Psychical Research report, which was based upon the accusations of two dismissed employes whose interest it was to defame her character, then she was merely a clever trickster, an adventuress, a skilled hypnotist.

If, however, we prefer the verdict of those who actually knew her and lived and studied with her; if we prefer to accept the testimony of such people as her life-long colleague, Colonel H. S. Olcott, the brilliant and scholarly G. R. S. Mead, for five years her private secretary, the great altruistic idealist, Mrs. Annie Besant, the Countess Wachtmeister and a score of lesser intellectual lights, who testify by their lives and works the fact that Mme Blavatsky was a profound teacher of the higher knowledge, then the popular estimate of her is wrong.

One of the most strange and interesting phenomena we can observe is the often curious reversal of that unstable thing we call public opinion. Who best knows what it is values it least. We find the "heresies" of yesterday becoming the "creeds" of to-day. The stones flung at the reformers of one generation become the laurel-crowned monuments of the next!

A Review Showing the Absurdity and Injustice of Its Statements.

The author, in his preface of this catechism, says; "it is not published as a child's catechism merely, but is the catechism of the church, including both young and old, and is suitable to be retained in memory through life."

Now, as this is a summary of principles and tenets of the orthodox religion, taught in Sunday Schools and by the fireside, and "suitable to be retained in memory through life," let us examine and see how it comports with enlightened reason and scientific facts, and what kind of a character it attaches to God.

To facilitate the undertaking, I quote the following questions and answers for comment:

"1. Who made you? God."

"2. Who is God? The Creator of all things."

"4. Where is God? God is everywhere."

"6. What can God do? God is almighty; He doeth whatsoever He will."

"8. What is the character of God? 'God is love.'—John, iv:8th verse."

"16. Is the Son God? Yes; 'Christ is over all, God blessed forever; He is the true God.—John, v:20th verse."

"31. What was the sin of our first parents? Their eating of the forbidden fruit."

"32. By whom were they tempted? By the devil in the form of a serpent.—Gen., iii:13; Rev., xx:2."

"34. Did their sin harm any beside themselves? Yes; by the offense of one judgment came upon all mankind to condemnation; all are born in sin and are under the wrath of God.—Rom. v:18."

"42. Why did Christ suffer and die? To offer to divine justice full atonement for the sins of the world."

"45. Will all men therefore be saved? No; 'the wicked shall be turned into hell.'—Psa. ix:17."

"46. Will those be saved who die in childhood? They will.—Mat. xix:14."

"51. Can we repent and believe of ourselves? No; the power to repent is given us of God.—Eph. ii:8; Rom. xi:29."

"107. How long shall the bodies of men lie in the grave? Until the last day, when Christ shall come to raise the dead.—Acts xxiv; John v:28, 29."

"110. What sentence did Christ pronounce upon the wicked? Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels.'—Mat. xxv:41."

We have thus the orthodox faith comprehensively expressed and now we will proceed to analyze and weigh its averments and claims.

1. "Who made you? God. Now, if God made you, he evidently should be responsible for his work; and if you are not built right, then it must be his fault and not yours; and as all are born, created in sin, as declared in the answer to question 34, God must be the maker of sinners; and, behold! he is wrathfully condemning his own work, making all to suffer for the offense of one! marvelous justice, indeed!

And as God is Almighty, Creator, and everywhere, and doeth whatsoever He will, it follows that everything is just as God conceived and made it; and he must have made hell, the devil and his angels, just as surely as he made heaven and the good angels; and both kingdoms are his, or else he did not create all things he claimed. And, as God is everywhere, he must be in hell as well as in heaven. Altogether intricate conception, and just about as clear as mud.

Another important fact, which this Methodist author seems less mindful of, is this: As affirmed in the second answer, God, being the Creator of all things, must have created the faculties of reason, giving to man the power to think, discover the relations of things, compare and make deductions and form judgments; that he thus endowed man must be as true as that he made man; and that he should use his reason must be as imperative as that he use any other faculty or force of either mind or body. It is, therefore, as much our duty to reason as it is to do anything else; and if we do not reason and govern ourselves therewith we are sinners, as much as if we went and buried our talent, or disobeyed a plainly indicated command.

Q. 8. "What is the character of God? God is love." How a God of love could create an orthodox devil and hell, the one to tempt man and the other to burn him in forever, for being a sinner, just as created by this same God, surpasses understanding, outrages man's highest ideas of love, and baffles human reason. Clearly, if God is love, he can be possessed of no such fiendish disposition; and hell and the devil are among the bugaboos of superstition; and to think thus debases the thinker, as it is beneath one's own estimate of love and justice—more the conception of a savage than of civilized man.

According to the answer to question 16, "Christ is the true God," as the Catholics claim; and, sure enough, Mary is thus the Mother of God. Now, this statement is too absurd and ridiculous for anything.

Should a like statement be made today of a respectable young lady, as claimed true of Mary, the author would be either sued for slander or adjudged to the insane asylum; and it has finally come to this, that reasoning minds no longer credit the story, and the silence of the preachers relative to it plainly attest their infidelity. In all reason Christ was a man, and a baby first, as were his followers, and because he was a great reformer and teacher is no proof that he is God any more than man is God.

Q. 31, deals with the sin of primitive man, Adam and Eve. Their sin, we are told, was the eating of the forbidden fruit, and Mother Eve, next after the Serpent, was the tempter and first transgressor. What that fruit was, whether an apple or a peach, or something else, has never been ascertained, and commentators have long since despaired of ever finding out either the special kind of tree or the nature of the fruit it bore. But according to the bible itself, immediately, on the very day Creation was finished, the Creator gave to man, "male and female that he had created, every tree in which is the fruit of the tree yielding seed to be for them meat." Gen. I:29; and they were commanded to multiply and replenish the earth, which it seems they did not do until they had eaten the forbidden fruit.

The way is not clear, unless it was the forbidden fruit that revealed to them the way of obeying the divine injunction to multiply and people the earth. If so their condemnation must have been for obedience; and if they had not eaten the fruit they must have continued in disobedience and in sole possession of the earth, hale and hearty two lone and undisputed rulers of a world without the cry of a babe, the mischief of a brat, or the importunity of a single kid to disturb their virgin felicity.

And, did this sin, whatever it was, harm any one else? Yes; you and I, and everybody that have ever lived since have suffered sickness, grief, pain and even death, just because Father Adam and Mother Eve ate some kind of fruit that grew on a tree, notwithstanding it had been given them by the Creator.

What a riddle! What a mystification! with every perceivable significance adverse to reason, or as pointing only to a dream or vision of an untutored savage; and we have to call it a myth, and no revelation at all; and serving only as one basic part of a creed, conceived and formulated in an age of ignorance by designing priests and despots, pretending, or else ignorantly presuming themselves to have communications and revelations direct from God; and so have imposed upon mankind a superstitious religion, with its countless popes, bishops, cardinals, friars, monks, and hypocrites, heading intolerance, contentions, wrangles and persecutions, wars and bloodshed; and creating discord, exciting and maintaining hate and selfishness more than love and kindness among men.

Q. 42 and Answer, affirms that Christ suffered and died to satisfy divine justice, and to make "full atonement for the sins of the world."

We are asked to believe in a God of love and omnipotent power as allowing his only begotten Son to be ignominiously tortured and slain for the sins growing out of the eating some kind of fruit he himself created and gave to our first parents by way of an apostate devil; and according to the answer to question 45, the cruel sacrifice was an utter failure, since that sin continues as before, and the wicked are not saved, but "turned into hell." What more irreconcilable with the idea of infinite love than this story?

A Presbyterian preacher here once is credited as having said that the idea that Jesus died for sinners, to atone for another's sins, is absurd; and I think he should be credited with a little inspiration of reason, though he be called down as a heretic. The plain fact is, Christ died because he was killed by the Jews. And to think of God as dying, is an orthodox absurdity.

This story of Eve and the fall of man is a myth, and Mary's Holy Ghost conception and atonement its complement. In all reason, Jesus was a man; and to make him a God is idolatry.

Q. 46. "Will those be saved who die in childhood? They will."

A few mothers have seemed to believe this, and so have killed their children to make sure of salvation. The crime of infanticide is thus encouraged, as affording the only sure way to heaven; and, this side of India, little buds of humanity have been plucked in the morning, victims of a misleading faith!

Q. 51. "Can we repent and believe of ourselves? No; the power to repent is given us of God." So then it cannot be our fault if we have not repented; for unless God gives us the power we cannot; and if he does not, then he and not we must be to blame, if anybody.

Q. 107. "How long shall our bodies lie in the grave? Until the last day, when Christ shall come to raise the dead." But the bible says flesh and blood cannot enter heaven. And, too, think of bodies that have decomposed, chemically dissolved, or may be, have been burned to ashes, and the atoms transformed into vegetable and animal compounds, consumed and again circulated and appropriated in other organisms, re-dissolved and again scattered to the four winds, and so on, repeatedly, think of such atoms of bone, muscle, and varied tissues, parts and limbs, and the whole coming together, joint to joint, and all composing our bodies thus restored. Another mammoth absurdity.

And now, in conclusion, Answer to Q. 110, makes this church-constituted God say "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels."

We are thus asked to think of a God of love as sending his own children away into the most awful tortures, altogether unthinkable of the worst human parent, much less of the God-parent who hath all power and doeth whatsoever he will. Such an awful conception may serve to terrify and weaken some, not yet strong in the light of knowledge, but more enlightened minds revolt against such senseless dogmatism as would make God a Satan and men cowards. The human mind, in the might and majesty of its divinity, is fast advancing beyond such stuff, and as surely making way with devils, bugaboos, and the entire rot of superstition.

The religion of this Catechism as illogical, absurd, and plainly negatives Nature's revelation of the infinite love and power of God manifest in Creation; for if "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life,"—if God did this, as claimed, he must have had little regard for his Son, or either for his own character and responsibility; and if, as stated in this catechism, we cannot believe of ourselves, but the power to do so is given us of God, then if not saved it will be because God failed to empower us to believe; and not we, but he will be to blame, and should suffer instead of us; and, surely, being omnipotent, and in supreme control of all things, with power to will and do whatsoever he willeth, he could have saved the world as well without sacrificing his only Son,—indeed, he should never have lost the world or anything else, and to believe the story is to believe God cruel, weak, and irresponsible; it is therefore unworthy of credence, and higher conceptions of God and duty are required to lift man up.

Such doctrine taught to children in the present era of "higher criticism" is better calculated to dwarf the unfolding mind than to expand it; and so by force of the Divine All-Mind, in evolution, it must retire before the coming of a broader religion from out the circumterraneous fields of active intelligence to bless and gladden the world with its advanced freedom and altruistic gospel.

Knowledge is power, and just as essential to the life and efficacy of religion as to human progress. Blind faith is like the darkness of night in which the traveler may sleep, but can know little of his surroundings, whether dearth or riches are about him. Give us the light that brightens the star of hope and illumines the way to heaven on earth!

Yours for truth,

DR. WM. J. HILL.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth, $1.

"New Testament Stories Comically Illustrated. Drawings by Watson Heston. With Critical and Humorous Comments upon the Texts." Heston's drawings are incomparable, and excruciatingly funny. Price in boards, $1. Cloth, $1.50.

WISCONSIN SPIRITUALISTS.

Rather Critical in Casting Judgment.

In a late issue of The Progressive Thinker is an article from Will J. Erwood, addressed to the "Wisconsin Spiritualists," asking that efforts be put forth by them to draw together those who believe in Spiritualism.

In the early part of the year (1905) two or three meetings were advertised to be held in this city. Certain persons were advertised as speakers, who did not show up. I was present at one of the meetings, and never saw such a sorry display. The gentleman speaker occupied more than an hour, giving an address which had nothing in common with Spiritualism. It would have done as well for a meeting of socialists, or anything else. During the last five minutes of the address he spoke of Spiritualism. Then followed tests, so-called, by another person, and if ever tests could be spoken or written of as "questionable," such were those tests. One such was given to me.

The president, Mr. Erwood, with a committee seem to be anxious to collect together the believers in Spiritualism in the State of Wisconsin.

There are many Spiritualists in the state, some in every city. Many of them hold aloof, because so many of the speakers or lecturers traveling among various societies, whose place is not on the platform, but in a meeting where there are very few persons to hear them.

I hope the time is not far distant when the representatives of Spiritualism will have to undergo an examination as to their fitness or otherwise, to lecture in the field.

I have been a Spiritualist for over thirty years, and I think myself capable to judge somewhat of addresses and lectures for a Spiritual meeting. Many reports of lectures are sent by secretaries to the Spiritualist papers. In such reports it is stated, "Mrs. So-and-So delivered a "grand oration" to a delighted audience. To a person able to judge, such a report is an abominable falsehood. I write whereof I know, because I have been at such meetings, and read such reports.

Now, Mr. Editor, there are thousands of persons all over the country, who are suffering, yes actually suffering because of the lack of spiritual food. Your paper fills a certain niche. The time is well spent in perusing the various articles published therein. But when one has read all, there is "still an aching void," a longing for communion with kindred souls, an earnest soul-yearning to go somewhere and listen, so that satisfaction may be obtained.

There are thousands of Spiritualists who attend other churches for that very reason. I personally know many such in Chicago; and in Madison. There is no Spiritualist society here, and yet there are many believers in Spiritualism; still they are not numerous enough or sufficiently wealthy to take the responsibility of holding meetings. I do not know, or have not heard of a single medium since I came to reside here.

Wichita, Kansas, Letter.

Lest the many friends forget that I am still on the material plane, I will just ask space in "the paper" of the spiritual and material world, for a few remarks. I am still in Wichita, and being most royally entertained by Mrs. William Marchant; am still telling the glad tidings to all seekers after the true knowledge of wisdom, and to some who are not seekers after it, and holding an independent meeting Sunday evening in Ghetto Hall, and to a full house, proving beyond all doubt, there are many, yea, very many intellectual minds seeking after our grand philosophy.

I have many calls from persons to hold circles in their homes, for private information and development, and all express themselves as well pleased.

I received a nice letter from Mrs. Laura B. Payne who has just returned to her home in Fort Worth, Tex., and she informs me that the Texas State Association holds their convention Sept. 29 and 30, and Oct. 1, and asks me to take part in same.

On Sunday, Sept. 3, Mrs. Marchant and I attended the services of the Universalist church, with the Rev. King in the pulpit. I found that this good brother is very liberal and decidedly sensible, inasmuch as he made the statement, that there was no greater fallacy given forth than to think there was any one person, near or far, that could or would bear our burdens; and to be righteous we must do right, and each be his own savior.

Brother King is, I think, just as good as he looks, and if he is not, then he ought to be, for he is a man six feet—if not some more—in height, and certainly weighs over 200 pounds; very black hair, and brown eyes that not only have a pleasant expression, but a merry twinkle in them which speaks volumes to all, as he voices the truth to his followers, and I rather think that Brother King may derive a part of his inspiration from his good and very helpful wife, who is a lady of natural refinement and grace, and who when the good man is absent, preaches in his place. Brother King kindly invited me to take part in his services, but I feared (like the Irishman who peddled ashes to soap makers) that I could not do justice to or by the case, and so declined.

Sister Virginia Bryan is still in the east, watching by the side of the dear parents who may soon wing their flight to the realms of Truth, Light and Wisdom.

I understood Mrs. Kayner was to join the Wichita Light of Truth Society again this week, and I sincerely hope she will, as I have two big bones to pick with her, but as Sister Kayner is quite good natured, I rather think she may save her gray hairs, and mine as well.

While the friends here sympathise with the sister in the loneliness she will feel in her mother having joined the loved ones, at the same time we rejoice in the knowledge with our sister, that her dear mother is at rest with the loved father, who no doubt has a beautiful home and haven of rest for the wife he loved so well.

"The Jesuits." By Rev. B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. An excellent pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

"The Light of Egypt." Volumes 1 and 2. An occult library in itself, a text-book of esoteric knowledge as taught by Adepts of Hermetic Philosophy. Price $2 per volume.

"Religious and Theological Works of Thomas Paine," contains his celebrated "Age of Reason," and a number of letters and discourses on religious and theological subjects. Cloth binding, 480 pages. Price $1.

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

EDGEWOOD CAMP, WASH.

A Stockholder Makes a Defensive Statement.

To the Editor:—Your valuable paper of Sept. 9 just received, and as ever I could not resume my household duties until I had at least looked over its contents, and as I had been looking for another line in regard to our camp which had just closed, I of course noticed at once the article written by our estimable brother, Will C. Hodge, and to say that I was surprised but tamely expresses what came very near being a feeling of resentment on my part when I had finished reading the said article.

Our camp, while it is only in its infancy is a beautiful one and we as stockholders feel very proud of the ten acres, which is covered with a beautiful grove, and on the border of a small but lovely lake, which is rightly named Lake Surprise.

To be sure we are not in the heart of the city, nor do we desire to be, yet our location is a very beautiful one, and while we are not on the Sound and accessible by boats, yet we have an hourly electric car service, and will in the near future have better facilities for going to and from the grounds, as the road between the station and camp ground has been greatly improved this year and the same was being widened and graded during the time our camp was in progress, and thus the dusty condition of the road at that time was explained.

During the coming fall that road is to be graveled, and ere another meeting is held will be in excellent condition. Besides for those who did not prefer walking, there was a conveyance to take persons and their baggage from the station and returning for the small sum of ten cents each way. That our camp was a success is due to the management of a very efficient board. Our president managing the platform work, while our vice-president and secretary with their worthy helpers, the other members of the board, engineered the financial part of the work in a very satisfactory manner.

We had with us on opening day, our worthy and veteran worker, P. C. Mills, who delivered the opening address, which was enjoyed by all present. In the afternoon we were entertained and instructed by another tried and true worker, Will C. Hodge. In the evening Mrs. Flora Heckman delivered a fine lecture, after which she favored us with psychometric work of a very fine order.

The second Sunday Mrs. Erin Chassee gave us a very instructive and interesting lecture, following it with messages which were certainly characteristic of her work at all times, very spiritual and to the point.

The afternoon services were conducted by our dearly beloved sister, Irene Smith; it is not necessary to comment on her work, as she is known from East to West and from North to South as a very intelligent expounder of our beautiful philosophy. In the evening we were treated to another very interesting lecture by Will C. Hodge.

The third Sunday we had the treat of the season. Our dearly beloved President Harrison D. Barrett of the N. S. A. being with us, and he dealt out the spiritual food to the hungry soul as only he can do; from start to finish he was constantly surrounded by spiritual forces, who I am sure assisted greatly in giving us the spiritual feast that all so greatly enjoyed; and knowing as we did, that this was our last opportunity to hear his voice in our midst this year we asked him to talk to us again in the evening, which he did, and the result was wonderful, for all felt the magical power of his words, and many skeptics said, "If that is the spiritual doctrine, it has captured me."

At the close of the afternoon lecture, we were pleased to witness the ordination of our dear sister, Erin Chassee, the ceremony being performed by our very estimable sister and worker, Esther Thomas Bosley, who afterward gave us a very beautiful improvised poem on Love and Mizpah.

On the fourth and last Sunday at 11 a. m., we listened to another very eloquent address by our ever ready and willing worker, Will C. Hodge; at 2:30 p. m., Mrs. Esther Thomas Bosley gave us a very entertaining and instructive lecture, and all present could not help but acknowledge the power of the spirit that manifested through her.

The evening services were conducted by Mrs. Hibner whose talk was very pleasing, and was listened to very attentively; she also gave messages, and her message work was of the very highest order.

During the week days we had many good and able workers, among whom were Mrs. Lovejoy, Mrs. Corbin, Mrs. Lapworth, Professor Estes, Mrs. Goodkind, Mrs. Benson, Mrs. Greenfield and others who did good and satisfactory work.

Our state convention opened on Monday, August 21 and all went as merry as a marriage bell.

The convention re-elected Mr. Little president, E. L. Nicholson first vice-president, and Geo. E. Knowlton secretary. A very

THE MATERIALIZATION QUESTION.

Is It All Fraud, and Can There Be No Genuine?— Some Comprehensive Reflections on the Process of Materialization, by D. W. Hull—Its Possibility Fully Established.

It is not to be wondered that many good Spiritualists question the possibility of materialization. So many materializing mediums have been detected in tricks, and some of whom had established tolerable characters for honesty, that many sincere Spiritualists, especially those who are superficially read up in early spiritual literature, naturally doubt if there is such a thing as a materializing phase in Spiritualism, or even whether such a thing is possible.

Indeed I should doubt it myself, except for reasons in philosophy and fact.

The doubt as to the fact of materialization is quite prevalent in Los Angeles—simply, however, because they have failed to find a genuine medium of the kind. Every time they have scratched a medium they have found a fraud. And yet these people are honest.

I heard Brother Hale in a lecture deny the possibility of such a thing as materialization, and he went on to make the extraordinary statement, that should a materialized spirit appear in that hall and dematerialize it would kill everybody present. I could not but make an estimate of the dematerialization then in process, in his audience, and while I was doing so the janitor was lowering the window to change the atmosphere rendered impure through the process of dematerialization of the audience then listening. The osmosis of thirty persons in one day would be equivalent to the average change of tissue of one person; so that in a fair-sized audience we might expect the dematerialization, and rematerialization of the average human being during a not very lengthy sitting of a congregation. To illustrate, I was run down by an automobile some time ago. Calculating on the length of time for incomplete osmosis (removal of old tissue and replacement by new) I stated to my daughter with whom I was staying, that I would be able to be out again in three weeks, but as the replacement of tissue would be superficial, it would be some time after before I should be completely recovered. Within two days of that time I had got so I could walk considerable distance. We thus see that for the dematerialization of the flesh of the physical body of an adult and rematerialization of the same requires about three weeks more or less, according to age.

Materialization is a process of nature. A growing field of say ten acres materializes at the rate of not less than 100 pounds per day, during the months of May and June. It may be claimed that the substance is taken from the earth. Yes, a part of it; perhaps a half of it, but how?

Why, the waters of our seas and lakes are dematerialized and taken up into the atmosphere and floated over our fields and precipitated; again these waters dematerialize the soil and carry it up imperceptibly into the stalk where it materializes, and becomes the food we eat, which forms a physical basis for the materialization of the air we breathe not only through our nostrils, but also through every pore of our skin, into flesh, sinew and bone.

The wool of which our clothing is made, materialized on the sheep's back before it was converted into cloth. It may have taken several months for it to grow or materialize, but who shall say that there may not be a process in nature of which, as yet we know nothing by which that material may not be produced more rapidly?

May not some of those who have gone into the higher life have discovered this process, and may they not thus have discovered the possibility of clothing themselves, outwardly at least, with physical flesh and blood? I cannot tell how it may be done, but that doesn't disprove anything. It was this thought that came to me early in the seventies, that convinced me of the possibility of materialization, of which I made a public explanation to an audience in Boston. Since that, although I have seen but very little materialization that I could be any ways certain was genuine, but I have never doubted the possibility of such a process.

It has been the reading of W. H. Burr's article in The Progressive Thinker that occasioned this article.

There are a few men and women in the world in whose judgment I have the utmost confidence—three of whom I will name are Brothers Hudson Tuttle, J. S. Loveland and W. H. Burr.

There are others, but I can't call their names here.

I do not mean that I surrender my judgment to them, but I have so often tried them before the bar of my own reason, that I have come to have confidence in them, and in all matters of doubt I am inclined to be deferential to them. I can see, however, how easy it would be for men, if I were phlegmatis, to stop thinking and surrender my judgment to them entirely.

I mention this because I believe if Brother Burr has seen what has satisfied him as a genuine materialization, it is the best evidence to me that it was genuine. In fact, I believe that frauds would be chary of admitting him to their seances, as they are of others of us. I will not say that Brother Burr cannot be imposed upon, but think it very difficult to impose upon him, and where he would fail to detect fraud, I fear I would fail. It does me good to know of this, for it satisfies me that there is one honest medium for materialization in the world, providing he is always as honest as when in Brother Burr's presence.

I also had a sitting with a young man named Kanouse, of Seattle, in whom I had confidence, but he had associated with him, a manager in whom I could put no faith. I saw this medium, when his coat sleeves were sewed to his pants so that the pants were torn in releasing him, and his pants sewn to the carpet and otherwise fastened. I was called up to the cabinet, and there I met a man whom I could not recognize, and he could not make me understand who he was till he shrank down to a babe, and then grew up in my presence, first a boy, then every size till he reached manhood. Then I understood it was a son who had died in infancy.

This man in a few weeks lost the gift, one of the best evidences that he was genuine, and I suspect that it was because his manager wanted to substitute fraud.

Another careful witness is the foremost scientist of the world, Professor Wm. Crookes. Certainly no one will attempt to impeach his capability of investigating any phenomena occurring in his presence. Prof. Crookes is very circumstantial in his account of his seance with Florence Cook, and the apparition of Katie King. I wish modern Spiritualists were better readers, or that they had not discarded the profound teachers they once had for amateurs, so that they should know more about these evidences. Prof. Crookes says:

"On entering the cabinet Miss Cook lies down upon the floor, with her head on a pillow, and is soon entranced.

"During the whole seance Katie muffled up her medium's head in a shawl to prevent the light from falling upon her face

"I frequently drew the curtain on one side when Katie was standing near, and it was a common thing for the seven or eight of us in the laboratory TO SEE MISS COOK AND KATIE AT THE SAME TIME, UNDER THE FULL GLARE OF THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

"We did not on these occasions actually see the face of the medium, because of the shawl, but we saw her hands and her feet; we saw her move uneasily under the influence of the intense light, and we heard her moan occasionally.

"I HAVE ONE PHOTOGRAPH OF THE TWO TOGETHER, BUT KATIE IS SEATED IN FRONT OF MISS COOK'S HEAD."—Crookes' Researches, p. 47.

On the next page he states

"I have the most absolute certainty that Miss Cook and Katie are two separate individuals so far as their bodies are concerned. Several little marks on Miss Cook's face are absent on Katie's. Miss Cook's hair is so dark a brown as to almost appear black. A lock of Katie's which she allowed me to cut, and which is now before me, and which she allowed me to cut from her luxuriant tresses, having first traced it up to the scalp, and satisfied myself that it actually grew there, is a rich golden auburn.

"One evening I timed Katie's pulse. It was steadily at 75, while Miss Cook's pulse a little time after was going at its usual rate of 90. On applying my ear to Katie's chest I could hear a heart beating rhythmically inside and pulsating even more steadily than did Miss Cook's heart when she allowed me to try a similar experiment after the seance. Tested in the same way Katie's lungs were found to be sounder than her medium's, for at the time I tried my experiment Miss Cook was under medical treatment for a severe cold."

This establishes the point I wanted to make, that notwithstanding all the fraud we have in materialization, nevertheless it is a possibility. I will say further, that in my opinion a large percentage of the fraudulent mediums have at one time in their mediumship had genuine manifestations. But somehow in this materializing business as in the physical manifestations, the lower class of spirits are nearer to materiality, and too often they take charge of the spiritual side of the seances, and either control the medium or influence him or her to supplement fraud where conditions are unfavorable for genuine manifestations.

Although Mrs. Reynolds talks to her confidante as if she never had anything but fraudulent manifestations, I am of the opinion from what has been told me by men and women capable of close observation that at one time in her life she had genuine manifestations.

The manifestations in the presence of W. W. Aber have usually been genuine, especially those at Spring Hill. I sat with him in 1892, and I think everything was all right, but one wants more than one sitting with a medium.

I had always hoped that Winans was genuine, though I never had a sitting with him. What gave me the most confidence in him was a report by H. W. Boozer some years ago, of a seance at Grand Rapids, Mich., in which he was tacked in with mosquito netting. But one doesn't carry toggery around with him "just for his health." No honest man will be caught with burglar's tools, neither will an honest medium carry with him a lot of theatrical goods.

SEEKING SOUL MATES.

As Defined and Illustrated by Carlyle Petersilea.

To the Editor:—I was particularly interested in reading an article in your paper of September 23, on "Woman's Rights as related to courtship and marriage," by Amos Steckel, Bloomfield, Iowa.

I fully endorse the idea that Woman should have the right socially as well as legally to take the initiative, if she desires to, in the matter of choosing a husband.

I think it the duty of Spiritualists to help bring about this reform. So far as I have learned, it is the custom, if not the law, in the spirit world for the female to take the first step in this matter, or at least to be the first of the soul mates to know or seek the other half. To prove this statement I quote the following extract from "The Discovered Country," by Carlyle Petersilea, pages 89 and 90:

"The laws of the spiritual sphere are not like those of the earthly sphere. In the earth, the male seeks the female, or rather, he is inclined to roam after a promiscuous fashion; and the female that is fortunate enough to net him or enthrall him long enough to have a legal marriage ceremony performed, considers herself very fortunate indeed, and she does not often stop to ask whether he is fitted to make her happy or not, but if he has the money and can keep her in style?

"Now there is nothing of all this in the spirit world, and no male ever seeks his female; that law here is reversed, and there is no such thing as roaming promiscuously

"Now the male here does not seek the female; but the female is prepared for the male; that is, his true spiritual half is taught just who her other self is."

"Mary Anne Carew," by Carlyle Petersilea, page 423:

"When souls are about to be wedded, the true one is revealed to the female first; from her to the male. He may have been very much attracted to her, may have felt the sweetness of her power, may have hoped and believed she was his by natural law, but the revealment to her soul, beyond cavil or doubt is first made."

If this subject, which is one of the most important to everyone, were properly and thoroughly studied and managed very many of the evils of this earthly life would be obviated, and very much happiness ensue therefrom.

SPIRIT PICTURES.

They Are the Product of the Mediumship of Celebrated Frenchmen, and Illustrate the Wonderful Influence of Those In Spirit Life.

La Revue Illustree, Paris, says the Boston Transcript, publishes an article by Jules Bois, under the title "Les Espirits Peintres et Dessinateurs," which gives a curious account of the artistic doings of the spirits. The author is of the opinion of the so-called mediumistic or spirit pictures have not received the amount of attention to which they are entitled. He has devoted considerable study to the work of the mystic symbolists, and finds interesting matter for comparison. M. Bois says:

"It suffices to take in hand the brush, the pencil, the burin, and the inspiration comes in the form of an irresistible and automatic impulse. It is even useless to take any note of what is going on. The spirit, so say the believers, does all. It is the spirit that guides the hand, or, rather, impels it. And thus are executed in a few hours delicate works which would have otherwise taken several days. The most celebrated, doubtless, of these subconscious artists is Victorien Sardou. Two of his drawings are very curious. One of them represents a house on the planet Jupiter and the other the animals' quarters at Zoroaster's home. Everything was quite spontaneous and unpremeditated in the phenomenon. M. Sardou told me how how he all of a sudden knew how to draw. Before becoming known as an author, he had written a comedy about Bernard Palissy; and the Odeon had refused it. Hence he was full of spite, and he wrote a satirical romance in which our earth became an object of horror, while the ideal residence of young dramatic authors was the planet Jupiter. While at work on this paradoxical idea M. Sardou happened to drift into spiritistic circles. He wanted to do as others were doing; so he took up a pencil. His hand wrote automatically: "Bernard Palissy." Here is a pleasant visiting-card, said he to himself, and, as it happens, one of my acquaintances. He questioned: 'Where are you?' Bernard responded, 'In Jupiter.' Sardou rubbed his hands. 'Well, well! You must tell me what is going on there!' And to the great surprise of our improvised medium, instead of written words such as he expected to come from his pencil, or from his burin (for some of his designs were engraved by himself), landscapes made their appearance.

Such is the origin of these curious works, which have so little relation to the violent and incisive style of the dramaturgist. They are without point of support, without woof, as if woven out of a dream, out of fluid, out of sprigs of nothingness. They might be called fly-tracks of the Beyond. They are effeminate, weary, capricious, subtilized, of a structure so slender, so unstable, so unbalanced, that it seems quite paradoxical to think that the author of 'Patrie' should have been able to evolve them from his powerful imagination, so little in sympathy with these linear perplexities and doubts, this feeble flora, these homesick stones, these gates plaited of dragon-flies, these rosettes like crushed butterflies. And the fantastic insinuates itself in the midst of all this—soft staircases supported by an almost vaporous sheet of water, facades made out of musical notes; as in 'Mozart's House,' columns of elder with roofs of sparks, fauns playing tenpins, flying satyrs, giants caught in spider webbs, etc.

"For the 'Palace of the Prophet Ell as' the imagination of the medium becomes still more fantastic.

"M. Sardou had cut the paper he was using into a certain shape. When he came to place himself under the influence his pencil was twice broken.

"'What is the matter?' asks Sardou. 'I must have a larger kind of paper.' 'I have none.' 'Go and get some.' And the Influence directs him to a certain stationer's shop that he had never noticed, but before which he had often passed. The strange power was quickly drawn from the dramatist. 'Now that you are convinced,' the spirit said to him, 'you have better things to do.' And Victorien Sardou was no longer a medium."

How did M. Sardou do it? His hand jumped here and there, everywhere, busy, but uncertain, a confused worker, which did not allow one to foresee its purpose.

"When one sees him work," states an account in the first number of "Mozart's House," "one perceives at once the lack of all premeditation and purpose; his hand, impelled by an occult force, follows the pencil or the burin in the most irregular and confused way, going with unexampled rapidity from place to place, and working over all parts of the drawing at the same time, without any method or system. From this there results at first an incoherent composition, the sense of which cannot be understood until it is quite completed." And the writer adds: "This singular proceeding is not M. Sardou's own work; we have seen all medium artists proceed in the same manner." (Spirit Review, 1858.)

M. Bois relates that the painter and engraver, Fernand Desmoulin, the friend of Emile Sola, several years ago suddenly found out that he was a medium. Under an influence, which he himself persists in believing to be extra-human, if not super-human, he drew, painted and engraved strange figures, unsuspected landscapes, and even authentic portraits of dead people—all totally different from any of his previous works.

M. Bois claims that the aesthetic character of these inspired works has no semblance of relationship with M. Desmoulin's normal productions. Moreover, M. Desmoulin uses an entirely different technique, and he says that he could not do anything consciously with the method he uses while under the spirit's influence. In the first place, the drawings, dry-points and water colors due to the spirit influence, and which are signed by Astarte, Old Master, and Instructor, are finished with a rapidity such (from twenty-five to forty minutes) that M. Desmoulin could not in the same space of time cover the same space even with the slightest sketch. And then, his hand does this work unconsciously, for he does not know what he is doing; he works in the dark, and often with his eyes blindfolded. Of the works produced after this odd fashion, M. Bois says: "It must be admitted that there is a disturbing and haunting beauty in these manifestations of a mysterious art. It is a radiant demonstration of unknown energies of which we are the unconscious depositaries."

The power which came so suddenly and unexpectedly to M. Desmoulin has departed, and he is no longer capable of producing those masterpieces. He has returned to his previous condition, and is now a normal and conscious artist again. He is so thoroughly convinced, however, that those prodigies of his pencil or his brush are foreign to himself, and intends to leave them to a museum, as so many psychological documents.

UPHOLDS A RIGHTEOUS LIFE.

Kate C. Havens Defines What She Considers the Beauty and Grandeur of Theosophy.

That every thought, word or action produces its definite result—not a reward or punishment imposed from without, but a result inherent in the action itself, definitely connected with it in relation to cause and effect.

That it is both the duty and interest of man to study this divine law closely, so that he may be able to adapt himself to it and to use it as we use other great laws of nature.

That it is necessary for man to attain a perfect control over himself, so that he may guide his life intelligently and in accordance with this law.

The advantages to be gained from a study of Theosophy are:

We gain a rational comprehension of life.

We learn how to govern ourselves, therefore how to develop ourselves.

We learn how best to help those whom we love, how to make ourselves useful to all with whom we come into contact, and ultimately to the whole human race.

We learn to view everything from the wider philosophic standpoint—never from the petty and purely personal view. Hence, it follows that, if the knowledge be assimilated:

The troubles of life are no longer so large for us.

We have no sense of injustice in connection with our surroundings or our destiny.

We are freed from the fear of death.

Our grief in connection with the death of those whom we love is very greatly mitigated.

We gain a totally different view of the life after death and we understand its place in our evolution.

We are free from religious fears or worry, either for ourselves or for our friends—fears as to "the salvation of the soul," for example.

We are no longer troubled by uncertainty as to our future fate, but live in perfect serenity and perfect fearlessness.

The spirit of Theosophy as defined by Mme. Blavatsky is as follows:

"A clean life, an open mind, a pure heart, an eager intellect, a brotherliness for all, a readiness to give and to receive advice and instruction, a courageous endurance of personal injustice, a brave declaration of principles, a valiant defense of those who are unjustly attacked, and a constant eye to the ideal of human progression and perfection which the sacred science depicts—these are the golden stairs up which the learner may climb to the temple of divine wisdom."

THE SWEETER SONG.

The sweeter song is the one unsung,
With ever a promise and hope to be;
It pleased my spirit when I was young,
It stays like honey on my tongue,
But its wonderful words escape from me;
It is a bird on a bending spray
All ready to sing—then it flies away!

But I up and after, over the hills,
Nor care a fig for the way it goes;
'Tis the pleasure of the laughing rills,
And my feet they follow where'er it wills,
By the wood and glade where the wild rose grows;
And ever before, with cadence clear,
This beautiful song I hear and hear!

It has the most enchanting rhymes,
As bright as waves of the golden light,
And as sweet as echoing evening chimes,
The eloquence pure of better times,
Of a day so dear beyond our night;
And it drives afar the thought of care,
Like a child's sweet laugh or a maiden's prayer!

It comes to me as morn to the sky,
While hidden in mist soft croons the sea;
And it startles my soul with wonders why—
To give it a voice, I ever should try,
For naught could equal its witchery;
'Tis the music of the inner heart,
'Till the days are done and the years depart!

—William Brunton.

The Dream Came True.

In No. 820, the question was asked, "Do Dreams Come True?" I say some do, as the following will show. I had a friend living in England, and he dreamed of a brother who had emigrated to America two or three years before. He dreamed that his brother was ill, and that he was dying. The room was square, whitewashed, and the only means of admitting light and air was by a grating over the head of the bed and door. The room was very poorly furnished. On the bed lay his brother, and a young man half way from the head of the bed watching. Then the dreamer awoke and thought nothing more about the dream.

In two weeks after a letter arrived in England telling him that his brother had died and that he had sent his trunk home, and the trunk arrived with the brother's effects and a letter giving particulars of death. In about two years after my friend took it into his head to visit America, and on arriving went to the young man's house to thank him for his kindness to his brother. In the course of conversation, my friend asked, "Could I see the room in which my brother died?"

The man said, "Yes, come with me."

They went to the house and my friend had no sooner entered the house when he recognized the turns, landing, and bed-room, everything was as plain to him as though he had lived there all his life.

I could give three or four such instances of dreams coming true, but I am old, my hand is shaky and memory bad, so must be content with this one instance of dreams coming true. But was it a dream or did he in his sleep leave his body, come to America, and after seeing his brother, go back again into his body?

THE FUTURE LIFE.

Progression Implies Activity, Rather Than a State of Rest.

Since the genesis of humanity, very many of the children of men, who have believed in the immortality of the soul, have pictured the land of the hereafter, as a place or condition of absolute happiness, peace and contentment—a place where the wicked shall cease from troubling and the weary shall find rest. A condition where the sore trials and severe struggles incident to human life, shall be forever unknown. Such an idea of the future life may be and probably is exceedingly comforting to a large majority of the human family, who have given the matter any thought. And it is a splendid idea to entertain, by those who wish to put in a whole eternity in doing nothing. But such an existence would be a torture to those progressive souls who long for a strenuous life of activity after death.

But when we think this matter over carefully, what assurances have we that our future lives will be more free from trials and troubles, than this life? The same Great Power which directs the affairs of human existence, also directs the affairs of after life. And what substantial reason can be given why that Power which controls the universe, will supply us with more happiness and contentment in the sweet bye and bye, than has been ours to enjoy in this life?

We are often told by persons who know no more about it than we do, that under Divine pleasure it is necessary for us to suffer the pains and endure the struggles of earth life, in order to fit us for the enjoyment of the happiness which so much abounds in the life to come. But when we come to the evidence of a blissful hereafter, poor, struggling, and finite man has none, and never had any. No one knows what will be the conditions of life after death. And we do not know but that our sorrows and pains will be greater than we have had to endure here.

The truth is that we are in the hands of an Infinite Power "that shapes our ends, rough-hew them how we will." It does not matter very much what we believe and what we do not believe, it will not change the purposes of that Power one jot or one tittle. Individual man may, by well directed and persistent effort, change, to a limited extent, his condition here; but the countless millions who have lived and will live, have had and will have no capacity to change the trend of Almighty Power. Man knows not and cannot know what that Power has in store for him.

So far as we have been able to learn, all animate and inanimate nature is in a state of perpetual activity. All is friction and unrest.

"All things exist by elemental strife."

Is it not reasonable to believe that the same order of things, under the direction of the same great Power, will exist through the numberless eons of eternity? Progress here in this world, is the result of strenuous and persistent effort. Let us ponder well the question whether progress can be made in any other manner in the hereafter.

To my mind it is far more comforting and reasonable, that our lives on the other side of the grave, will be active. That progression is the handmaid of eternity. That our success there can be attained only by hard and persistent labor. And that excellence must always be the reward of meritorious effort. Drones never get to the front anywhere.

Yes, give us a heaven of progress and activity, where the labors commenced on earth may be continued; and where the immortal soul may have full opportunity of mastering the vast problems with which it will be confronted in the world to come.

THE DAWNING OF THE LIGHT.

Day is dawning! Oh my brother!
Lift thine eyes to catch the ray;
Though we're on the storm-tossed billows,
This is Day! Eternal Day!
Though we've been by friends forsaken,
Left to struggle through the night,
Lift thine eyes! behold the gleaming
Of the dawning of the light.

Though its glimmer shines but faintly
O'er the wave and blinding spray,
Falter not, nor be despondent,
It will guide us on our way.
Lift thy head, though faint and weary,
Pull with all thy strength and might,
We shall reach the shore beyond us
In the dawning of the light.

Come, arise! Oh, drooping brother,
Think not of thyself alone,
There are thousands 'mid the breakers.
Listen! hear that shriek! that moan!
Up! be quick! his bark is sinking!
Raise him! help him through the fight,
Point him to the hallowed radiance
Of the dawning of the light.

Stretch thy helping hand, Oh, brother,
O'er the gulph where night holds sway,
Lead the new and hopeful nations.
Let old "isms" pass away,
Dealing death to ignorance, vices,
Superstition's galling blight—
Teaching thou the glorious freedom
Of the dawning of the Light.

Lighter, brighter grows our pathway,
As we guide the weak along,
Wafting songs of love and sunshine
Out upon the countless throng.
They will catch them and re-echo:
Making darkest hours bright—
When they realize the blessing
Of the dawning of the Light.

Light is now dispelling darkness.
'Tis the "Kingdom" now "at hand."
Shout the message o'er the breakers,
Till 'tis heard from sea to land!
Shout the joyful tidings gladly,
Of the "winning of the right."
It will make our Earth our Heaven
In the dawning of the Light.

Light is dawning for the millions
Who will then the distance span,
And the angels stand united
With the "Brotherhood of Man,"
Hand in hand upon the main-land
With our faces hopeful, bright,
"One with God," and with each other
In the dawning of the Light.

SEEKING THE SUPREME GOOD.

No Ideal, No Noble Passion, No Glorious Sacrifice, No Honest Endeavor for the Right Was Ever In Vain.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."—Matt., v:6.

This is the central beatitude; in a measure it embraces all the others, for every virtue they inculcate is included in righteousness. But it is often rejected as impracticable because fanciful teachers who substitute subtle definitions for simple duties have twisted its plain words until righteousness is made something so unreasonable as to be repulsive to a right mind. As a matter of fact, it means no more than rightness; the hunger and thirst for righteousness is but the earnest, supreme desire and endeavor to be right and to do right at all times, the appetite for the right.

Theological righteousness may mean some strange imputed quality laid on a man like a cloak to cover his real condition or a bill of health given to a sick man. But men who live next to real things care nothing one way or the other for theoretical rightness; they want the real article. And a right man will not be satisfied to have even the Most High think of him as being perfectly right when he knows he falls far short of it. He would rather be the faltering pursuer of actual rightness than the possessor of a hypothetical, ascribed perfection.

The Great Teacher cares nothing about imaginary virtues; he praises those who ardently seek the real ones. He knows that in the market of character cash alone is currency; here you cannot draw checks on some other person's deposits. To him it is better by far to die facing the right than to live in smug content with borrowed merits. THIS WORLD WILL NEVER BE CONTENT WITH A GOSPEL THAT OFFERS ONLY VICARIOUS VIRTUES; AT ITS HEART IT KNOWS TOO WELL ITS NEED OF THE GENUINE USABLE ONES; IT HAS AT LEAST THE DORMANT FACULTIES FOR AN APPETITE OF RIGHTNESS.

And all this world story is but a record of the struggle for rightness. All human progress is but its fruitage. In every age there have been glorious souls who have made this passion a thing that glowed in their lives and became a light to their day. In every man the divine discontent that divides him from the animal is the sign of this desire in some form; it shows man seeking to find more perfect, more nearly right relations with the things about him. AS THE THINGS ABOUT HIM COME TO INCLUDE GOD AND HEAVEN AND THINGS UNSEEN SO WILL HIS SEARCH FOR RIGHTNESS BECOME WIDER AND DEEPER AND MORE SPIRITUAL. EVERY FORM OF SPIRITUAL ASPIRATION, EVERY RELIGION, NO MATTER HOW UNCOUTH AND STRANGE, IS STILL THE SOUL OF MAN SEEKING RIGHT RELATIONS TO THE INFINITE.

What a glorious thing is this passion for the right; what visions it has seen, what strength it has given to their realization. It is the great tide that, moving restless and resistless in our bosoms, has carried us on toward God. We cannot but believe it is born of him. It does not originate it man, for it disturbs his peace, it stirs him from sloth, it spurs him to new and often unwelcome endeavors. It ever holds before him the shining possibility of a perfect being in a perfect world.

No wonder Christ used the figure of hunger and thirst. Literal appetites have been the motives back of the world's struggle for physical rightness; yet these cravings have not been more general or more forceful than those of the soul. But for hunger and thirst man would have lived in perfect content with the form and facts of life as he found them; progress, all that we call civilization, would not have been.

Man is happy in proportion as necessity compels him to heed these cravings. So is it in the moral world; the struggle has been our salvation. To cease to strive for rightness is to cease to live. Individually and nationally they are happy who accept the rigorous climate of lofty ethical ideals, who are not content to take life as they find it, but who seek to cultivate flowers and fruits of paradise on the sterile, rocky soil of the human heart. This is the life that Jesus shows, the life that seeks and finds the truth, that with passionate ardor seeks right relations both with his fellows and with his Father. Out of the fullness of experience, in the midst of his own struggle he encourages all who strive; they shall be satisfied. No ideal, no noble passion, no glorious sacrifice, no honest endeavor for the right was ever in vain; the soul finds itself in seeking the supreme good.

HENRY F. COPE.

YOUR MOTHER WILL BE THERE.

You may have a doubtful future, you may have a checkered now;
You may have your foolish notions and to evil make your bow;
You may have your many failings and of troubles have your share,
But please don't forget to notice, your old mother will be there.

You may be too busy counting your increasing wealth today,
To be mindful of the beggar who is sitting by the way;
You may lose your all tomorrow in a great financial snare,
But when you become a beggar your old mother will be there.

You may lie upon a sick-bed with a fever running high;
You may fall into the gutter and a helpless being lie;
You may be a hopeless victim of the liquor demon's glare,
While the world around deserts you—your old mother will be there.

You may cast her out—a pauper—in this cold, unfeeling world,
With your banners of false "goodness" to the public eye unfurled;
You may curse her in your anger if your callous conscience dare,
But when you have cooled a little, your old mother will be there.

You may make yourself a demon of the deepest, darkest kind,
And pass on to regions fitted to your calibre of mind;
But before you in her glory, with her mother love and prayer,
To uplift your soul from darkness, your old mother will be there.

DR. T WILKINS.

A forced match between a man and his religion sours his temper and leaves a barren bed.—Landor.

A FEW DIVERGENT POINTS ONLY.

Spiritualism and Theosophy Are Closely Allied.

The Theosophical Society was founded by Mme. H. P. Blavatsky and Col. H. S. Olcott, Nov. 17, 1875, in New York City. Its objects are:

To form a nucleus of the Universal Brotherhood of Humanity without distinction of race, creed, sex, caste or color.

To encourage the study of comparative religion, philosophy and science.

To investigate unexplained laws of nature and the powers latent in man.

The society is described by C. W. Leadbeater as follows:

It is composed of students, belonging to any religion in the world or to none, who are united by their approval of the above objects, by their wish to remove religious antagonisms and to draw together men of good will, whatsoever their religious opinions, and by their desire to study religious truths and to share the results of their studies with others. Their bond of union is not the profession of a common belief, but a common search for and aspiration for truth.

They hold that truth should be sought by study, by reflection, by purity of life, by devotion to high ideals, and they regard truth as a prize to be striven for, not as a dogma to be imposed by authority. They consider that belief should be the result of individual study or intuition, and not its antecedent, and should rest on knowledge, not on assertion. They extend tolerance to all, even to the intolerant, not as a privilege they bestow, but as a duty they perform, and they seek to remove ignorance, not to punish it. They see every religion as an expression of the divine wisdom, and prefer its study to its condemnation, and its practice to proselytism. Peace is their watchword, as truth is their aim.

Theosophy is the body of truths which forms the basis of all religions, and which cannot be claimed as the exclusive possession of any. It offers a philosophy which renders life intelligible and which demonstrates the justice and the love which guide its evolution. It puts death in its rightful place, as a recurring incident in an endless life, opening the gateway to a fuller and more radiant existence. It restores to the world the science of the spirit, teaching man to know the spirit as himself and the mind and body as his servants. It illuminates the scriptures and doctrines of religions by unveiling their hidden meaning, thus justifying them at the bar of intelligence so they are ever justified in the eyes of intuition.

Members of the Theosophical Society study these truths and theosophists endeavor to live them. Every one willing to study, to be tolerant, to aim high and to work perseveringly is welcomed as a member, and it rests with the member to become a true theosophist.

Rests on Three Propositions.

Theosophy rests broadly upon the following three great truths:

1. God exists and He is good. He is the great lifegiver who dwells within us and without us, is undying and eternally beneficent. He is not heard nor seen, nor touched, yet is perceived by the man who desires perception.

2. Man is immortal, and his future is one whose glory and splendor have no limit.

3. A divine law of absolute justice—[Karma]—rules the world, so that each man is in truth his own judge, the dispenser of glory or gloom to himself, the decreer of his life, his reward, his punishment.

To each of these truths are attached others, subsidiary and explanatory. From the first truth it follows that:

In spite of appearances, all things are definitely and intelligently moving together for good; that all circumstances, however untoward they may seem, are in reality exactly what are needed; that everything around us tends, not to hinder us, but to help us, if it is only understood.

That, since the whole scheme thus tends to man's benefit, clearly it is his duty to learn to understand it.

That when he thus understands it, it is also his duty intelligently to co-operate in this scheme.

From the second truth it follows:

That the true man is a soul, and the body is only an appanage.

That he must, therefore, regard everything from the standpoint of the soul, and that in every case when an internal struggle takes place he must realize his identity with the higher and not with the lower.

That what is commonly called his life is only one day in his true larger life.

That death is a matter of far less importance than is usually supposed, since it is by no means the end of life, but merely the passage from one stage of it to another.

That man has also an immense evolution behind him, the study of which is most fascinating and instructive.

That there is an absolute certainty of final attainment for every human soul, no matter how far he may seem to have strayed from the path of evolution.

PASSED TO THE REALM OF SOULS.

Mrs. Neil Burgess, Wife of the Actor.

Mrs. Neil Burgess, wife of the actor, and a great believer in the philosophy of Spiritualism passed to the Great Beyond, Sept. 17, where she was welcomed by many dear ones.

Mrs. Nellie Temple Brigham (a friend for many years) officiated at the house and grave. Many came from all parts, who had not heard a spiritual service before. They were entranced by the grand and inspirational words of Mrs. Brigham.

Mrs. Neil Burgess was one of the most spiritual women this world has ever produced, and during her travels from Maine to California she made lifelong friends by the score. The Golden Rule was her religion. She was a member of Mrs. Brigham's society. Her husband, mother and son thirteen years of age are left, but they have the great satisfaction of knowing that one of the sweetest, truest and most spiritual lives has passed on across the great borderline of the unseen. In the words of Longfellow:

"There is no death! What seems so is transition.
This life of mortal breath
Is but the suburb of the life Elysian
Whose portal we call death."

J. OSBORNE LUNT.

Highlands of Navesink, N. J.

The Victoria Institute and Doctor Peebles.

EVEN IN ITS LATER YEARS, THE VICTORIA INSTITUTE IS A RETROGRESSIVE SOCIETY, LARGELY COMMITTED TO THE MAINTENANCE OF THAT WHICH THE BEST SCHOLARSHIP, BOTH IN AND OUT OF THE CHURCH, HAS DISCARDED,—IS AN ORGANIZATION DEVOTED PRINCIPALLY TO THE PROPAGATION AND FURTHERANCE OF ERROR, FALSEHOOD AND DELUSION; AN ENEMY TO TRUTH AND TO THE BEST INTERESTS OF MANKIND,—HONESTLY AND BIGOTEDLY IN ERROR, COMPOSED OF "BLIND LEADERS OF THE BLIND." IT WAS TOO MUCH TO EXPECT FROM A SOCIETY OF THIS CHARACTER THAT IT WOULD HAVE READ BEFORE IT, AND HAVE INCLUDED IN ITS "JOURNAL," A PAPER IN WHICH THE TRUTH OF SO GREAT A HERESY AS SPIRITUALISM WAS MAINTAINED. THE TREATMENT AWARDED DR. PEEBLES' PAPER BY IT WAS IN KEEPING WITH THE ENTIRE RECORD OF THE SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF THIS CHAMPION OF EXTREME ORTHODOXY.

In 1866 there was founded a society called "The Victoria Institute and Philosophical Society of Great Britain." Many years ago I obtained an almost complete set of the "Journal of Transactions" of this society, and at a later date, after Dr. J. M. Peebles had become a member thereof, I obtained, through his kindness, the subsequent numbers of the "Journal" up to the time of this procurement. I am, therefore, enabled to write understandingly of this society and its literature.

Objects of the Society.

As stated in its original "Objects, Constitution and By-Laws," the primary object of the society was to investigate the most important questions of philosophy and science, "especially those that bear upon the great truths revealed in Holy Scripture, with the view of defending them against the opposition of Science, falsely so-called." Explanation and illustration of this "Object" of the society, as found in the first volume of the "Journal" will now be given. In it we are told that it is impossible for the Word of God in nature and the Word of God in Holy Scripture to contradict each other; that if Science and Scripture are at issue, one of them is wrong, untrue; and that to maintain the integrity of God's revealed word, what appears to be science, if it contradicts the Bible, must be regarded as pseudo-science,—the "rash deductions of false or pseudo science." (pp. vi., 6, 7, 9).

It is declared the duty of the society to hear and encourage all who are willing to battle with the "oppositions of science," "in order to reduce its pretensions to their real value." It is to freely question what is called "Established Science," and it will be its business to recognize no human science as "established." (p. 30). At the first meeting of the Society, its president said, that, just as rationalistic and scientific writers criticise and expose the defects of the Bible, so must the society criticise and expose science. "Let science have its own way—it was a 'chartered libertine,'" he continued. Again he said that the society must refute "the deleterious nonsense published under the name of Science," and it "must watch the dishonest use of statements appearing in scientific works, calculated to raise doubt as to the truth of the Bible." (pp. 80, 81). In a paper on "Geology and the Bible," the Book of Nature is made to appear inferior to the Bible. "Sacred Scripture is the word of God, a word which he speaks,"—his express Word and Thought,—while "The Book of Nature" is only "in a certain sense, an expression of divine thought." (p. 337).

It is thus seen that the object of this society was to antagonize and belittle science, in order that the literal and infallible truth of the teaching of the Bible on scientific as well as other matters might be sustained. Anything that science taught that was not in agreement with the Bible was necessarily false. The society was a continuance, on the same old principles and in the same old manner, of the tactics and methods of the church, Catholic and Protestant, which had from the beginning opposed and anathematized every new discovery in science regarded as, in any way, impairing the truth of any of its theological dogmas, or inconsistent with the words of its Holy Book.

It sought to maintain the absolute truth of the Books of Genesis, Exodus, and the other so-called Mosaic books, in their accounts of the creation and fall of man, the antediluvian history, the deluge, the tower of Babel, the origin of language, the lives of the patriarchs, the sojourn in and exodus from Egypt, with all the miracles,—the truth of all of which as historic verities has now been given up by the ablest and most competent Christian scholars. What this society tried to conserve by attacking science and scientists is now acknowledged to be a myth and legend, instead of true history, by the best scholarship of the world, Christian and non-Christian. "The Higher Criticism" has forever demolished the historical accuracy of the Books of Moses, of which Moses wrote nothing.

Geology and Genesis.

As is now well known, the impossibility of reconciling geology and the Book of Genesis, the fact that geology is correct and Genesis is wrong, is now generally acknowledged by the Christian world. What shall be thought, then, of the preposterous statement, in the first paper in the first volume of the "Journal" of this Society, that no geologist can point to a single geological fact, or even to any respectable theory taught in any geological work extant, than can in the least be considered as contradictory to the Mosaic account of the creation? (p. 15). This statement illustrates the character of this society, as also does this assertion made in a paper on Geology and the Bible by Rev. John Kirk, author of books on the Bible and Geology. "This idea of the coexistence of men with mammoths is not a fact, even if perfectly true. It is only an inference, at best, perhaps a theory by which certain facts are partially explained." (p.378). This reverend father in God actually declared that a certain thing, even if it was "perfectly true," was not "a fact." Mirabile dictu! The Standard Dictionary defines "fact" as "anything strictly true." Yet this sapient reverendissimo and assailer of scientific "facts" says that some thing "perfectly true" is not "a fact."

Opposed to Darwinism.

Of course, this society would oppose Darwinism. In the inaugural address of the vice-president (the chairman) it is said that "confessedly the majority of known facts in nature are irreconcilable" with Darwin's theory of the origin of species; also, that Darwin's arguments on the evolution of the eye "are founded on monstrous assumptions utterly unsupported by fact" (pp. 52, 62). In this volume the exploded myth and unscientific absurdity that prior to the building of the tower of Babel, all the earth was of one language, and that the differing languages arose from the miraculous confounding of the speech of the builders of the tower, by God, in order to prevent the tower from reaching heaven,—this fairy tale is championed as true. (pp. 151, et seq.).

Taking up, now, the last volume of the "Journal" that I have received, the 28th, what do we find? Instead of overthrowing the facts of "established science" (it denied the existence of any "established science"), and instead of crushing the "oppositions of science, falsely so-called," the "pseudo-science," as it was called by the society, has, partly at least, overcome the society. It was, no doubt, owing to the establishment of so many scientific truths in the world, that caused the society prudently to modify its great primary "Object." As it now reads, these words so important in its first statement of objects, are entirely omitted; "with the view of defending them against the oppositions of science, falsely so-called." This belligerent society, that started out with a flourish of trumpets about its work in crushing pseudo-science, science falsely so-called, has been forced to haul in its horns, and now no longer attempts to berate, criticise, and expose the truths of "established science," but declares its primary object simply to be the investigation of the questions of Philosophy and Science that bear upon the truths of "Holy Scripture."

But, notwithstanding this change in its published "Object," the old virus is still regnant in the society, bigoted, narrow-minded conservatism of the Bible-worshipers is still manifest in its proceedings, but not to so great a degree as in the olden time. The world has grown since 1867, and even the Victoria Institute has made some progress in liberal thought. Many of its members have been forced to accept the truth of evolution, and they speak of it as true, more or less, in their papers before the society; but all do not accept it. One speaker says he is "convinced that the whole theory of evolution is unsound and has no foundation whatever. Another says that the science of archaeology gives a "complete negative to the evolutionist theory," and that the theory of special creation is that which archaeology tends to confirm ((pp. 113, 118, 122, Vol. 28). A paper is devoted to the alleged passage of the Red Sea by the Israelites, in which it is declared that the "Bible narrative is * * a very graphic and correct acount of what really took place; and the author asserts that he has "proved that the Bible narrative is true to the very letter,"—this about that which, at the best, can be only an exaggerated and semi-mythical account of a possible historical event (in my opinion, the story has a historical basis). See pp. 276, 280).

Discoveries in the East.

Another paper treats of the remarkable confirmation of "Holy Scripture" by discoveries in the East, in which the historical accuracy in detail and minutiae of the Biblical statements is said to have been confirmed by discoveries in Palestine and other Oriental lands. The author says, "We may implicitly rely on the historic accuracy of the accounts from the time of the call of Abraham downwards;" while the chairman speaks of the "chain of evidence which has accumulated of the marvelous historical accuracy of the Old Testament" (p. 142). How far from the truth all this is! It is true that the general truth of the accounts of certain evtnts in the Bible has been confirmed by the archaeological discoveries of the past fifty years; but nothing prior to the time of Rehoboam, son of Solomon, has been confirmed thereby, so far as genuine history is concerned.

Nothing in the mythical lives of the patriarchs, in the Mosaic period, the period of the Judges, and those of Samuel, Saul, David and Solomon, has been confirmed. But a good deal has been confirmed by the Assyrian and Babylonian monuments in cuneiform inscriptions, of the times of the monarchies of Israel and Judah. Some details have been confirmed; but a great many inaccuracies, mistakes, etc. in the Biblical books of Kings and Chronicles have been indicated by the Assyro-Babylonian records. The confused, conflicting chronology in the Biblical books has been in many cases corrected by the more accurate chronology of the Assyrians and Babylonians. The Hebrew records, while embodying much genuine history, are very fragmentary, confused, inaccurate in detail, and sometimes misleading. Great light has been thrown upon the Bible narratives by the discoveries in the East, and they have largely supplemented and corrected the very imperfect accounts of the Bible.

A Retrogressive Society.

It is thus seen that, even in its later years, the Victoria Institute is a retrogressive society, largely committed to the maintenance of that which the best scholarship, both in and out of the church, has discarded,—is an organization devoted principally to the propagation and furtherance of error, falsehood and delusion; an enemy to truth and to the best interests of mankind,—honestly and bigotedly in error, composed of "blind leaders of the blind." It was too much to expect from a society of this character that it would have read before it, and have included in its "Journal," a paper in which the truth of so great a heresy as Spiritualism was maintained. The treatment awarded Dr. Peebles' paper by it was in keeping with the entire record of the sayings and doings of this champion of extreme orthodoxy.

Doctor Peebles' Paper.

Dr. Peebles, being asked to prepare a paper to be read before the Victoria Institute, of which he had been a member for a number of years, wrote one on "Immortality, Its Naturalness, Its Possibilities, and Proofs." As is customary, the paper was printed and sent to the members prior to its reading at the society's meeting. At this meeting, when all were assembled to hear its reading by Dr. Peebles, the Doctor was summoned to the council room and informed that the council had decided, "for good and sufficient reasons," that the paper was not considered appropriate to be read. Becoming his property by this action of the council, Dr. Peebles delivered the rejected address at the London Spiritualist Alliance, May 25 last. It was then published in London Light, and is now on sale in this country and England.

As a large part of the paper, in that section giving the "Proofs" of immortality, consists of the testimony of eminent men to the reality of the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism, while said Spiritualism is warmly defended and extolled, it is readily seen why the Institute would not permit this paper to be read and made a part of its "Journal." Although the phenomena of Spiritualism present the only proof the world has of a continued existence after physical dissolution, and although owing to the spread of materialistic ideas, fostered and taught by many men of science, the world demands that some tangible evidence be furnished that man survives the body's death, yet this Christian society, as well as the church in general (with some notable exceptions), refuses to even examine the alleged proofs of life after death that Spiritualism claims to possess. One potent reason for this is that the nature of life after death, as taught by Spiritualism, is radically different from that which the church has so long indicated. The testimony of the hosts of returning spirits as to the character of the spirit-world overthrows the puerile old time conceptions of that world, as taught by the Christian church. The heaven and hell of the old theologies are shown to be only chimeras of the imagination, irrational, not to say absurd, and, in reality, blasphemous, embodying low and mean ideas of the nature and being of the Supreme Being. What a pitiful notion of God underlies the heaven and the hell of orthodox Christianity; and one of the greatest blessings that the world derives from Spiritualism is its demolition of the crude, barbarous teachings of the churches about the other life.

Dr. Peebles' pamphlet would be a good thing to circulate freely among the benighted orthodox, groping in the dark, and needing light upon the real nature of the immortal existence and of the evidences thereanent to be found in Modern Spiritualism.

COMING EVENTS.

They Often Cast a Shadow In the Future—What Induced the Terrible Dream Foreshadowing the Death of George Johnson?

After dreaming Friday night of falling long distances, and screaming in agony as he awakened, George Johnson, a mason, fell six stories to his death in the new Breitmeyer building at Miami and Gratiot avenues yesterday noon.

Johnson was working on the fifth floor. When the noon whistle blew he rushed to the elevator, with many others. Those behind him were horrified to see him plunge into the shaft and go hurling downward to the basement. The men say he placed one foot on the elevator, which was going up at the time, and then slipped. He was instantly killed.

The victim of the accident was an Englishman and came here from London only a few months ago. His wife and four children have been here but a month. At their home at Hastings and Clinton streets this noon there was a pitiful scene. The wife and little boys were waiting for the husband and father to come to his dinner. The table was set, and smoking meat and vegetables were ready.

Mrs. Johnson was told the truth gradually. After she recovered a little from her grief she told of the dream her husband had the night before.

"He dreamed that we had two homes—one here and the other in London. He went to London to see me and they told him I was dead. Then he said in his dream: 'Why did you bury her so soon, before I could see her?'

"Then just before he awakened he thought he was falling, falling, and he gave a scream and reached to see if I was really there. I knew something was going to happen today, and asked him to be careful when he kissed me goodbye this morning."

Then she broke into passionate sobs.

"Oh George," she cried, "Why didn't your dream come true? Why did it have to be you?"

The little boy stood around, wondering what awful thing had happened, but hardly understanding.

The couple had four sons, Charlie, aged 14, a messenger in the Bank of Toronto; Albert, 10 years; Walter, 7, and John, 2. Mrs. Johnson's only other living relative is her mother, who lives in Toronto.

Coroner Toepel will hold an inquest.

Not yet recovered from the shock of her husband's horrible death, Mrs. Geo. Johnson visited Coroner Toepel after the accident without a penny, and appealed to him for assistance for herself and her three children; one of the most pitiful cases which ever came to the attention of the coroner.—Detroit, Michigan, Tribune.

Under Hypnotic Spell.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Miss Ruby Castleman, the pretty 22-year old orphan Sunday School teacher, who is held at the Polk Station on charges of forgery of checks in excess of $1,000, is becoming a deeper mystery to the police, and she now declares she knows nothing of what she has done in the last two months, but has been acting under an hypnotic spell imposed by some one unknown to her.

Poor Property.

Religion is the poorest property that a man can possess. He cannot sell it for a cent nor give it to another. It will not buy bread or meat, or clothes. It will not pay the doctor or the undertaker. It will not give life, or save from death. A person cannot prove that he has religion. He cannot produce it. When a man says that he has religion, no one can say that he lies or tells the truth. Religion is not a claim upon anything, or anybody. A pawnbroker would not lend a nickel on the best religion in the world. It costs a lot to get it, but when one has it one cannot mortgage it for a meal of victuals. It is more expensive to keep than a trotting horse, a yacht, or an automobile.—Truth Seeker.

Information How They May Give Birth to Happy, Healthy Children Absolutely Without Pain—Sent Free.

No woman need any longer dread the pains of child-birth, or remain childless. Dr. J. H. Dye has devoted his life to relieving the sorrows of women. He has proved that all pain at childbirth may be entirely banished, and he will gladly tell you how it may be done absolutely free of charge. Send your name and address to Dr. J.H. Dye, 151 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y., and he will send you, postpaid, his wonderful book which tells how to give birth to happy, healthy children, absolutely without pain; also, how to cure sterility. Do not delay, but write to-day.

Some Defects in the World.

As Noted and Pointed Out by Laura B. Payne.

"It is a lamentable fact that our old people, in the majority of cases those who have lived sober, honest lives, and served society many years, many times come to the poor-house or prison. And so disgusting is our charity system, backed by braying priests and preachers and hypocritical cant, its millionaire donors on the one hand and pauperized recipients on the other, that our honest, self-respecting people would prefer death rather than accept it."

I take some exceptions to the article, "Work Fit For Mind," from the pen of French Hollinshead in No. 820 of The Progressive Thinker. These are the opening lines of an article, "If a man will not work neither shall he eat," by Mary A. Ingalls, published in No. 825 of The Progressive Thinker. I take exceptions to some of her statements in that article and here are some of them. She says in answer to Mr. Hollinshead's reference to the youth of our country growing up in tatters and rags without an education, "Our government provides compulsory education for children, books are provided free of cost to the parents, and truant officers see that they are kept in school."

The matter of compulsory education is lift with the states and many of them have no compulsory school law. As to the government furnishing books free of cost to parents, nothing is farther from the facts. This also is a matter left with the states and the state of New York (where Mrs. Ingalls lives) may furnish books to the poor, but in many of the states where I have lived and had personal experience as teacher in our public schools, I know that books are not furnished free.

Then Mr. Hollinshead may have had reference more particularly to that vast class of children in the United States whose poverty-stricken condition either compels them to work or who cannot afford books and clothing.

My sister has not studied carefully the economic conditions of our country if she does not know such a class exists.

There are according to reliable statistics more than a million children in the factories, work shops, mills and mines of our land. Not 30 per cent of the children of the working class finish ward school, not 15 per cent enter high school, and less than 1 per cent enter college. Yet this is the country that boasts of its free school system.

It is true we have a splendid free educational system, but we have not a free industrial system, and the child of the industrial slave gets little benefit from the system, from its lack of opportunity to utilize it.

Few understand the rapidity with which the school room is being closed to the children of the nation and the factory, department stores, workshops, mills and mines, like a yawning gulf opening to receive them.

I know we have truancy laws galore, but since both the law-making and the law-enforcing powers of government are in the hands of the class to whose interest it is that the children should be in the factory and not in the school, the laws simply serve to boast of and nothing more.

She says it is sentimental nonsense, this talk of young women being compelled by conditions over which they have no control, to sell themselves for bread. That the charge of overdrawing the picture be not incurred, let the following authoritative evidence be considered:

The New York Sun of February 8, 1901, describes the opening of a factory in New York City by the American Tobacco Company. Cheroots were to be made in this factory in competition with other factories which refused to be absorbed by the trusts. The trust advertised for girls. The crowd of men and boys who wanted work was so great in front of the building that the police were forced with their clubs to clear them away.

The wages paid the girls was $2.50 per week, sixty cents of which went for car fare.

Miss Nellie Mason Auten, a graduate student of the department of Sociology at the University of Chicago, recently made a thorough investigation of the garment trades of Chicago. Her figures were published in the American Journal of Sociology and commented upon by the Literary Digest.

She found women working ten hours a day, six days a week, for forty cents per week (a rate of two-thirds of a cent an hour). Many women earned less than a dollar a week, and none of them worked every week.

The following table will best summarize Miss Auten's investigations among a portion of the garment workers:

	Av. Ind. Weekly Wages	Av. No. Weeks Empl'yd	Av. Yr'ly Earnings
Dressmakers	$ .90	42.	$37.00
Pants finishers	1.31	27.58	42.41
Housewives and pants finishers	1.58	30.21	47.49
Seamstresses	2.03	32.78	64.10
Pants makers	2.13	30.77	75.61
Miscellaneous	2.77	29.	81.80
Tailors	6.22	31.96	211.92
General average	$2.48	31.18	$76.74

She goes on to say that for all the idle and hungry among womankind the farm offers a panacea, and one would think that farm life in America was a veritable Utopia, where every farm house with its musical instrument, its cows, etc., stood with wide open doors inviting the weary and hungry to come in and rest and be fed. Good wages!

I wonder if she, like some other writers on the industrial question thinks $2.50 and $3.00 a week good wages?

I was reared on a farm, and know outside of my experience there something of the fate of hired help on the farm.

As a general thing it is long hours of hardest toil for small pay, and when night comes the hired girl or man is too tired to even listen to sweet strains of music, much less to learn to play, but feels like crawling away and falling to sleep with utter weariness.

Then, even if the farm could give employment to all, that the millions of struggling women and girls in cities without a home or a cent can immediately transport themselves to the farms to engage in the hard drudgery there without first having prepared for it, is absurd in the extreme.

Statistics given by the United States Commissioner of Labor show that there are a million and a half of the unemployed, a gigantic army of the disinherited, for whom there are no jobs of any kind.

Of course the same ones are not idle all the time, but that is the average above the number of places to be filled.

It is not because there is little work to be done. The world's work must be done, much more than is at present being done, but under the present system those who have the positions must work long hours, which might be cut down one-half, giving as many more employment. And the children might be taken out of the great whirlpool of industry and placed in school, and their present places filled by the idle, rich, non-producing class now hanging as parasites upon the body politic.

This writer excuses the fact that, as Mr. Hollinshead says: "Old age, too, has been kicked into the gutter, to end earthly life in a poor-house, or prison," by explaining that people bring poverty on themselves by making mistakes, and gives for example a generous-hearted man who made himself poor by going on notes for those whom he deemed honest and wished to help. May be they were honest, or intended to be, but from force of circumstances under our murderous system, could do no better, and the man who signed the notes did right under a right system, but few can afford to do right or be themselves under the existing disordered order.

Then we have but to look about us at the charity institutions, and listen to the everlasting cry for help from both old and young, to know that the above quoted words are true.

In the city of New York in a recent year nineteen per cent of the people, or 1,387,348 souls applied for relief from charity; fourteen per cent of the families of Manhattan were evicted during the year of 1903 for non-payment of rent; ten per cent of those who died in Manhattan were buried in a pauper's grave. What does this mean but poverty and misery? I wonder if this vast army are willingly idle, or have they made mistakes through impulses of generosity, or are they one part of the product of the system that makes millionaires and paupers, "castles and caves, luxury and squalor, painted parasites on the boulevards, and painted poverty among the red lights?"

Our charity, another product of the present capitalistic system, is a disgrace to civilization. Our ministers stand in their fine pulpits and beg for money for charitable purposes, and in the next breath condemn the only system of government yet proposed that would forever stop the cause of pauperism and the need for charity.

It is a lamentable fact that our old people, in the majority of cases those who have lived sober, honest lives and served society many years, many times come to the poor-house or prison. And so disgusting is our charity system, backed by braying priests and preachers and hypocritical cant, its millionaire donors on the one hand and pauperized recipients on the other, that our honest, self-respecting people would prefer death rather than accept it.

The government is not to blame for any individual's mistake, but that is not the question; neither can it be dismissed in such a way. Our children are growing up in ignorance and wage slavery, our middle-aged men and youths are standing idle and empty-handed while women and children at starvation wages do the work. Our old people are coming with grey hairs in sorrow to the grave.

What is the remedy? A co-operative commonwealth where the laboring man will own the means of production and distribution. Abolition of wage slavery. Abolition of the capitalistic system of government where a few individuals own the land, the machinery, mills, factories, railroads and mines, the forests and fields and all other means of production and transportation, and into whose coffers flow constantly immense profits making the millions that are afterwards used for exploitation, charity and in sumptuous living. While the producer out of whose pockets the profits have flown because he owned nothing except his power to work, is reduced to penury with all its attendant train of evils.

Place the children in schools, make women economically independent, pension the old and make it possible for all who are able and willing to earn an honest living, and soon the cry of want and suffering will cease to be heard in our land, and peace will reign on earth and good will among men.

It is not a question of a division of property. That is an old communistic idea and has no place in the contention of intelligent sociologists for a change in our system of government to fit the tide of evolution that has swept us on from a competitive and industrial system to a co-operative or collective industrial system. We have already collective industry. What we need next is collective ownership of all things collectively used.

Yours for the new dispensation,
LAURA B. PAYNE.

"BABY, GO TO BED."

Almost any man can say it,
Can say, "Baby, go to bed";
But how many can enforce it
When a little tousle-head
Perks his head up sort of sideways
In the way we daddies know
And says, half a-smile, half tearful,
"Papa, me don't 'ants to doe."

And pleads: "Me ain't s'eepy, papa,
Me don't 'ants to doe to bed."
And you see the curls a-tumble
On the little baby head;
And you look up at his mother
In a deprecating way,
And you hide behind your paper
And you let the baby play.

Yes, 'most any dad can say it,
Can say, "Baby, go to bed."
But how many can enforce it
When a little tousle-head
Says: "I'ms busy now a-p'ayin' ";
Whispers soft, "Don't papa know?"
Saying, "I'ms ain't s'eepy, papa,"
Pleading, "I'ms don't 'ants to doe."

A SPIRITUAL MISSIVE

To the Members of the Frances E. Willard Health and Developing Circle.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:—So many of your dear letters remain unanswered that I find it impossible to write direct to each one, so if you will accept of me in this way and the editor is willing, I will tell you through the columns of The Progressive Thinker, that our circle continues to revolve and is kept moving by a few faithful members who are alive to the health and happiness that it bestows.

In my last letter to you through the columns of this paper I left it with you as individuals to keep your appointment Thursday evenings with Sister Frances E. Willard, and all who have done so write that they have been greatly blessed with improved health, which includes spiritual unfoldment.

When Miss Willard came to the earth plane in May, 1898, and perfected the plan of communication between mortals and her, she said that "the church doors needed to open and receive three trees within its fold, namely Spiritualism, Divine healing, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and under the shelter of their spreading branches increase its usefulness a hundred fold."

Dear souls, this great need is as urgent today as it was seven years ago, when I first perceived it, and what are we doing towards bringing it about? The message was given us to deliver, to pass on to others, who did not receive it from the same source that we did. It is a sacred mission, and is one of the answers to the many aspirations of our souls, asking "what shall we do to be saved?" It means that we must work and develop ourselves more spiritually. We give too much time and strength to the material, and neglect the spiritual. Nature only asks of us one-seventh part of our time for our soul's development, but we become so engrossed with the physical world that we give to it the force and power that rightly belongs to the higher realms, and thus we become fraudulent in our natures, and unbalanced, and health and happiness suffer in consequence.

Now, dear friends, we are still pegging away at Evanston, hoping to obtain recognition there as representatives of the Truth. It is a solid fort of skepticism, comparatively speaking, but if we keep on with our bombardment, we hope in time to capture it for the cause of freedom, and set each soul it contains free indeed, giving it the liberty which is its birthright. It is a terrible thing, my friends, to see the many souls languishing in their prisons on the earth plane. Some are embodied, and many more are disembodied, all feeling the darkness that surrounds them, but not knowing which way to turn to perceive the light that is to guide them out of it.

Naturally, we all turn to the church for that light, but oh, how bitterly we are disappointed, although there are gleams of it here and there within the sacred portals, but they are so shaded by materialism that they do not brighten our way as they should. So let us all unite and pound on the doors with all our might, that they may be opened to the three greatest elements of good that the world knows of today, and under the banners of Spirit Communion, Divine Healing, and a Temperate Living, march on to new and greater victories that will place the twentieth century inhabitants of earth far up the hill of knowledge into the realm of health and happiness.

My love goes out to each and every one of you inspired by the greater love of our arisen sister who is more alive to the needs of humanity than I can ever expect to be, but I sense enough to know that as a band of mortal spirits we should be faithful in keeping our worldly appointments, and let our prayers and aspirations be for "light, more light," and "lead kindly light." When we realize that our arisen sister, cultured, refined, educated and experienced, turns back from greater glories to let her light shine upon our paths, that we may follow where she leads us, have we confidence in her?

I have—have you? If so, ask her any question you will, that the answering of will have a tendency to lead us into greater light, and I will try to write as best I can and send them to the editor of The Progressive Thinker, who will or will not publish them at his own discretion. Now, brothers and sisters, let me hear from you all, and as the long winter evenings are approaching, again let us resume our sittings as an unbroken circle, not forgetting to be thankful to the dear ones who have kept it alive, chief among them is Belle Bush, whose faith is greater than a grain of mustard seed, and who writes

"Life, life divine is thrilling
All the pulses of the earth;
Lo! it changes but to brighten,
And death is but a birth,—
A casting off of garments
Made to be thrown away,
A flitting from a dwelling
That's crumbling to decay.

" 'Tis a rest, a joyous transit,—
'Tis change that we call death;
Then why should we seek to flee it,
Or fear its chilling breath?
'Tis rising like the eagle
When it soars toward the sun;
'Tis the spirit flitting homeward
When its earthly task is done.

Henceforth I'll sing with gladness,
Death was, but is no more;
While my heart takes up the music
Of childhood's happy lore.
For life is all about me,
And love, the deep and strong,
Holds me fast in her embraces,
And soothes me with her song,
While with joy my heart is singing,
'Neath the banner Love unfurled.
Lo! Death hath fled to darkness,
And life is in the world."

Yours Lovingly,
ELSA HORNBECK.

A LITTLE SKETCH.

What this troubled old world needs
Is less quibbling over creeds,
Fewer words and better deeds.

Less of "Thus and so shall you Think and act and say and do."
More of "How may I be true?"

Less of wrangling over text;
Less of creed and code perplexed;
More of charity unvexed.

Less of shouting: "I alone
Have the right to hurl the stone;"
More of heart that will condone.

Less of ruling: "Hear: you must Hold this tenet, wrong or just;"
More of patient, hopeful trust.

Less of microscopic scan
Of the faults of fellow-man;
More of brave, uplifting plan.

Less of dogmas, less pretence,
Less of trust in providence,
More belief in common sense.

More of chords of kindness blent
O'er the discords of dissent—
Then will come the great content.

"To be good, and to do good"—
Simple, plain, for him who would,
A creed that may be understood.

A SYMPOSIUM.

Suggested by Dr. Alex. Caird, of Lynn, Mass.

Massachusetts steps to the front and demands a hearing. Alex. Caird, M. D., an influential Spiritualist, suggests a Symposium on an exceedingly important subject. It will be inaugurated in his special honor as a leading and highly respected Spiritualist of the Old Bay State, one who is constantly working for the spread of the Truth as manifested in Spirit Return. It will prove especially interesting, suggestive and valuable to every reflective mind.

The Important Question.

What Does Spiritualism Teach That Spiritualists Believe in Common?

TEACHINGS OF SPIRITUALISM.

It Is Based Upon the Solid Foundation of Natural Law.

To the Editor:—I am happy to comply with your request for an article on the subject, "What Does Spiritualism Teach That Spiritualists Believe in Common?"

The discussion of this question is timely, for everywhere, in the press and upon the rostrum, do we behold an amazing conglomeration of ideas set forth in the name of Spiritualism. It is high time some distinctions were drawn, for the benefit of the public mind, between the genuine teachings of philosophical Spiritualism and the hybrid monstrosities set forth in its name.

Are the teachings of the Bible a part of Spiritualism? Just as much as are the teachings of the Koran, the Zend Avesta, the Egyptian Book of the Dead, or any other ancient writing which contains some truth and much error.

Whatever truth the Bible contains is a part of Spiritualism, not because it is found between the lids of the so-called sacred volume, but because it is the truth. Spiritualism is not founded upon the teachings of the Bible, nor does it draw its inspiration from an ignorant and barbarous past; but rather is it based upon the solid foundation of natural law, and receives its inspiration through the loftiest minds of the present age.

The Bible, it is true, contains much of the phenomena of Spiritualism, that is, much spiritism; but the claim that the Bible teaches the philosophy of Spiritualism is untrue, for the Spiritual Philosophy, in its fulness and entirety, was not known to the world until fifty years ago. It is a product of the nineteenth century,—a product of the ripest culture, the highest ethical development, and the latest and best thought of the world.

Founded upon the Bible? No! Why go to that ancient volume for proof of our theory? Why rehearse its foolish tales and recall the testimony of its unknown writers—dead and gone these centuries—men of unknown character and unscientific mind, when we call upon the stand such living witnesses as Lodge, Varley, Crookes, Wallace and Flammarion? Prove our doctrine by the Bible? Yes, to be sure. But is there anything under the shining heavens which we cannot prove by the Bible, from Mormonism to Dowieism and Christian Science?

Let us have done with this foolish dependence upon an outgrown book of fables, with this undignified truckling to public opinion, and the ignorance and prejudice of the masses.

Let us appeal rather to reason and common sense, to the enlightened understanding of thinking men and women. Let us place our philosophy where it belongs, upon the solid rock of established fact, and leave the Bible with its contradictions and errors, its hodge-podge of religious and ethical teaching, its vagaries and insane phantasies to those who prefer the dead past to the living present, faith to knowledge, and authority to up-to-date scientific truth.

In regard to organization, much can be said in its favor, and equally as much against it. Doubtless organization is a good thing, where the tendency to fossilization can be avoided. But it is a question today whether the cause of Spiritualism has been advanced or retarded by organization. Certainly the present tendency toward churchization, toward the adoption of set forms of "religious service," the ordination of "pastors" and the blind following of self-appointed leaders, cannot but be regarded as a retrograde movement and one to be deplored.

Organization is well, where independence of thought, freedom of discussion, and a democratic form of management is maintained; but where this fails, and a one-man rule, with the relationship of "pastor" to his "flock" is established, it is doubtful if any great and lasting good is the result, whether growth and progress are not thereby hindered rather than aided.

In regard to the relative value of the phenomena and the philosophy of Spiritualism, it seems to me a foolish thing to attempt to foist one above the other in importance. Both are equally necessary. Those who care for the phenomena alone will never pass out of the kindergarten of Spiritualism. Those who believe in the presentation of the philosophy alone, will never reach the great mass of the people, will never touch the great hungering heart of humanity. For no matter how philosophical we are, we all demand the proof of spirit return, and the consolation which comes of spirit communion and spirit ministration.

Touching Theosophy, Spiritualism has some truths in common with that system of thought, but the doctrine of re-embodiment is no part of the teachings of Spiritualism. It is distinctly a creation of the Theosophic mind, and for my part I am quite willing it should remain under its parent roof, and never be introduced upon the rostrum as the adopted child of Spiritualism.

In regard to the existence of a creator, it seems to me that the Spiritual Philosophy neither affirms nor denies. Many of the loftiest minds and most exalted souls among us believe in the existence of a Supreme Intelligence. Others equally great in mind and beautiful in spirit see no place for any such Being or Power in a universe that is governed by immutable law. It follows, therefore, that the belief in a God is no part of Spiritualism. To the grand structure of the Spiritual Philosophy you may build if you choose, an addition, in which to house any one of the numerous Gods to which men bow in worship, but such an addition is no part of the original structure, and to my mind adds nothing of beauty or value to the great edifice.

Eliminating then, the extraneous features which are no part of the true philosophy of Spiritualism, what remain which all Spiritualists believe in common?

1. The continuity of life after death.
2. The possibility of communion between the unseen world and this.
3. The fact that death makes no change in the moral character or spiritual nature of the individual.
4. That happiness or misery in the future state depends upon the character of the life lived here,—upon the degree of moral and mental unfoldment gained in this world.
5. That evolution is the law of life, and that every spirit must eventually pass out of its ignorant, benighted state into one of light and knowledge and consequent happiness.
6. That there is no limit to growth and progress, intellectual and spiritual, in the life beyond.
7. That such growth and progress are the result of conscious effort, of individual exertion, and are directly proportioned to the degree of such effort and exertion. And lastly, that the mission of Spiritualism in this world is the demonstration of immortality, the inculcation of humanitarian principles, the teaching of a lofty system of ethics, and the dissemination among men of the truths of universal brotherhood.

To these fundamental tenets no true Spiritualist will take exceptions. They might be amplified and expanded to many times their present space, for indeed to state the teachings of Spiritualism fully and completely would require a volume; but to my mind the essential features are all included in the foregoing.

That the teachings of Spiritualism would in time become mixed with and corrupted by popular religious and theological conceptions might have been seen from the beginning. It is simply a case of history repeating itself. The inevitable is again taking place. When grand new truths, which are beyond the intellectual grasp of the masses, and at variance with prevalent ideas and conceptions, are given to the world, it is not to be expected that they will gain immediate acceptance in all their fullness and entirety, no matter how well founded upon demonstrable fact, nor how strongly fortified by reason and logic. The grandeur and beauty of the new teaching will be appreciated by the few alone. The full significance, the real import of the new truth will be grasped by a handful only. The majority will perceive but a glimmering ray, will apprehend but a small fraction of the grand whole. To their little fragment of truth they will straightway attach all of their previous misconceptions and errors, and go their way as before, all unmindful of the utter incongruity between the new teaching and the old conceptions.

As in the early days of Christianity, pagan Rome corrupted and polluted the pure teachings of Christ, by the infusion of pagan ideas, and the introduction of pagan rites and ceremonies, so now the pure teachings of Modern Spiritualism are being corrupted and polluted by an admixture of conventional Christianity, and the adoption of church rites and ceremonies.

This result is inevitable. No matter how much the philosophical Spiritualist, who beholds Spiritualism as a grand system of naturalism, may deplore the present tendency of our organization, and the infusion into our philosophy of timeworn religious and theological conceptions, he knows that such a result is in the order of nature, and that no effort on his part or that of his co-laborers can stem the tide of corrupting influences now setting in upon every side. He may go on teaching the truths of unadulterated Spiritualism, as he apprehends them, but he cannot put a stop to the utterances of the churchy spiritist who is seven-eighths orthodox Christian and one-eighth Spiritualist.

However, he may console himself with the thought that "half a loaf is better than no bread," and that in all probability it is better that the great mass of the people should receive a little of the truth of Spiritualism, than that the very few should grasp it in its fulness and perfection,—better for the multitude to rise a few inches above the level of past ignorance and superstition, than for the few to scale the heights. He may also console himself with the hope that, although Spiritualism to-day is undergoing great transformations, and becoming polluted by the admixture of prevailing religious ideas, yet in the course of a thousand or two of years, some Martin Luther may arise who will cast off these impurities and restore the philosophy to somewhat of its original simplicity and beauty.

With the great majority, intellectual development is a slow process. The masses of the people require years to assimilate that which the great mind grasps in a day. Give them time,—these slow-moving people who are not yet out of their swaddling clothes, but are creeping onward toward the light. You of quicker mind need not stop at their snail's pace. Your life and your work lies not with them. Go on and scale the heights. Enjoy your broader vision and your higher truth. Give freely of the inspiration which comes to you, and if these your brothers delight not in your thought, your hopes, your aspirations, leave them to their own. If they care not for what you have to give, so be it. The fault lies not in you but in them. "To him that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

Truth once uttered can never be lost to the world. To the multitude it may become clouded and obscured by error, mixed with and adulterated by falsehood, but to the few it will continue to shine with all its original splendor, and these will carry it on from age to age.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

"WAR IS HELL."

It Is Vividly Depicted by One Who Had Experience as a Soldier.

To the Editor:—In reading Dr. J. M. Peebles' article on war, in No. 825 of The Progressive Thinker, I was stirred to the very depths of my soul, to reflect on that subject, on account of the long experience I had with the demon of the ages, during the Great Rebellion. When a war breaks out in a nation, or with other nations, it always causes great excitement among the people concerned, and arouses their feelings and sentiments to the highest degree. I should add, their passions are awakened also. I can distinctly remember the magnetic influence that aroused the people of the loyal states of our great Union when Fort Sumpter was fired upon by the enemy.

Where are the Gods that could stop the people under such thrilling events?

Every person who reads history knows the dreadful consequences of war, but it does not stop the people in their mad rush to slaughter one another. That savagery in human nature when stirred up by the leaders of the people, by eloquence of the speakers, and the agitation of the press in civilized countries, must result in the shedding of blood to satisfy the ravenous and vengeful natures of men. Among barbarians and savages war is the natural result of quarrels and disputes; and education and the so-called refinement and culture of the most enlightened society, have so far, been unable to erase that savage disposition from the human breast, when aroused by partisanship or patriotism.

I hate war, but how can it be stopped, while human nature runs mad under the least provocation? Even soldiers from what is called called civilized governments, will kill men, women and children, of an enemy, when frenzied by the sight of blood and battle.

A minister said to me once in the presence of another man, who had been a soldier, that he thought soldiers went into battle praying. I told him, that I had seen soldiers charging their enemies, while cursing and swearing, on account of being crowded in the ranks by their own comrades.

Hard marches, and short rations, make soldiers ill-natured, and cross as fighting dogs, when going into battle after a long march.

To read about the wars of ancient and modern times, and the destruction of lives and perishable property, fills the mind of a thoughtful person with horror, in contemplation of the awful tragedies that have transpired among the human races.

Word pictures cannot describe the suffering and cruelties, the carnage and death of human beings, the cost and expenses in money, caused by the wars of the world.

War has rendered incarnadine, the blood of millions of men in every generation of mankind.

The human kind is filled, at times, to overflowing with fighting elements, and their energies and force must be spent with war, before they are satisfied.

The common people furnish the soldiers for the armies, and bear the burdens of unjust taxation, to pay the vast expenses of wars.

Millions of beings are expecting Jesus to come the second time, and set up the millennial period, when nations shall learn war no more.

On the other side, multitudes of people are wondering why the great and happy period of peace and love is delayed through so many centuries.

Why does not the supreme power that controls all things in our vast universe, stop wars and intemperance, sin and wickedness everywhere, and set up the everlasting kingdom of righteousness? Is the time not ripe for the reign of love and peace? Are not the people ready for such a kingdom? Has the bloody war between Russia and Japan set Christendom to thinking about it?

Is it possible that Japan is more Christian than the United States?

We did not read that they had any prisons, like Libby and Andersonville, in our civil war. The Japanese have proven themselves humanitarians in taking care of Russian prisoners.

Yes, Brother Peebles, I can say with you and General Sherman, "War Is Hell!"

I did not miss a day's duty on that Atlanta campaign, where Sherman left so many brave soldiers upon the battlefield and in the hospitals.

I have been with the veterans, when they marched to death upon the gory battlefields of that Southland, and heard the deafening roar of cannon, and the rattle of musketry until the very earth trembled with the fury of battle, and its terrible vibrations.

I have heard the groans and agonies of the wounded and dying soldiers, in skirmishes and battles, and have seen thousands that were slain to death upon the battle ground, silent as the grave, who a few moments or hours before, were active and living forms of humanity.

Such is war, cutting down manhood in the prime of life. I cannot describe which of the two scenes was the most horrible to behold and endure, yet we had become accustomed to the work, and it was common to soldiers' duties.

After the battles, the dead lay upon the contested territory, and the work of burial would begin, as soon as circumstances would allow, by details of men, who escaped unhurt, the awful tragedy of battle and carnage.

Large and wide ditches were dug in which hundreds of dead bodies were piled, one upon another, in many instances, and covered with a few inches of earth. Sometimes soldiers were buried more humanely, when conditions would permit.

Ex-veterans ought to agree with Dr. Peebles that wars are a curse to the nations, and they should cease as soon as the military spirit of the rulers and lawmakers of governments, is ended.

War is intemperance, with all of its woes, and the cause of want and poverty to a large degree, in the nations of the earth plane. Excesses, in drinking intoxicating liquors, is a monster evil, but it will not compare with the cost and curse of wars.

The honest and moral forces of this lower sphere, need the help and mighty power, of the invisible agencies, of light and wisdom, to drive away the curses of this world, with love, mercy and kindness, instead of the sword, big armies and navies.

Surely, war has been a failure in conquering peace in the nations.

True Mediumship.

Inspirational Advice on Its Cultivation.

"Wise and advanced spirits never arbitrarily control whom they are seeking to unfold; all they do is to prepare and fit them so that they will understand how to use their own powers. Contact with the spheres by the developing psychic will always, invariably leave the psychic in a better condition physically, mentally, and spiritually."

Mediumship and its development is fast becoming a question of world-wide importance, and the minds of investigators into the realms psychical are being constantly exercised as to the practicable benefits obtainable through the cultivation of mediumship. So much has already been written anent the development of mediumship that one might be inclined to ask, can anything new or useful be written further on this most subtle subject?

The reply can be made with truth that so vast and complex is the problem of the psychic nature of man that we are only now beginning to find out something substantial relative to that problem, and therefore the final dictum has not yet been given, if ever it will be.

When one moves among the people as a worker and finds the darkness existing in their souls regarding the whole question of psychic unfoldment, a longing comes over us to review the subject and write something which will be of such a practical nature that a clear understanding will be the result. So much that has already appeared in periodicals and Spiritualist papers is of such a hysterical and superficial type that we don't blame people for being scared and walking in darkness.

We do not question the honesty or good intentions of those who propose to enlighten the people, but we do sincerely wish that they would take pains to be better informed about what they write, as the result is anything but of an edifying character. We have our highly esteemed and respected co-worker, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, writing recently in the Chicago American anent psychic phenomena, and whilst she makes many good points, yet she does not sufficiently elaborate on the subject to leave on the minds of her readers a clear impression as to the utility and blessing of the gift of true mediumship. The hysterical scare is over her, too, a good deal, and obsession, control, etc., are bogeys which effectually keep her and many others out of the real knowledge and experience of proper psychic unfoldment.

Fear is the dominant character of all those who deny the powers and benefits of mediumship, though still firmly convinced of the truth of what it demonstrates. The fearful people who are spiritually weak, with negative dispositions, better leave off investigating or trying to develop until they have gained full self-mastery over themselves. Having developed a strong positive will force, through the practice of pure, unselfish goodness in their lives.

To the pure and fearless soul we say, Come, learn and unfold, the earth needs such as you, and the advanced spiritual beings who have something to give to their fellows will welcome you into their ranks of true workers with outstretched hands.

A noble movement has been dragged in the mire, besmirched and become unholy through the ignorance of controlled, obsessed and uncultured mediums, who in their folly, undevelopment, and commercial greed, have selfishly striven for personal ends to the detriment of the cause which they espoused. Such as these will and must pay the penalty of their unholy practices. Fortunately they are powerless to permanently injure the beneficent intentions of those who called these powers into expression.

A cleaning work has begun which will never end until from amongst the ranks of spiritual workers all untrue, impure and unrighteous will have been eliminated. A new era has begun for the Spiritualistic movement which will create cohesion and harmony in its ranks, spreading the pure knowledge of mediumship throughout the earth.

Because of the silly, puerile, and objectionable demonstrations of mediumship given to the world, educated, cultured and spiritually-minded people have been driven away into other movements, thereby denuding the ranks of the spiritualistic movement from a very necessary element in its constituency.

When we see the claims made by the Theosophists in one of their books, as to being the only true instructors of the Western World in things occult, we want to deny in the name of Truth, this false assumption, and point to the revrevelations and demonstrations given to the world through the organized effort of Spiritualism

Whilst we have no quarrel with Theosophists, numbering many of them amongst our friends, we must emphatically deny the assumptions of some of their leaders. We will quote from the book called Thought Forms, published jointly by Mrs. Besant and Mr. Leadbeater, in which is the objectionable statement which is referred to, and if they are as they profess to be, lovers of truth, let them withdraw their foolish claim and forever bury such egotism in the mythical "bottomless pit."

Here is the paragraph; we do not quote it all, to save space:

"It is well for us ever to bear in mind that there is a hidden side to life that each act and word and thought has its consequence in the unseen world which is always so near to us. * * * The wise man knowing this orders his life accordingly. * * * * but to do this implies knowledge—that knowledge which is power; and in our Western World such knowledge is practically obtainable only through the literature of Theosophy."

Not the least bit swell-headed or conceited, is it? Well, we will leave them to chew the cud of their own innocent minds. We could say a lot more, but we refrain, there is time yet for their repentance, and when they do, why, we will shake hands and bury our differences in a good baptism of fraternal love.

With the preceding digression, which was given as an object lesson, showing how the ignorant, spurious and uncultured workers in our ranks make it possible for such statements to be made, we will proceed with the main object of our article, the cultivation of mediumship.

In the front ranks of the Spiritualists there is lots of room for fearless, true-hearted, noble and righteous workers, the back seats are all filled up (chock-full). We are eager for those who will elevate, educate and uplift the whole movement generally. Therefore to that class we particularly address our article, for to such will the highest in the spiritual spheres come and co-operate with them for the emancipation of humanity.

In the first place we would like to particularly empnasize the fact that advanced beings from the inner spheres of life do not return for commercial purposes. Their mission is a pure and unselfish one, and the knowledge they give or the powers they aid to develop are wholly for the upliftment and betterment of the people of the earth. Fortune-telling, finding gold mines, or prognosticating generally about material affairs is not the work of advanced intelligences. They have developed beyond such conditions, and return for a much higher and nobler work. Those spirits who are earth-bound or confined within the immediate radius of the earth's atmosphere, though not necessarily bad, are nevertheless still bound within their limitations and conditions, and it is these who always control and sometimes obsess the psychics who devote their powers to money-making and other selfish commercial ends. This is the class of psychics that we want to get rid of, for there is no price on the real gifts of the spirit—its benefits are neither bought nor sold—and those who live in such an atmosphere attract spirits of a like kind whose motives are not always unmixed or unselfish.

We have never yet met one noble, good and wholly unselfish medium who sold themselves out to those who could pay for the knowledge received.

What ignorance and shame, for a spiritual worker to be at the beck and call of the Tom, Dick and Harry of the earth plane, that for the gaining of a few dollars, the impure, the selfish and unspiritual can command their powers. That these things have existed, do exist, and will exist until a nobler class of workers enter and purify conditions, we haven't the shadow of a doubt. So we affirm the first essential to the cultivation of the true psychic state is clear knowledge of what it engenders. Learn all you can from those who are recognized as true lights in the cause. Cultivate a good physical body. Exercise self-control. Master your fears, which are the heritage of animality and ignorance, and do not belong to human proper, and live purely and unselfishly for the good of the whole, putting into daily practice the exercise of positive goodness. To such an one the kingdom of truth is widely open and the very truest, wisest and purest of the spirit spheres will co-operate with them in their work, assisting to unfold their psychic powers and also to individualize their whole being.

Remember we said co-operate with you, not control you. Wise and advanced spirits never arbitrarily control those whom they are seeking to unfold; all they do is to prepare and fit them so that they will understand how to use their own powers. Contact with the spheres by the developing psychic will always, invariably leave the psychic in a better condition physically, mentally and spiritually.

Please remember this, psychics developing under the co-operation of wise spirits are not injured, made insane, or obsessed, but we must first give the primary considerations which will permit of such co-operation, and these have already been stated.

The duties of life come first, and when we neglect or despise these duties do not expect good conditions when you sit for development. Be convinced that you can wisely and harmoniously, consistent with your present duties and responsibilities, cultivate mediumship, and when so convinced through the light from within, go forward with confidence, and faith in the unseen, for nought shall harm you.

God and His ministering angels protect the pure, wise and loving soul, but the presumptuous, ignorant and foolish have no such protection, therefore get understanding, pray for wisdom and follow the pathway of the just.

Obsession which has ranked prominently in recent discussions, is always the resultant of ignorance on the part of the one possessed. There is something radically wrong somewhere, and the adjustment must come through understanding. We affirm that the possessor of an individualized will, a pure and unselfish life, will never be obsessed and has nothing to fear from the cultivation of mediumship. We can guarantee no others.

The question of diet is one which very often troubles the aspirant for psychic development, and whilst we do not lay down any stringent rules to follow, we might mention that drinking alcoholic liquors, smoking and chewing tobacco, and indulgence in sexual excitement of any kind, are all very bad and must be wholly stopped. The knowledge of what to eat will gradually reveal itself as we unfold, hard and fast rules cannot be laid down, as we all differ constitutionally and temperamentally, therefore require the chemicals of different foods. Let every one discover for themselves what food is best adapted to their requirements, and when they make that discovery, learn to eat slowly, judiciously and moderately, for on these things depend the stamina and healthfulness of our whole organisms.

Do not attend promiscuous public circles, and above all, if you do join a circle it must consist of those who are like-minded with yourself, otherwise the results to yourself will be injurious. Better develop alone, even if it takes a little longer and is not so interesting; and remember all good things come slowly, so do not be impatient for results. The chosen worker will not be long in receiving results, for usually his band is already formed and it only requires the necessary receptivity of mind and surrounding conditions to permit them to come in close contact with their subject.

Be careful of the mediums you consult, and also of their predictions, unless you are recommended by some one who knows a good spiritual psychic. This is the stone on which so many prospective workers and aspirants after truth are hard hit by namely-obsessed psychics, some of whom carry in their atmosphere enough of the lower world to injure the best intentioned inquirers.

Go forward prayerfully, conscientiously and slowly, sit at the same time and day always if possible, about half an hour to begin with, and increase as you feel the conditions grow stronger and better. Never strain or inharmonize yourself by sitting too long. Always go to your sitting as bright and cheerful as possible. If you are musical and can play or sing do so, but at any rate have music in your soul, for this will create those harmonious vibrations which will permit the highest and the best to come within your aura.

All that we have given could be elaborated and more extensively dealt with, but we think enough has been given to help the aspirant after spiritual development, and later on, if our editor will permit us, we shall be pleased to write again and give further help.

We should like to add that we will be pleased to answer any question, or help so far as it lies in our power anyone desiring further information regarding their development. Please enclose stamped and addressed envelope for reply. Those who do not fulfil our requirements or who are not seeking after the pure and the good in psychic development, kindly do not trouble us with your applications for further knowledge, as we will be forced to take no notice of your letters.

SOME PERTINENT REFLECTIONS

Wherein the Writer Seeks to Promote Honesty.

What a comment on human decency was the racing situation in St. Louis, a situation that had almost reached the riot stage.

In their wisdom the lawmakers of the state of Missouri, servants of the people, made a law prohibiting race track gambling.

Legislatures are not as a usual thing overburdened with morals. An evil has to smell pretty hard to cause them to act.

Race track gambling is an undoubted evil, harmful to a community. For a good many weak men who have had the handling of other people's money it has been the halfway house to the penitentiary.

The Missouri anti-gambling law found a quiet corner in the statute books and went to sleep.

Along came a real governor and declared that the law should be enforced to the letter.

He didn't make the law. Perhaps he doesn't approve it.

But the law is the law. Gov. Folk says that there is just one thing to do with laws and that is to enforce them. If it requires grim-faced men armed with riot guns to make the people submit to being governed, the guns and the men will be forthcoming.

And that is his business.

The race track at St. Louis is closed and gambling has been, at least temporarily, suspended.

Are the people cheering Folk?

Not a bit of it. He is being cursed and traduced by thousands of sports and their friends. There are folks who call him "one of those reformers" and wish that he were dead.

And all he has done is his simple duty.

More power to him.

This isn't a question of gambling or horse racing or of sport of any kind.

It is a principle of government that is at stake, and right must win.

The above is from the Chicago Daily Journal and illustrates what one has to contend with in trying to promote honesty and morality.

When D. Edson Smith of California, exposed Elsie Reynolds with his flash light, revealing her as the "spirit", he was pounced upon by the worst set of insatiate gullibles that ever lived. Poor things, had they the wisdom and nerve to use the "grab process," they would expose Elsie every time, arrayed in a dress of earthly art, made by ordinary earthly hands, and I am not sure that the same results would not follow if any other materializing medium was grabbed. Up to date (and I am up-to-date) every materializing medium grabbed has been dressed in art goods, hand-made articles, sometimes called artificial toggery. Now I, like Gov. Folk, will be cursed by some in consequence of my opinion. But see what a fine work he has done in Missouri, in promoting honesty and morality, and I propose to do as equally fine a work in the ranks of Spiritualism. In the words of Col. Ingersoll, "Let us be honest." As I glance over the world, and see the dishonesty everywhere, do you wonder that I manifest

ANXIETY.

A SEVERE BLOW ON THE HEAD.

Which Necessitated an Operation Upon His Skull, Resulting in a Radical Change in His Disposition—A Peculiar Case, as Set Forth in the Chicago Evening Journal.

A play at one of the Chicago theaters presents in concrete form an instance of serious moral delinquency cured by purely physical means; by the setting of a bone or the reduction of a dislocation.

Before the blow which caused the physical disturbance, the young man was of good life and repute. After receiving it, he became a trader on the affections of his family, a cheap swindler, a forger, and a lying thief. When restored to his normal condition by a comparatively slight operation, his morals, too, became normal, and he was no longer criminal in his tendencies and ideas. He was reformed, but by a surgeon, not a physician.

The annals of forensic medicine teem with similar instances. A young man of national reputation, reared in an adjoining city, was relieved of tendencies criminal and worse than criminal by a blow in the head which necessitated an operation upon his skull. Before the blow he was a curse to any community which had the misfortune to harbor him. Since, he has been of great usefulness to his country, to his family, and to himself. Scores of similar incidents could be brought forward.

Such facts put our previous conceptions of morality more or less upon inquiry. Are there not now in our jails and penitentiaries, in our reformatories and schools for youthful delinquents, young men and women that can be saved from a life of criminality and restored to full civic usefulness by the uses of surgery and a fine knowledge of anatomy?

Chicago has set the world an example in dealing with boys and girls that were on the point of taking steps downward, through her admirably planned juvenile court. Is there not an opportunity given to lead the world once more by demonstrating that in certain instances, at least, the surgeon can be made the instrument of salvation?

The clergy and the courts have had a monopoly of dealing with such cases for many a century, and there is yet much to be hoped for. May not the third of the three ancient and learned professions now be called in aid?

Whatever the result, the experiment is worth the trial. It is for the medical men of Chicago—men who contribute mightily to the individual welfare of its inhabitants, but comparatively little to the city's civic life—to take the necessary steps to make their knowledge serve a great public end.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH,

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by, its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

A Glimpse of Barbarian Thought.

In reading an obituary the other day detailing the exit of a good man from mortal life, with incidents of his burial, and his being lowered by loving hands into the grave, the narration concluded with, "there to await the call that summons the dead to life."

The expression, so common in the past, has almost disappeared from funereal literature. Its reading awakened a train of thought pertaining to a belief we seldom hear of to-day. In fact it carried us back in history thousands of years, when the Egyptians mummified their worthy dead, with the belief that those bodies which should remain intact for three thousand years would be reincarnated and live again, Osiris acting as judge, who would award them endless happiness on the one hand, or eternal misery on the other, according to the life lived on earth.

This old Egyptian belief became an inheritance by Christians, and was common to all denominations which accepted the Christian faith.

Another feature of that faith was, the world had been destroyed by a flood; that 4,000 years after creation a Messiah appeared to redeem the world from original sin, provided he was believed in and accepted as the Savior; that at the expiration of 6,000 years from creation that Messiah would reappear in the clouds with all his holy angels; and that for a thousand years he would reign on earth as king over the saints; then the great trumpet would sound; the dead would come forth, (the 3,000 Egyptian years, it will be noted, would expire,) then the end, a general conflagration closing the scene, when a general judgment would ensue, Jesus acting as judge, when the saint and sinner would be separated for eternity; the one taking the place with the great Father in heaven; the other doomed to endless woe in hell, with Satan.

That faith has been gradually changing since the advent of Spiritualism fifty-seven years ago, until it is mostly limited to the Talmagean orators of the Billy Sunday and Sam Small stripe. The uneducated, those who place implicit trust in Bible narration, may still accept this old-time teaching; but the educated clergy very generally reject it, and hold that there is no death, no long sleep of the soul, no general judgment; and the best informed agree with the late Col. Ingersoll, and the Spiritualists, in "kicking a sulphurous hell into smithereens." And it seems proper the soul-sleepers shall disappear with them.

The Supernumeraries.

The Methodist Conference for southeastern Iowa, late in session, refused to provide a super-numscull fund for the clergy they have in excess, by a special tax on members. They probably saw the approaching danger of an overwhelming increase of these functionaries, enough to swamp the church, so "stood from under" before the fall came with all its force.

The colleges turning out doctors enlarged their curriculum so as to require a four years' course, instead of its former two years, the object to lessen the number. Would it not be an excellent idea to extend the curriculum of candidates for the ministry in the same way so as to double the present requirement? and thus abridge their number. A study of comparative religions will be valuable. Familiarized with Chaldean, Persian, Babylonian and Assyrian mythology, followed by an acquaintance with that of Egypt, Greece and Rome, the student would then learn the source from whence Judaism and Christianity.

A little time could be profitably employed in a study of the Catholic list of saints, and the multitude of them who were canonized originally lesser gods in the pantheons of those so-called pagan nations. They would be astonished to find the old statue of Janus, now doing service as the apostle Peter; while some of the statues of Venus are still adored as representatives of the Queen of Heaven, otherwise the dear Madonna, the Mother of God!

To the Memory of Servetus.

A correspondent of the Springfield, Mass., Republican makes the following statement:

"Only a little more than a year ago Swiss Protestants erected a memorial to Servetus, whom they slew by slow torture, and the visitor to Geneva to-day reads thereon a sad but wholesome confession."

This is news to The Progressive Thinker, but it is a very worthy act, and came from a proper source. John Calvin, the father of Presbyterianism, was responsible for the death of Michael Servetus. Mosheim, the author of our best Ecclesiastical History, left the world the fullest account published of that terrible crime against humanity. Servetus published in Strasburg in 1531 a work entitled "Errors of the Trinity." It was written from a philosopher's standpoint, and would meet with little opposition from the Trinitarians of to-day; but they who had just come out from Roman Catholicism, still clinging to most of its brutal dogmas, were violently bitter against all who were more liberal in thought than they. Bucer, one of the early Reformers, declared:

"The heretic, Servetus, should be disemboweled and torn to pieces."

Space will not admit of even an outline sketch of the discussion and incidents which led to the burning of Servetus with a slow fire of green wood to prolong his torture. Sufficient the fact, that on the way to the stake Servetus raised his hands, with eyes aloft, and said:

"O God, save my soul! O Jesus, thou Son of the Eternal God, have mercy upon me."

"Mend thy last words if thou wouldst save thyself. Call on Jesus, the eternal Son of God," demanded his attendant.

When Servetus reached the fatal spot and saw the stake, with fagots piled around, he fell on his face, praying in silence. Then Farell harangued the crowd:

"You see how mighty is the power of Satan. This wretch, who is about to suffer death, is a very learned man; and, perhaps, even he may think he has done right. But the Devil has him in his coils, having taken entire possession. Take heed a similar calamity does not overtake you."

At last, when in the executioner's hands, Farell said: "The Eternal Son of God, say but that!" Servetus remained silent. He was fastened to the stake by a strong chain, and the book which he had submitted to John Calvin for criticism, was bound to his loins, the torch was applied to the fagots, and for a full half hour this first victim of Protestantism writed in agony before his spirit fled. Enough.

Four hundred and seventy-two years of later time, and the successors of John Calvin express their regrets for the act of the great reformer, by erecting a monument to the memory of his victim. Verily, Mackay was correct:

"Thou wert born five hundred years too soon
For the comfort of thy days."

Another New Religious Sect.

It is especially interesting to read of the founding of a new religious sect when the principles on which it is based indicate a distinct advance beyond the stereotyped editions of formulated religious beliefs as observed in the petrified creeds of orthodoxy.

It will be seen that the elements of progression are clearly apparent in the foundation of a new denomination, in Broken Bow, Nebraska, by the Rev. L. F. Harman, who recently parted with his pastorate in the Christian church.

Acording to the New York Herald, the new departure is based on popular discontent with creed and formula. The new denomination will be bound by no written creed.

Mr. Harman, leader of the new movement makes this statement:

"As far as my religious views are concerned, I think above all things a man should be honest in his deliveraance upon any subject whatever, religious topics along with others. The man who has a private belief that differs from his public utterances is too much like the priests of ancient Egypt, who believed in the essential unity of the deity while allowing the people to think their belief was something entirely different. The man who conforms for the sake of peace and power, who pronounces the shibboleth of the majority for popularity or 'for his stamach's sake,' is essentially a hypocrite, and the condition of many churches today is the penalty exacted for that sort of thing. Through these few ideas my own motives may be seen.

"I believe in God, who is the father of all life. That he is everywhere in this universe, and the fact of his omnipresence eliminates a personal devil and a devil's hell. It is so easy to trace the devil's history in the religious literature of the world that every thoughtful man comes sooner or later to see its mythical character.

"Sin punishes its victims always! It is a Shylock that invariably demands its 'pound of flesh,' and it always gets full weight, and for that pound there is no substitute; human experience being witness. But that is vastly different from the dogma of a God made devil and a God made man and a God made hell, and their combination. The one is myth, the other fact. The one is theory without proof; the other has been proved every day since man discovered his conscience.

"I believe that Jesus was a divine man and not a human God. I am sure he, of all persons, ought to be accepted as authority in regard to his own nature and mission. It is not a question as to whether he is divine, but whether he is God! And of that he never hints even. He does not claim creative ability. He attributes Godhood to his God and Father only.

"I believe in a religion for today and now; that can be taken into the market place; that will beautify this world and make it more civilized. A religion that actually insists in walking in the footsteps of Jesus and doing good to all men; recognizing the truth that all men have a common parentage and are therefore brethren also, that all have common needs and should receive equal consideration.

"Some people seem so anxious to raise a good crop in heaven that they don't cultivate their holdings in this world; hence all its sorrows and pains. I believe in making God's world what he intended it should be—a beautiful home where he ever dwells with his children. These are my views. They are sometimes misconstrued and misunderstood."

Mr. Harman is a fluent talker and a literary man of ability. He has been before the public for twenty years.

Some Christian Views.

From the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle we learn that a "convention of the deepening of spiritual life" was recently held in the old auditorium of the Presbyterian church in that city. It was largely attended by delegates from points within a radius of five hundred miles.

The convention dealt with spiritual life from a purely Christian point of view, and did not consider the spiritual life from the viewpoint of psychic research or deal with the metaphysical aspects of spiritual experience.

To give our readers a taste of the spiritual pabulum dispensed at the convention, we quote from a synopsis of an address by Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dr. Pierson discussed the biblical passage in which Christ is represented as descending into hell. He said it was as impossible to measure the humiliation of Christ as to comprehend his exaltation. Dr. Pierson declared that Christ went to hell to show that He was Lord of it and could release himself from its dominion. Dr. Pierson announced that, while it is not fashionable to speak of hell even from an orthodox pulpit, he believed in it, and thinks that man has all the capabilities of hell in himself. Some men, Dr. Pierson asserted, have had a foretaste of hell on earth, and the reason is that memory, conscience and reason are the ingredients of hell. Dr. Pierson said that a certain bishop was right in declaring that the brimstone of hell is carried there by the tormented souls themselves. Christ alone, said Dr. Pierson, holds the keys of the pit of perdition and he alone can deliver from it. Dr. Pierson stated that in his belief Christ went to the lowest depths of hell and there mingled with the lost souls, so that he might show his lordship over the lowest as well as the highest in creation.

Dr. Pierson advanced the theory of the air being populated with spirits. He said that Satan was in the atmosphere. He sustained his belief by quotations from Matthew xiii and cited the reference to the devil as "Prince of the powers of the air." Dr. Pierson said

"I do not doubt but that at this moment the air of this room in which I am speaking is filled with demoniac spirits. If you find yourself inclined to doubt and question the truths preached here tonight, you may be under the influence of an evil spirit; and if your mind is eager to grasp the truths, it is not unlikely that an angelic spirit has been helping you. If your eyes could only be opened, I have not the least doubt but that we would see the spirits of Satan and the hosts of heaven contending in this room at this very moment. But we need have no fear, Christ assended through the air to show his mastery of it and of its spirits, and he can conquer them."

Dr. Pierson declared that Satan was the greatest being that God had created and cited Ezekiel xxviii as his authority. This chapter has been interpreted to mean the monarch of Tyre, but Dr. Pierson denies this and believes that the person described is none other than Satan, the tutelary deity of the Tyrians, whom Dr. Pierson says were devil-worshipers. In Dr. Pierson's opinion there were originally three archangels, Satan, Gabriel, messenger of the redemption, and Michael, angel guardian of the bodies of God's saints.

Rev. Dr. Winchester spoke briefly on Revelations iv and v. He said that Revelations ii and iii dealt with the history of the Christian church from the ascension of Christ to his return, and the following chapters were prophetical of the glory of the new dispensation. Dr. Winchester condemned current ideas of heaven as tawdry and gross, and said that they were "scarcely less sensuous than a Mahometan paradise, or an Indian's happy hunting ground." The real picture of Paradise is in Revelation. Dr. Winchester declared his belief in an intermediate state, entirely different from the Roman Catholic conception of purgatory. In this state the disembodied spirits of "those who are asleep in Jesus" are living a life such as no saint ever enjoyed, yet far less desirable than heaven. The full glory and reward was not received, maintained Dr. Winchester, until the bodies had been resurrected and had been joined to the spirits.

Incompatible.

The effort to engraft Spiritualism on the dominant religion may be likened to an attempt to engraft the choicest apple on the pine. There is no affinity between them, and the labor will be lost. The pine root cannot supply the luscious fruitage of the apple or pear.

Spiritualism is a philosophy, not a religion. It is founded on fact, not faith, nor mythology.

If spirits, the survival of mortality, do not exist after the decay of the body, then there is no continued life. If the spirit is immortal; if recollection and love of earth associates survive the tomb as refined matter, invisible to material senses, then is it not evident it can and has devised a method to accomplish that desire? Facts justify the assertion, they have done so.

Honored at Last.

The bust of Thomas Paine, tendered Philadelphia in 1876, for a place in Independence Hall, and rejected by the then city council because of his religious views, has at last reached its destination, the recent council having accepted it, and given it a place among the worthy founders of this nation. Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, Adams, could have been rejected for the same reason, and with as much propriety as was Paine's bust until the recent action, for they were all what are now known as Unitarians, denying the divinity of Jesus.

The Burlington Route has been selected for the delegates to take to the N. S. A. convention at Minneapolis. See advertisement next week. Office at 211 Clark street.

An Incontrovertible Proposition.

The late powder-mill explosion, with such waste of property and life, near Connellsville, Pa., was a disastrous affair. If at the moment of that occurrence every powder mill in the wide world had gone up in smoke, and with them every war vessel of every nation had been blown into smithereens, and sunk, and every magazine of gunpowder had exploded, would not these facts have furnished evidence of an overruling Providence? And because it was not done, does it not furnish almost conclusive proof he does not intervene in human affairs?

MESSAGES FROM SPIRIT WORLD.

Many Persons Hear Through the Lips of a Medium From Relatives and Friends Who Are Dead—Mrs. Margaret Gaul-Reidinger Explains Some of the Principles Behind the Doctrine of Spiritualism—Are Searchers After Light.

Messages from the loved relatives and friends who have passed into the spirit world were given to many persons by Mrs. Margaret Gaul-Reidinger, a celebrated test medium of New York at a benefit seance held in the First Church of Spiritualism, Bouquet St., says the Pittsburg, Pa., Chronicle. Almost 200 persons were present.

After a short preliminary song and prayer service Mrs Gaule-Reidinger was introduced by President C. L. Stevens, of the church. Before beginning the reading the medium made an address. She said there were many persons in the audience who did not believe in Spiritualism and she felt it would be well to say something about the church and its creed.

Spiritualism, she said, brings the assurance that life is everlasting, that friends who have left this world are not gone forever. Some persons are under the impression that Spiritualists do not believe in a God, but she said that it had never even occurred to her to deny the existence of the Deity.

She told of the way in which Spiritualism formerly was regarded, but said that people now were learning that Spiritualism is not so different from other creeds, and that Spiritualists now are respected for their determination to find the truth. "It will be a happy day," said Mrs. Gaule-Reidinger, "when other denominations feel toward the Spiritualists as Spiritualists feel toward them."

"Spirit return," she said, "does not date back only to the Rochester rappings, 56 years ago. It has always been. The Old Testament is full of references to spirit return. Mediumship is a gift from God. I did not seek for mediumship. It was born with me. From my earliest days I HEARD SOUNDS AS OF THE HEAVENLY CHOIR, AND SAW STRANGE SPIRITUALISTIC FACES.

"Millions have been converted by Spiritualism. We have nothing uncanny—no darkened rooms. Nobody is more sincere than we are. We are truth-lovers, searchers for light, light, more light."

On a table in front of Mrs. Gaule-Reidinger were many objects which belonged to or were associated with dead persons, from whom those who left the objects wished to receive messages. The medium said that by handling these objects she could practice psychometry, or soul reading. "When I hold one of these objects in my hands," she said, "I see clairvoyantly the one to whom it belonged, but I cannot tell beforehand what the manifestations will be."

The first object which she picked up was a daguerreotype case. Then the medium said, "I see the kind face of an old lady. Her hair is streaked with gray and is neatly arranged. I cannot see the features very well. I also see a little child reaching out her hands."

She asked who had placed the article on the table and a man in the audience said it was he. Turning to him, the medium said: "Your spirit friends are going to help you in the plans you are undecided about. There is something in this daguerreotype case which was closely associated with one of your friends who has passed into the spirit world. It seems to me that it is a coin, a pocket-piece, perhaps, which was carried for years. Am I right?"

The owner of the case said that she was, and upon opening the case the coin was found inside.

The medium next picked up a bunch of keys. She said: "I see the spirit of one who has passed out of this world as the result of an accident—a lady. I also see the spirit of a man who stoops a little. They tell you to be slow in something you contemplate which may affect you physically and say that you are going to accomplish what you desire in the closing satisfactorily of personal affairs."

Two yellow daisies tied together next were picked up. Mrs. Gaule Reidinger said: "I see the spirit of a little boy looking into my face, and a tall, slender woman. I hear the word 'Courage.' Does it mean that you should be courageous in some crisis you are facing now? The sister of the little spirit child is with you tonight. You had nothing to bring, but when you got off the car the little girl saw the flowers and asked you to get some for her. You thought you would lay them on the table to see if you could get a message, and the dead sister knew what you wanted."

The man who had brought the flowers admitted that she had stated the case correctly.

Picking up a small package, the medium said: "If I had a pencil I should write "Love everywhere." A spirit hand is trying to touch this article. I feel the love between a mother and her child. In this package is something taken from a braid of long hair—a bow of ribbon perhaps. The owner of whatever it is was a psychic, and you also are psychic. The spirit of the owner of this article is named 'Schwartz,'' and she is accompanied by an old lady, whom you called 'Grandma S.'

"I am in another country; a strange place, where customs and people are very different from what they are here," said the medium, when she handled a small silver box. "I see three persons who owned this box. It holds a great deal of association. An old gentleman who walked with a cane was the first owner."

The woman who had placed the box on the table admitted this to be true.

The organist sang a solo. At the close of the composition the medium turned toward the organist and said: "Your father died lately. His spirit is here and bids you be cheerful. He has been met in the spirit world by one that loved him, and both are guarding you."

Approaching a woman in the audience, Mrs. Gaule-Reidinger said:, "I see a lady much like you in appearance, and a tall, determined man, who seems to be your brother. He says it doesn't make so much difference what one believes on earth, so long as he does what is right.

"Now I see the spirit of a tall lady with brown eyes and kind face. She is holding out her hands to that gentleman there," pointing out the man to whom she referred. "She says, 'you came here to see somebody else, but I want to speak to you. I promised that if I should leave this world first I would come back if I could."

"I see a spirit in a dazed condition," said the medium, approaching another man. "He says to you: 'I could not have regained consciousness. It was too much of a blow.' The body to which the spirit belonged may not be buried yet. It left the body only yesterday. This man was killed in an accident. You wondered whether it was too soon to get a message from your dead friend."

The man to whom Mrs. Gaule-Reidinger spoke said that his friend had been killed in a train accident on Monday.

Mrs. Gaule-Reidinger conveyed other messages, and at the conclusion of the seance said: "There are persons in this audience who did not have faith in Spiritualism when they came here. You said: 'There's nothing in Spiritualism.' But you took no pains to find out. Perhaps you still think that Spiritualists are deluded because you don't see the spirits that inspire me and give unto me what I give unto you. Yesterday men were dreaming. Today they are thinking. Pray for wisdom and don't condemn that of which you are ignorant."

ANNUAL CONVENTION

Of the National Spiritualists' Association.

The thirteenth annual convention of the National Spiritualists' Association will be held in the First Unitarian Church, Eighth street and Mary Place, Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

This gathering will be one of the grandest convocations ever held in the name of Spiritualism; no one, no matter what his sect or faith, should fail to attend, while Spiritualists can afford to sacrifice much, if necessary, in order to be present at every session.

Note the fine array of platform talent expected to be present and participate in the exercises, none better in the world: Prof. W. F. Peck, Dr. Austin, Will J. Erwood, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, Mrs. Ressegue, Oscar Edgefly, Mrs. Lillie, Mrs. Fixen, Eva McCoy, Margaret Gaule-Redinger, and a host of others.

The musical program, under the auspices, for one-half of the convention, of the well known artiste, Mme. Ida May Poulson, and for the other half, of Prof. Paul Zumbach, will be a rare treat which none will care to miss.

The business sessions will be of the utmost importance and interest; come and listen to them even if you are not delegates.

The lyceum movement will be explained to you by its enthusiast, John W. Ring, the general superintendent of lyceums; he has something more than good to tell you of the children of the lyceum.

Come one and all and give your influence and encouragement to the N. S. A. and its hard-working auxiliaries. Secure your rooms at the Nicollet Hotel, one dollar a day for good accommodations—a first-class cafe is attached to the hotel. Be sure and get certificate tickets at your home railroad office and by it secure your return trip for one-third regular fare; bring those certificate tickets to convention with you.

All sessions, day and evening, open to the public, FREE.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.

Commendable.

Dr. Caird said well, when he wrote: "To devote time to rhapsodies on the sweet summerland and useless sophistries in the name of philosophy, is to my mind impracticable and a waste of energy.

"Spiritualism should teach that the human mind is incapable of grasping the immensity of creation, much less the Creator; that natural laws must be followed for our physical well being; moral laws for our mental contentment. We are all creatures of emotions and desires, differing in degree and should be so understood."

WOMEN AT THE FRONT.

They Play an Important Part in the Management of the Chicago Public Schools.

A remarkable event, says the Chicago Record-Herald; in the history of the Chicago public school system is the appointment of Miss Addams to the very responsible and high position of chairman of the school management committee. She has displayed administrative and executive abilities of a high order, the admirable management of Hull House, with its numberless educational and uplifting activities, having excited admiration among all those that are familiar with the splendid institution. To convictions and the courage of them she joins tact, practical sagacity and tolerance.

During the fifteen years Miss Addams has been head of Hull House she has become internationally famous. In a quiet way the settlement has been conducting classes in which more than 7,000 men, women and children are enrolled. The best educators have been obtained and the most advanced educational principles have been put into force. Few persons in Chicago are aware of this class-room work of the settlement, but is is noted the world over among students of sociology.

As chairman of the school management committee Miss Addams will have as aides Dr. Cornelia B. DeBey and Mrs. Emmons Blaine, both of whom for years have taken a prominent part in educational affairs. Mrs. Blaine has contributed more than $1,000,000 to the cause of education, while Dr. DeBey has been associated with the schools as an instructor in the normal school and later as a champion of the most advanced pedagogical idea.

It will be recalled that Justice Brewer in an interview on the future of women in the political and social spheres paid a warm tribute to Miss Addams and "nominated" her for Mayor of Chicago. We cannot make Miss Addams mayor in the present state of the law of Illinois, but the people of the city can congratulate the school board and themselves on her appointment to a public position hardly less useful and distinguished, and this they are undoubtedly doing in their hearts.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A WORKER'S NOTES.

Elizabeth Harlow Writes of Her Work and Visits.

Again is the summer's work over, and I find myself back in Columbus, Ohio, ready to take up the winter's work.

This has been a season filled with things. As I visited dear old New England first of the summer, and worked with the old friends, I found everything and everybody just moving and all towards a greater effort and power in this cause, for the enlightenment of man's mind and freedom of body.

While there is a current of close investigation going on as to the methods of some individuals, and their supposed work, there is as well a firmer and more pronounced stand being taken by both societies and the public that this is really the one great especial truth of the age and must therefore be better protected and cared for, by giving it more practical systematic opportunities. And I feel that Chicago may feel proud and claim the honor of having set this current at work in its systematic form as it is that city that has the honor of being the home of The Progressive Thinker and the Chicago Spiritualists League.

It was my extreme good fortune to stop for a while with these workers on my return trip from Clinton camp. While there I heard the question asked, What has the League accomplished so far? And here is what it has done, as viewed by an outsider: It stands as a friend and co-worker with The Progressive Thinker that has been battling so continuously for honor and liberty. It stands before the city as an intelligent, honest, conscientious body of men and women, so that the newspapers and courts and churches are beginning to see that there really may yet be some good come out of Nazareth. It has called together the Spiritualists of the city once a month, and held those mass meetings, which are bound to do good in a myriad of ways. It has set the pace so that other localities are waking up and commencing to agitate at least a more intelligent standing for the cause in their cities and towns.

And is this not quite enough for a child so young to have done? It seems so to me. I want to say to all its officers and members, be patient, be firm, be diligent and always just, and you have no conception of the great and lasting good you can do.

And I do want to just refer to the Sunflower Club, an auxiliary of the Illinois State Association. Here are a few noble, earnest women that are just beginning to work. And as I studied them each and all I feel and saw the nucleus from which may come great power and good not only for the Illinois State Association, but the Cause in general. These ladies are planning to have a Bazaar in December, and I hope some, if not all who may read this will feel to send some little thing for this Bazaar. It will not only help in dollars and cents, but will more firmly link the efforts of all, and be for good. Anything sent to Mrs. J. R. Francis, 40 Loomis street, will be gladly received and used for the purpose. She is one of the more silent workers in this great cause, but of great power because of her sweet, persistent effort. I feel she is the invisible fountain from which the Editor of The Progressive Thinker constantly draws, and thus his extreme justness, for she is the embodiment of love and service.

It nearly made me homesick to leave the city after having mingled with these women. I did so wish to stay and become one of them. They have strong minds, energetic ones, loving ones, and those that are touched by the spirit world in an invisible manner.

But I realize that the workers cannot be all in one place. So after a two week's sojourn in the summer home of that tireless worker, Laura G. Fixen, I wound about me the blanket of power that was woven from the messages of the Great Lake, the sighing trees, the twitter of birds and squirrels, and the pathetic eyes of Neehalls (the dear dog), and that strong, tender, love of Mrs. Fixen herself, and I said good-bye to all.

I stopped on my way here at Balbec, Ind., for some work. Here to my great surprise I found, away out in the country, a society that has been organized and holding meetings ever since 1868. They own their hall, which is commodious, and run their meetings purely by subscription. This being the first place I ever was where no door fee or collection was taken. It was a great lesson to me. It shows what can be done when we just will. We had excellent audiences both Sundays, and everyone had to drive at least two miles, and many coming eight and ten. This was one of the choisest visits of my summer's work. Here was character and love in all its innocence. It did me great good to be there.

But, alas! I must say farewell there, and now I am located for the winter, to work with the Sixth Street Church of this city.

What we shall accomplish remains to be seen. I want all the good thoughts of the friends, and all workers and laymen passing this way to call and see us.

Please remember, 345 E. Long Street, Columbus, Ohio, where you will find me. ELIZABETH HARLOW.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. "How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.50.

Spiritualism: Its Import to Mankind.

A Lecture Delivered by Mrs. H. L. P. Russegue, at Queen City Park, South Burlington, Vt.,

Invocation.

Beloved angels, who are the ministers of Divine truth, we invoke your presence; we ask that you may come so near unto us, that the words of wisdom you may bring, may become the rod and staff of all who are in need. Come so near to us, that the light and warmth of your presence may be experienced, and that the glory of Divine truth may shine out over all souls, until the spiritual outreaching may become so real, and so insistent in human nature, that men and women may be looking higher, aspiring more, loving better, knowing kindness, and charity, and mercy, the attributes of a higher life.

Oh, Thou Father of all, we thank Thee for the manifold gifts Thou hast given us; we thank Thee for the bright day, for the glorious sunlight that illumines the earth, and makes glad the heart of man. We thank Thee for all the blessings that are shimmering down from on high, and those that are coming up out of human hearts. We thank Thee that the door of communication is opening more and more day by day, by which those who are out of the mortal life, and enjoying the fruits of the spiritual world, may come more closely to earth, until the world may know that Thou art the living Spirit, and that Thy children are eternal with Thee, that Thy breath, Thy heart throbbings, Thy spirit, inheres all that live, and that Thy love enshrouds all. We thank Thee, our Father, for every good and perfect gift, we thank Thee for every experience, even if it be thwart with sorrow and pain. We thank Thee that the shadows fall across our ways, for we are brought more closely to Thy Divine love.

Poem by Lizzie Doten, Entitled "Labor and Wait."

All green, and bitter, and hard and sour,
The fruit on the Tree of Life is growing;
But the genial sunshine, with quickening power,
Will sweeten its juices like nectar flowing
For the full, fair growth of its perfect state
There is only needed the right condition.
Then labor and wait, both early and late,
Till the ripening shall bring fruition.

Far out in the harvest fields of Time,
The grain for the reaper is standing ready,
And they who come to the work sublime
Must toil with a patience calm and steady
Truth never was subject to Chance or Fate—
Its sickle, so sharp, cuts clean and even.
Then labor and wait, both early and late,
For the seed-field of earth yields the harvest of heaven.

In their quiet graves, on the green hill-side,
The sacred dust of your loved is sleeping;
And the homes where the light of their smile has died
Are filled with the sorrowful sounds of weeping.
But over the gloomy clouds of Fate,
The light of the better land is shining;
Then labor and wait, both early and late,
For the cloud of Death has a silver lining.

There are fair, sweet faces, and gentle eyes,
That look through the shadows and mists above you;
And the fond affection that never dies,
Still speaks from the lips of the blest who love you.
They call you up from your low estate,
To the boundless bliss of the life supernal.
Then labor and wait, both early and late,
For time is short, but Life is Eternal. —Lizzie Doten.

I shall read a part of the second chapter of Acts:

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place.

"And suddenly there came a sound from Heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled the house where they were sitting.

"And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them,

"And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."

From Genesis to Revelation, the Bible is filled with a history of visions; it is filled with a history of what men have seen, and heard; of what they have come to know through the avenues of their own spiritual sensations and senses. So from the history upon which the Christian church is based, we find that the foundation stones have been reared of the experiences of men; of what their eyes have seen; of what their ears have heard; of what their mouths, their spirits, have spoken, and the day is come when revelation is becoming more common, when we are hearing better things, we are seeing more brightly, we are casting away limitations, we are breaking down the barriers of the olden time, and we are climbing the eternal heights of God's glory. The spirit world is never idle; it has never yet reached the time that it has found nothing to do.

The angels have come to us; they have labored, and waited; they know that the future is a fruition of the present; that to-morrow is the fulfilling of the prophecy of to-day; that the eternity before us is the culmination of this great eternity of which we are a common part, and they will labor and wait, and they will teach us to labor and wait, doing our duty, living our best lives, thinking our best thoughts, aspiring to the greater heights of which we catch glimpses, reaching out into this vast universe to grasp truth wherever it may be found, from whatever source it may come, through whatever avenue it may express itself, and from whatever height it may descend to us.

There is one thing that Spiritualism has given to the world, that cannot be claimed of any other formulated religious belief, or knowledge, and that is to discern for ourselves spiritual things, that we have not to cast into the hold of the brains belonging to priestcraft the thoughts, the hopes, the aspirations, the great Divine truths that surround us, but we are to open the temples of God, and find therein enshrined His divinity, His holiness, His glory, and His righteousness. We have the key in our own lives to these temples, and they are the kingdom of desire.

If we would see spiritually we must become spiritually minded. If we would hear the voices of the angel world we must attune our souls to the realm of spirit and to the rhythm of angelic truths. If we would touch angelic beings, we must purify the temples in which we live, that we may become worthy to touch the hem of angelic garments. It is time that we were making ourselves worthy of greater spiritual gifts than have ever before come to mankind.

It is time that we divest ourselves of the narrow prejudices, the dogmas and creeds that enshroud us, and that have fettered us—to the state of human bigotry. It is time that we attain to a greater height than we have ever reached before. It is time that we should have opened our hearts to the influx of a diviner truth, and we are not to depend upon what has come to them, but we are to open our souls to what may come to man.

Spiritualism belongs to no one phase of belief, to no one era of time, to no one class of minds, to no one great intelligence, but it is the ism of human nature, of the spiritual nature of humanity. It is the ism of human want, the longing of human souls, the uplift to human nature, and the light that guides us to a diviner inspiration.

Too long we have groped in the dark; too long we have been grappling with the impossibilities; too long we have been asking that God might vouchsafe to us gifts, and that angels should come to us, bringing to our sight things that we could not perceive, and to our hearing things that we could not understand.

It is time that we make ourselves ready for these inspirations; it is time that we prepared the soil of our intellects, that the seeds of divine truth may be sown therein; and if we lift our eyes, and behold a heavenly vision let down from on high, then it is that vision shall strike down deep into our natures, and become a part of our lives, and that what our eyes see shall only cause a broader, richer, stronger life than any we have held before.

Spiritualism has come to the world a benediction, it has not come to prepare us to die; we know nothing of death, it has only come to make life sweeter, truer, more divine. It has taught us that the rungs in the ladder which we are climbing to a broader life and a richer world belong to our spiritual natures, belong to ourselves; we are forming them by our deeds, we are creating the ladders upon which we climb to higher truths, and to greater peace, and holier happiness. We are making the world better, if we are true to its teachings. The profane man is no longer profane, the drunkard no longer becomes intoxicated by any beverage; the gourmand is no longer drunken by over-eating; the man of passion is the man who modifies the attributes of human nature.

The world, the world everywhere, is clothed with a richer beauty, it is sweeter and holier, and nobler, and the world has in it today more charity, more brotherly kindness, more human sympathy, more God-like attributes, than at any period that is known to man.

We may build beautiful temples, we may rear handsome hospitals, we may give of our substance more generously, all these things are only a part of human nature. We have separated the spiritual from the human, we have made the spiritual world a thing to be hoped for, when it is right here, and we are in it, and of it. We have made Heaven so far away from us, that we forget even that it is, and yet it abides within, its lights shine out through the windows of our souls, its beauty comes out like sweet waters from our tongues. It is going from our hands in noble deeds, it forgets scandal, it hearkens not to slander, it only knows that "love ye one another" is the highest command, and the noblest attribute of the spiritual natures of the world.

Spiritualism is doing so much for mankind, whether we call it by that name or not. Spiritualism is only the ism of the Spirit, it is only the the manifestation of the spirituality of man.

Religion along the way has only been the manifestation of the higher spiritual perceptions. If I go to Syria, and wrest from the altars there the Gods of stone, that have been molded by human hands, and bring them to you as objects before which you prostrate your bodies, and utter prayers, if I bring them to you, what are they? They are the attributes of the spiritual nature of the man who made them. They are the noblest God those men could create. They are the highest formulation of his spiritual perception. If I bring to you from the Roman Catholic Church its flaming candles, its crosses, its holy water, and its bread, what are they all? They are but the highest attributes of the conception of those men who have received them, and made them the basis of their religious belief. If I go into the Protestant church, and I bring out of it a belief in a spiritual God, who is angry, who is ready to judge man, who is ready to wield an influence over the earth to punish the unrighteous, and to save the same, then I am bringing to you the highest perception of a spiritual ideal the Protestant church contains.

If I bring you a religion that tells you of a universal spirit, of a spirit of universal love, that is symbolized, in that love for the sinner, the vilest, and lowest type of human nature, who lives, that loves enough, and is strong enough, and high enough, to lift that sinner up to greater heights, and to loftier standards of activity, then I have brought you an idol, that is a great deal stronger, and higher, and sweeter, and more divine, than any other religion that has ever been uttered to the world, and friends, this is Spiritualism. This is what Spiritualism teaches, this is what it brings to the world; it brings something that makes every word that passes through your lips one of love and kindness, one that is uplifting.

The lower the man, the stronger the effort to redeem; the more ignorant and sinful, the greater the effort to save; the worse he may act, the deeper the endeavor on your part to help him up the heights; and such is the religion of Spiritualism; such is the religion that has been brought from the angel world, to reach the angels in human nature, to come down to the angelic nature of humanity, and find there the God-like attributes of mankind, and is it not time that these were discovered by you? Is it not time that the veil was rent that has hidden you from them? Is it not time that you should have come into the open door that opens the way to the brighter Heaven that inlies yourself?

More than this, Spiritualism has accomplished, it has taught you that labor means growth, means enlarging, expanding. It does not imply license, when it teaches you to love one another; it does not teach you to go down into the degradation of lust, when it teaches you to help one another; it does not teach you to brand each other as evil doers, but it teaches you that there is enough of divinity in every human being that entitles every soul to salvation from sin.

Spiritualism has accomplished more than all this too; it has brought to the world the knowledge of a diviner communion; that you are not only communing with those whom you love, whom you know, with whom you walked, and talked, and thought, but it has taught you that the doors of eternal life are wide open, and that you are communing with those who can help you; that your every need is a prayer, and it is going out into this great world, and it is to be answered by those who are in harmony with you, to help you, to make for yourself the best possible results of what may be vouchsafed to you.

Spiritualism has brought to you the knowledge that the spiritual world is everywhere; that there is nothing real that is not spiritual; that there is nothing material that is not the manifestation of a spiritual law; that even though there may be imperfections, yet there is nothing in nature that has attained to perfection.

You look upon the beautiful sky, upon the gleaming waters, you look upon the glad world, with the air washed clean, and you exclaim, Perfection! whence comest thou. You are here, everywhere, and yet there is no such thing as perfection. Thank God there is nothing in divinity that has attained to perfection, and the world is opening to a diviner greatness, a diviner perfectness, a diviner divinity. Science is constantly revealing her mysteries; she is telling the glad story that you know only a tithe of the wonders that inhere the kingdom of life. It is telling you the wonderful history of the past, and it is building a glorified foundation for the future. Science is modeling the mind to receive a higher manifestation; she is unfolding the mysterious paths; she is clearing away the debris of unbelief; she is making glad the skies that overcast, that overshadow you; she is making more beautiful this wonderful universe to which you belong. Science is the hand-maiden of divinity, and she is bringing to you its wonders and beauty.

Frothingham once said, "If Spiritualists would divest their minds of the belief in the lower order of things, and would accept the lessons taught by common sense, then their religion would be based upon eternal truth."

Tyndall said, "I believe there is enough in Spiritualism, according to its modern manifestations, to teach mankind to investigate its laws, and to find therein a wonderful truth," but it is to the world simply a phenomenon, it is not a law, and it is time Spiritualists begin to recognize the fact that there is not a single manifestation that is presented from the higher life, that is not based upon law, and is but the fulfilling of the mandate of the law, and it comes within the realm of common sense, of good judgment, of intelligent investigation, of spiritual perception, and the answer to the soul's prayer. It is to the world the answer to the question, and the solving of the problem, if man dies, shall he live? and it is not only affirms that he does live after what you call death, but it proves his identity, until faith and belief is lost in the noonday sun of eternal knowledge.

Spiritualism is to the world what food is to the hungry body; it is to the soul what the soul most needs, and I care not whether you are Roman Catholic, Episcopalian, Congregationalist, Baptist, Presbyterian, or Methodist, it makes no difference, if you are spiritually unfolded, neither one of these formulated faiths can compass your lives, and your spiritual nature is growing day by day, until creeds fall away into decay, and dogma is merging into wisdom, and you know that you have found eternal goodness.

Spiritualism is the highway upon which your souls are ascending its ladder; upon which angels are climbing to higher possibilities, and upon which they are descending to the lowest realms of nature to lift up the fallen. I would not give anything for any religion, or any ism, or any belief, that is simply housed in fine temples, and as only belonging to respectable society. I want a religion that can go down into the mire, down into the deeps of human sin, and ignorance; I want a religion so great, so holy, so divine, so good, that it can go where it is needed; that it shall be bread to the hungry, light to those in darkness; strength to those who are morally weak, and health for soul and body to the morally and physically diseased. I want Spiritualism to be this kind of a remedy for the ills of earth, and if it is not, it is good for nothing, and ought or better be cast aside.

It means something that the doors of the kingdom of heaven have been opened unto man; it means something that has thrown into this life a brighter illumination than you have ever before observed; it means something that angels have knocked at the doors of your souls, and you can let them in, if you will; it means something that the voice of God has sounded throughout the universe, if it has found a response in your lives; it means something when a man or woman can say in their souls, I have something better, something purer, and the house into which it shall come shall be made clean and pure to receive it; it means something when a man or woman is better because of his or her religion, more helpful, more loving, more charitable, more everlastingly loving in that way, that lives to do, and be, and think, and grow, and who has not found perfection?

The vision that comes to us is the vision of more glorified day, of something that brings to the world a higher truth. Spiritualism has not performed its mission, has not accomplished its work, until capital punishment shall have died, and been consigned to its abiding resting place, when it is no longer a life for a life, but a better life for a wicked one, a richer life for a poorer one, a truer life for a false one, a holier life for a sinful one. Spiritualism has not accomplished its work until there is a universal brotherhood, until we see in the fallen woman, and in the fallen man, the spark that makes a man our brother, and a woman our sister.

Religion has not come to seek and to save the world, until it becomes the active spirit that prevails in the land. I tell you, it has been a dead letter too long, and the man who is so much of a coward, that he will even ask to be saved through the blood of the Nazarene, and will not work out his own salvation, and wait for the ultimate, is a coward, and a sneak. I want a religion that is not afraid of work; is not afraid of sin; is not afraid of crime; is not afraid of ignorance; is not afraid of the darkness; but will carry its torch to illumine the dark places, and make the world brighter; and that is what my Spiritualism must mean, what yours must mean, when you receive it, as it is; it must mean the best of nature; the truest of love; and the divinest of Godlike humanity.

WE SHALL LIVE AND GROW.

A Spirit Message Which Is Addressed ta All.

My spirit friend, George, says: "Oh, the joy of it all, Emma! No more sickness, sorrow, nor death; but we are all to live and grow in God's beautiful universe."

This is a message for all, and I want all to enjoy it with me. It does not say a chosen few only, are to be saved, but all, each and every one of God's children are to live. And how sweet it is to live, and think, and act, and enjoy. Yes, it is a beautiful conscious life for us all, stretching out and away into the great future. Not only are we all to live, but we are to grow.

I hope this message will reach all who are sick in body or mind; those who are disappointed in life, and have failed in their high aims for culture and growth. Do not give up, do not crush those longings, but reach out higher than ever for knowledge and truth. Your chance will surely come. Every opportunity for advancement will yet be yours. Like the plant that has outgrown its tiny pot of clay, we shall be transplanted to better conditions, to richer soil and sunnier clime, and there we shall thrive and grow, and develop all our powers to perfection.

Hugo had a grand idea of the possibilities of man, when he said, "I feel the little God within me—I know I am towering to the skies."

And what a wonderful thing is mediumship! Unfolding our spiritual powers, and developing our spiritual senses while yet in the physical body. I went as far into the spiritual life as a person can go and continue to live here. At one time the spiritual part of me was so highly developed that I seemed to stand out, above the world, I saw it all at a glance, the boundless universe—the great future for man, and Infinite Intelligence over all.

I said, "And this is for man! This is his inheritance! How grand! How glorious!" My soul was filled with awe and wonder, and I could bear no more. I felt as man did in the wild dream of the German poet, "God called man in dreams into the vestibule of heaven, saying, 'Come up hither, and I will show thee the wonders of my house.' And to his angels who stood about his throne, he said, 'Take him, strip him of his robes of flesh; cleanse his affections; put a new breath into his nostrils, but touch not his human heart—the heart that fears and hopes and trembles.' A moment and it was done, and the man stood ready for his unknown voyage. Under the guidance of a mighty angel, with sound of flying pinions, they sped away from the battlements of heaven. Some time on the mighty angel's wings they fled through Saharas of darkness, wilderness of death. At length, from a distance not counted save in the arithmetic of heaven, light beamed upon them—a sleepy flame as seen through a hazy cloud. They sped on in their terrible speed to meet the light; the light with lesser speed came to meet them. In a moment the blazing of suns around them—a moment the wheeling of planets; then came long eternities of twilight; then again on the right hand and the left appeared other constellations. At last the man sank down, crying, 'Angel, I can go no further; let me lie down in the grave and hide myself from the infinitude of the universe, for end there is none.'

"'End is there none?' demanded the angel. And from the glittering stars that shone around there came a choral shout, 'End there is none!' 'End there is none?' demanded the angel again; 'and is it this that awes thy soul?' I answer, 'End there is none to the universe of God! Lo, also, there is no beginning!'"

Dear readers, I, too, could go no further. I asked my father (spirit) if what the Bible said was true, that the world was made in six days. He replied, "No, Emma, it has been great cycles of time in its formation and growth, but it is the result of just one thought of God."

How marvelous! God thinks a world, and lo! it swings in space; and life moves, and law governs, and man reigns. I have no creeds or dogmas in my religion. I have outgrown them all. Simply knowledge of God's love, power and wisdom; that is enough for me. Spiritualism has swept away all doubt and fear, and light, peace and joy has come to gladden the earth.

Now, we know there is no death, but all is God—Life—and Love.

A TELEPATHIC MESSAGE.

The Recipient, a Medium, Desires to Know Who Sent It.

To the Editor:—At 1:20 p. m., on Sunday, Sept. 17, I was sitting in a passive mood after eating my dinner, my husband having left the dining-room, I seemed to sense telepathically a thought message from a lady and a reader of The Progressive Thinker. The message as I caught it was, that after having read the communication of my husband, B. G. Sweet, published in The Progressive Thinker, some lady, a sensitive, desired to come in rapport with me, and she was wondering how she could reach me. Now, if there is any reader of this paper who sent out such a thought at that time and will write me, I think she will receive a message from the spirit world that will be very satisfactory to her.

For the first five or six years of my mediumistic development, my soul yearned for encouragement and advice from developed mediums, but no one seemed able or willing to give me the spiritual light I so much craved. I am not a public medium, nor do I give readings for money, but when it is given to me to give spiritual help or consolation to those hungering for spiritual food, the consolation of being able to help them is a comfort to me. Fully three-fourths of men and women who come for readings are seeking for material benefits, and my guides do not care person is in spiritual trouble, it is a pleasure to help them.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

AN INVESTIGATOR'S EXPERIENCE.

He Meets With Rotten Fakes While Searching for Truth, and In the Course of Time Drifts Into the Home Circle, and His Wife Is Developed Into an Excellent Medium.

I am very glad to see The Progressive Thinker trying to separate the golden grain from the chaff, and hope the good work has just begun, and some day the true medium can stand upon the rostrum as an angel of light, while the fakers, impostors and scoundrels will be excluded by all societies as well as Spiritualists.

Why seek advice regarding business affairs from a good and pure spirit, who has no interest whatever in earthly affairs and will not direct you?

Earth-bound spirits are willing to advise, but their judgment is far worse than your own in most cases.

Let every true Spiritualist take the grand words of our noble president (Mr. Barrett) to heart and forever try to get away from the sensational, the fanatical, and the commercial elements, and aim for the good, the pure, the consoling and loving forces that are always ready to help you to be happier, better, and live upright, honest lives, teaching you to be good and do good.

In the '90s I had experiences with most of the so-called mediums that were then located in Chicago. Finally I went to San Francisco and the fraud practiced there at that time was even enough for the blind to see. After I had taken a course there with one of the fakes and knew how the credulous were duped, I came away thoroughly disgusted, and bordering on the cold and dismal see of materialism, a wretched and miserable mortal.

Thanks to the few genuine mediums that had thrown a ray of light into my soul, and are still doing grand work, and I hope to grasp them by the hand some day and say: "God bless you for the rays of light you bestowed upon me."

Those few rays kept the star of hope above the black sea of materialism and now the dark clouds have parted and rays of sunshine are pouring into my blessed and happy home.

Eight months ago my dear wife had an odd dream which I interpreted as a call from the spirit world, and I suggested to sit. To our surprise her hand was controlled at the first sitting and her development has been gradual ever since.

Now she receives beautiful messages daily and we hope some day she will be able to throw rays of light into the souls of those that are seeking truth, happiness and contentment, the same as I have after wandering around for fifteen years. D. E. KNORR.

LORD TO INHERIT SECRET.

Glamis Will Learn of "Haunted Room" in a Few Days—On Attaining Majority Each Heir of Earl of Strathmore Is Told About Specter of Ancestral Home.

London, Eng.—When Lord Glamis comes of age, in a few days' time, the secret of the "haunted room" at his ancestral home of Glamis castle, Forfarshire, will be communicated to him by his father, the Earl of Strathmore. At least that is locally understood to have been an invariable practice on such occasions from time immemorial.

What secret the "haunted room" conceals is supposed to be passed on to every heir as he attains his majority. Thus its precise nature is in the possession of never more than two persons at the same time. Conjecture and tradition say, however, that in the long ago, when the Lindsays and the Ogilvies were at feud, a number of the latter clan were imprisoned and died in that particular chamber.

Room Has Uncanny Peculiarities.

That the room has some uncanny peculiarities appears to be beyond doubt, for the late Lord Strathmore had it walled up after visiting the apartment one night to determine the origin of certain weird noises which, it is said, had for a long time disturbed and puzzled him.

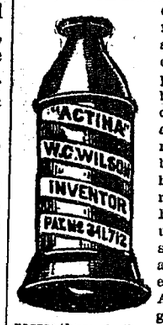
"The earl opened the door with a key," wrote a correspondent to a Dr. Lee, "and dropped back in a dead swoon into the arms of his companions; nor could he ever be induced to open his lips on the subject afterward."

The experiences of a lady visitor at the castle are quoted in the book, "Haunted Homes and Family Legends." The lady was accompanied by her child, who slept in a dressing room adjoining the apartment occupied by the mother.

"Suddenly," so the story runs, "a cold blast stole into the lady's room, extinguishing the night light by her bedside. She saw a tall mailed figure pass into the dressing room. Immediately thereafter there was a shriek from her child. Her maternal instinct was aroused. She rushed into the dressing-room and found the child in an agony of fear. It described what it has seen as 'a giant,' who came and leaned over its face."

"Principles of Light and Color." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A truly great work of a master mind, and one whom Spiritualists should delight to honor. The result of years of deep thought and patient research into Nature's finer forces are here gathered and made amenable to the well-being of humanity. Medical men especially, and scientists, general readers and students of occult forces will find instruction of great value and interest. A large, four-pound book, strongly bound, and containing beautiful illustrative plates. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $5. It is a wonderful work and you will be delighted with it.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.



"Immortality, Its Naturalness, its Possibilities and Proofs." By J. M. Peebles, M. A., M. D., Ph. D. Contains the address rejected by the Philosophical Society of Great Britain, with Introduction and Explanatory Letter. Price 15 cents.

"Voltaire's Romances." Translated from the French. With numerous illustrations. These lighter works of the brilliant Frenchman, an invincible enemy of the Catholic church, are worthy of wide reading. Wit, philosophy and romance are combined, with the skill of a master mind. Price $1.50.

DEAFNESS AND CATARRH CURED

BY NO METHOD UNTIL "ACTINA" WAS DISCOVERED.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Out of the Depths Into the Light.

By Samuel Bowles; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. This is a very interesting little book, and will be appreciated from start to finish by all who wish to gain spiritual information. Price, 25 cents.

DEATH ITS MEANING and Results.

By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting narrative relating a series of wonderful psychic manifestations occurring in the writer's experience. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

The Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake } This fascinating Book by the well-known Author and Scholar,

HON. A. B. RICHMOND,

Should be in the hands of every Spiritualist in the land. It is based on a historical fact, but through the narrative is woven a psychic line of thought in the style so natural to the great criminal lawyer that one can feel the author's very presence during its perusal. It is certainly interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

ENCYCLOPEDIA ... OF ... BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM ... OR ... A CONCORDANCE

To the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism;

Together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible.

BY MOSES HULL.

Much that is in this book appeared in an abridged form in a series of nine full pages of The Progressive Thinker. These articles were prepared at the call of hundreds of Spiritualists who felt the need of some kind of document for ready reference. They only seemed to whet the appetite for more; hence the publication of this work.

The author, Moses Hull, has written many volumes on Spiritualistic and other themes and each one is full of careful study on the subject chosen. Mr. Hull, in his introduction of this work says:

"Hoping that this book will serve to lead the people out of the wilderness of doubt and despair; and that when Spiritualism shall have wrested the Bible from its 'sanctified' enemies, it will not 'spike' it, but will use it to batter down the walls of Christian superstition and ignorance, I send it out on its errand of enlightenment with the humble prayer that it will prove a divine benediction to every reader."

The Encyclopedia of Biblical Spiritualism contains 385 pages, beautifully printed on good paper; contains a full-page portrait of the author and is handsomely bound in cloth. Every Spiritualist should have this work.

ORIGIN OF SPECIES,

By means of natural selection, or the preservation of a favored race in the struggle for life. By Charles Darwin. Gilt top, cloth bound. This book is the grandest achievement of modern scientific thought and research. It has passed through many editions in English, has been translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and has been the subject of more reviews, pamphlets and separate books than any other volume of the age. Most of the great scientists of the age fully support his position. The thought of this book has become a part of the common inheritance of the race. For sale at this office. Price 75 cts.

Discovery of a Lost Trail

BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,

Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by this wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail"

is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

A NEW CATECHISM,

BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.

This is a new "Catechism" in the full sense of the word. There has as yet appeared in the world of liberal literature nothing like this most wonderful little book or treasure. E. P. Powell, the well-known author, the reviewer and critic, says: "The remarkable thing about this 'Catechism' is that it tells the truth." It deals with the questions of God, Immortality—the Creeds, the Clergy, the Church, Prayer and Salvation, Jesus and his Teaching, the Growth of the Christian Scriptures, and many other philosophical, scientific and ethical questions with the utmost candor, courage and clearness. 183 pages. Cloth 75c; paper, 50c

Talleyrand's Letter to the Pope.

This work will be found especially interesting to all who would desire to make a study of Romanism and the Bible. The historic facts stated, and the keen, scathing review of Romish ideas and practices should be read by all. Price 25 cents.

THE GOSPEL OF BUDDHA,

According to Old Records. By Dr. Paul Carus. A translation made from Japanese, under the auspices of the Rev. Shaku Soyer, delegate to the Parliament of Religions. Was published in Japan. Price, $1.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

THE CHICAGO SPIRITUALISTS LEAGUE.—H. F. Arnold writes: "The next public meeting of the Chicago Spiritualists League will be held in Handel Hall, 40 East Randolph street, on Saturday evening, October 7. Our speaker for the evening is Mr. John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas, one of the most eloquent and forcible speakers upon the Spiritualistic platform. The message bearers will be Mrs. Isa Cleveland, Mrs. C. Schwahn, Mrs. Dr. Caird, and Dr. Burgess. An excellent musical program is being arranged. Let every Spiritualist in Chicago be present and enjoy the good things in store for them."

Mrs. Frances Wheeler writes: "I wish to notify my many friends in the states of Wisconsin and Illinois that I have changed my residence to Minnesota. To reach them all I could think of no better way than to ask you to kindly place this notice in your paper, as we all know how extensively it is read. I wish to thank my Wisconsin friends for the many kindly expressions of their regard and the great help they have always been to me in the development of my mediumship. I hope to meet them often, and shall be glad to hear from them at any time. My present address is 222 Harvard street S. E., Minneapolis, Minn."

Anna Throndsen, the lecturer and test medium, has a month's engagement in Indianapolis, Ind.

F. D. Dunakin, of Cecil, Ohio, passed through the city last week on his way to his home. He is president of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association. He had been lecturing for some time in Montana, and did a most excellent work there. He is an able speaker, and a most worthy representative of Spiritualism.

J. D. S. writes from Columbus, Ohio: "Barcus Temple opened its doors again for the season on Sunday evening, Sept. 17, with Mrs. Marian Carpenter of Detroit as speaker and test medium. The large congregation that gathered was evidence that the cause is not waning in the Buckeye capital. Beginning Sunday, Oct. 1, and for the entire season, Miss Elizabeth Harlow will dispense the spiritual food and a very successful season is expected."

Mrs. C. Schwahn writes: "Mr. John W. Ring of Galveston, Texas, will, on October 5, at 8 p. m., lecture in the hall at 523 Belmont avenue. I am sure those who had the opportunity to hear Mr. Ring last year will be glad to hear him again, and will with us join in making the welcome to our dear brother in truth as sunny and harmonious as possible."

Benson Gray writes: "On Sunday, Sept. 24, Oscar A. Edgerly concluded his engagement with the First Society of Progressive Spiritualists of Jackson, Mich. His work, both as lecturer and test medium, was most excellent, and that our people were pleased is best indicated by the fact that we have secured his services for a return engagement in November. He will be with us for the entire month."

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "Dr. J. M. Peebles of Battle Creek, Mich., spoke at the Spanish Veterans' Hall, under the auspices of the Temple League. He took for his theme, 'The People of India; Their Religion and Customs.' He will speak again the 29th of this month. Prof. W. J. Colville will speak for the First Spiritualist Society in Masonic Temple for the month of October. He also announces a course of lectures to be held at 402 A street S. E., at Mr. F. A. Woods', and at Dr. A. H. Harvey's, 1402 L street N. W., beginning October 2.

Dr. Beverly writes: "The meetings at Arlington Hall 31st street and Indiana avenue, are crowded every Sunday afternoon and evening. Mrs. Kayner gave us one of her lovely talks and some fine tests, and all were very much pleased. Our music can not be excelled, for Madame Holton has trained the children's choir till they sing like birds. The Child Wonder is one of the chief attractions. All trust in her for they know she is innocent. Dr. Beverly is giving a series of lectures, illustrated by the blackboard, and many come for instruction. The Doctor is very original in his work and throws the doors open wide without any fee for the benefit of the hungry people. We welcome all who will come and help on in this great work."

W. Hassmann writes: "The regular Sunday spiritual meeting held by the North Star Spiritual Union at its hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, was greeted by a large audience, nearly all strangers and investigators of the better class. The lecture delivered by Dr. P. M. Esser, a noted speaker, demonstrating the 'Human Aura and Its Philosophical Impressions,' was very fine, and it pleased the intellectual audience, and held them spellbound through the entire discourse. Messages were given by the speaker and Mrs. Wagner, a good medium for spirit communications. The new concert organ was played by Hilda Hassmann, a gifted musical worker; her father, the president of this society, did his best to please the people. The Progressive Thinker, our only friend, was also sold at large. Please come and attend our meetings. All are welcome. Sundays, 8 p. m., sharp, Perls Hall, near Western avenue, 1546 Milwaukee avenue."

Mrs. Mary Skogland writes: "The Metaphysic Aid Society of Wellington, Ohio, has been duly organized, a Constitution and By-laws adapted, and officers elected. We are but nine in number, but our influence is reaching out to other towns, and we have occasional visitors at our semi-monthly meetings. The third Friday afternoon of each month is given to a developing circle, at which only members of the society are admitted, unless by especial request of a member. There are three members who are mediumistic, Mrs. Rozetta Gott being an automatic writer, also clairvoyant. Mrs. Gott has been giving aid to the society financially by giving clairvoyant readings. This we expect to use in the work of the society, to obtain a speaker occasionally, for literature, etc. The second meeting of the month, the third Friday, is given over to the aid department, and study of the philosophy, science and religion of Spiritualism. The Progressive Thinker is doing a good work all along the line."

Conrad Bock writes from St. Louis, Mo.: "The Advanced Spiritual Society meets at Schuette's Hall, 19th and Wright street, every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock, and Friday afternoons at 2 o'clock. On last Sunday evening a very impressive floral service was held at the reception of ten new members into the society. Mrs. Kate Price opened the services by reading an inspired poem, followed by Mrs. Effa Danelson who gave a flower to every member of the audience, with an appropriate verse. Rev. Laura M. Jones gave a fine trance lecture on the 'Nearness of God,' followed by many beautiful messages, which were promptly recognized. The society has adopted the plan of taking only voluntary offering instead of the usual ten cents taken at the door of spiritual societies, and would advise all to try the same. Rev. Laura M. Jones is one of the speakers and mediums who proclaim to the world that 'Spiritualism is their religion.' She has been chosen delegate and will represent the society at the N. S. A. convention."

Elizabeth Harlow, the noted lecturer, is now located at 345 E. Long street, Columbus, Ohio, for the winter. She will attend funerals, conventions, and do some week evening work, at a nominal price.

Mrs. E. R. Weter writes: "I wish to say a word about the passing to spirit life of Henry Slade. I attended his funeral. He was at Dr. Spinney's sanitarium. He was tenderly cared for and respectfully laid away—good enough for any one; nice casket, nice flowers, hearse and carriage, and a Spiritualist speaker. He gave slate-writings within a few weeks of his demise. The N. S. A. cared for him. I saw him several years ago, and I have copies of his slate-writings to some of my intimate friends. They are grand and true. I have heard his noble wife, Mrs. Lucinda Wilhelm Slade, lecture. I heard a minister say who heard her at that time, 'It was the best talk I ever heard.' The Doctor has been fortunate, also unfortunate, but he has gone, and will have to right the wrongs he has done."

Hanna Wall writes from Victoria, B. C.: "We have engaged for a short time the talented Helen Stuart-Richings, an old worker in the field, yet I believe she has not spoken for some time on Spiritualism. Her subject, Sept. 17, was on 'The Higher Aspects of Spiritualism;' it was very fine and her psychic readings toward the close were also excellent. We anticipate a spiritual treat, but I am sorry to say we will not be able to keep her very long as she intends going East shortly to continue her work in a wider field."

Notice to Indiana Spiritualists: The officers of the Indiana State Association are arranging a circuit and will send a competent worker in the field as missionary. We wish the co-operation of all societies, thereby strengthening the object in view, and assisting in the much-needed work in this state. Get in line for the winter's work. Write the secretary, Mrs. Carrie H. Mong, 415 S. Franklin street, Muncie, Ind., at once.

F. E. Irvine, secretary of the Minnesota State Spiritualist Association, has changed his address to 904 Hastings avenue, St. Paul, where he can be addressed.

Truth Seeker writes from Wichita, Kans.: "I feel it a duty I owe to the spirit world and also to Mrs. Elizabeth J. Jaquet for the great interest that this worthy and gifted instrument has created in this city. Her lectures are not only inspiring, but decidedly instructive. Her appeals to the people to come into the spiritual ranks are given with so much earnestness, that they then and there begin to study into the philosophy. Mrs. Jaquet is holding an independent meeting, wholly under the direction of her masterful guides, and merely takes up a collection and out of this collection defrays her hall expenses, but she has won the hearts of all by so doing, and not by running a 10-cent-circus-side-show-affair. Again, she practices what she preaches, in her daily walks and talks. On the whole she is just what Wichita Spiritualists need. Long may she live to guide the way-faring traveler after truth, into spiritual paths of peace."

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

GEORGIA GLADYS COOLEY opens her meetings at Grand Boulevard Hall, corner Grand Boulevard and Forty-seventh street, Sunday evening, Oct. 8, at 7:30 o'clock sharp. A fine program will be arranged for the evening, and a hearty invitation is extended to all seekers after truth. Messages will be given at all meetings by Mrs. Cooley and her guides. Don't forget the hour of opening the services—7:30 o'clock sharp. Give this lady a grand reception at her first meeting. She is well worthy of it.

Dr. Peebles is coming to Chicago to speak for the League, Saturday evening, Nov. 4, and he will speak for the Rising Sun Mission, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 5, and in the evening for the Aitken Society, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue.

John Jones writes: "Dr. J. M. Peebles' article in The Progressive Thinker, No. 825, 'War Is Hell,' should be published in pamphlet form, and a copy placed in every family throughout the land."

G. W. Roberts writes from Jacksonville, Fla.: "Mrs. Buchanan works hard to help the cause along. She is a grand medium. Our society is scattered; some are in California, but they take your paper."

D. Feast writes from Baltimore, Md.: "Dr. Peebles has been with us for four weeks and lectured to fair audiences. The First Church will present to the people of our city during the season the best talent available, and hope for good results along all lines. I am sorry that our people do not turn out better. The large class of test mediums and fakes in our midst has much to do with the smallness of our congregation each Sunday."

Maurgerite Mac writes: "On Thursday evening, Mrs. M. A. Burland held her regular monthly social in her parlors. She had a very select gathering. The other psychics present were Mrs. Marion Hunt Davenport and Mrs. Maggie Henry. We had a very enjoyable evening. Violet, Mrs. Burland's little Indian control, was at her best, and gave a message to each one. Then we had ice cream and cake, and an excellent cup of coffee. We hope to attend many more of such sociable gatherings."

Maggie Henry writes: "At (old 77) Spiritual Mission Chapel on Sunday evening, Sept. 24, our speaker, Prof. F. M. Stoller, read a portion of the 7th chapter of St. Matthew for the scripture lesson, beginning with the first verse: Judge not that ye be not judged. After answering all the philosophical questions he answered the personal questions. We had psychometric readings. We had with us our regular medium, Madame Lucile DeLoux. Strangers and investigators welcome at our meetings, which begin promptly at 8 o'clock."

Mrs. Kirchner writes: "At the afternoon services on Sunday, September 24, of the Rising Sun Mission, we had a rare treat. Our brother, Dr. Tisdell, gave a very inspiring lecture. His guide being an ancient Greek, entrances the brother, and gives out spiritual thoughts which are uplifting. We will have him with us now for some time. Brother Thompson gave some grand demonstrations of spirit return, which caused quite a few to think. In the evening, Dr. L. Rowell delivered a discourse which held the attention of the large audience which filled our hall. Mrs. Dr. Caird of Lynn, Mass., and Mrs. Kirchner, gave some demonstrations of spirit return. Our Choir, as usual, rendered some very fine selections. We are pleased to note so many strangers are attending our services, which speaks well of the excellence of our speakers and mediums. We welcome all to our services Sunday afternoons, and evenings, at 8 o'clock, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western ave. Our speaker for Sunday, October 8, will be Mr. H. M. French. Don't forget our Harvest Hop, October 21."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society was entertained on Sept. 24, by Dr. White, followed by Mrs. M. McIntyre, Mrs. Jennie Staner Adams, and Mr. Elmo with messages. Mr. T. D. Jones spoke in regard to Mrs. Dora Kennedy's passing away. The passing out came very sudden and many regret that one who has only lately commenced to give to the public her messages should be called so soon. On October 1, we have Dr. Randall to speak for us. Oct. 8, Mrs. Amelia Marguerite Forwerg will speak. Her subject will be on 'Palmistry,' which all should hear. Our social and dance was well enjoyed by those present. At a subsequent meeting our society elected Mr. Otto E. Kropp to represent us as our delegate to the National Association and Mrs. O. B. Wilson as alternate."

Allen Noxon writes: "Mrs. Alice Gehring and husband who have been holding services in Ohio during the past past month, will be in Chicago for the first two weeks of October. They will be located in Englewood, where they will conduct hall meetings on Sunday evenings, and hold seances on week nights. For place and date of meeting, see later notice. After this engagement they will leave for their home in Denver where they will work in connection with the Psychical Research Society."

Nellie Gouthrop writes: Chas. J. Barnes, the tried and true trumpet medium, has just finished a week's work at Camden, Mich. This makes the third time he has been with us within a year. He is loved more and more each time for his honesty. Every night there was a full house of honest investigators, which made good conditions. Each person received some word of greeting from two to four of their friends. Mr. Squires (a spirit) came nearly every evening, playing a fife; it was as natural as the material. He was known in this section at all public gatherings of soldiers, always having his fife with him. A well known conductor of the Lake Shore road came as a train of cars. Last winter while here, Mr. Barnes told a neighbor where he would find the paper he had been looking for. He saw it clairvoyantly. He said it was in a tin box at a private house. He had left it at the bank in Camden. The two old members of the bank had passed on. Before going he took some papers home, put them in a tin box; among them, through a mistake, was a neighbor's paper. By finding it, it saved him $500. He had inquired at the bank several times but it could not be found. After Mr. Barnes told him where it was, he informed the banker where it was, and sure enough it was there. Charlie is a small man in flesh, but a giant spiritually. Anyone wanting a medium of rare powers can do no better than send for Mr. Barnes, of Warsaw, Ind."

Carrie L. Hatch writes: "The Massachusetts State Association will hold a Mass Meeting in conjunction with the Malden Spiritual Society, on Thursday, Oct. 12. The following talent is expected: President Geo. A. Fuller, Mrs. Carrie F. Loring, Miss Susie C. Clark, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, Mrs. N. J. Willis, Mrs. A. M. Whall, Mr. Jas. S. Scarlett, Mr. Osgood F. Stiles and others. Miss Jennie Milton, pianist. All the friends are cordially invited to be present and help to make this a banner day. It is only a five-cent car ride to this hall, and therefore the place should be crowded. Louise Hall, 138 Pleasant street, Malden, Mass.; time, 2:30 and 7:45 p. m. Supper, 6 p. m. Come and interest yourselves in the work of the state association."

Mrs. Powderly writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union will hold its first meeting of the season, October 15, at the new Grand Army Hall, just north of 63rd street, on Princeton avenue, No. 6236, one block west of Wentworth avenue. The location is all that could be desired, being removed from public trafic. The hall is inspiring in its beauty. All mediums as well as others are welcome. Services every Sunday at 2:30 and 7:30. Ladies' Aid Thursday afternoon of each week. Speakers will be announced in the next issue of The Progressive Thinker."

Alice M. Sexsmith writes: "On Sunday, Sept. 24, at the meeting of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, both afternoon and evening proved very interesting. The afternoon meeting consisted as usual of short talks and messages by different ones. We were glad to have with us our Sister McIntyre, who has just returned to the city after being away on account of her health. She gave some very fine messages as did also the writer. In the evening we were entertained by our Dr. J. W. McFarland, who gave us some fine thoughts for consideration. The messages given by Brother Chas. Thompson and Alice M. Sexsmith seemed to awaken an interest in the hearts of those present. We are sorry to say that our sister, Mrs. Nora Hill, was not able to be with us, as she was confined to her bed through sickness. Don't forget that on Sunday, Oct. 8, John W. Ring of Galveston, Texas, will be our speaker. Don't fail to attend or you will miss a great treat. On Saturday evening, Oct. 14, we will hold in our hall the first of our winter dances. Don't fail to attend. Tickets will be on sale. Everyone welcome. Open door. At O'Donnell's College Building, Paulina street, between Washington Blvd and Park avenue."

CAMP PROGRESS.

Reply to an Outsider's Unjust Criticism.

This association has just closed a successful season. With the exception of one or two unpleasant Sundays, the audience has largely overflowed the seating capacity and packed closely about the speaker's stand, eagerly listening to the beautiful truths given forth by the many grand workers for the cause. We have had so many fine speakers and mediums that it is impossible and impracticable to name them all. We have made a large amount of repairs and improvements, and many more are contemplated for another season.

In the Light of Truth for August 5, an article was published by one who confessed to being an outsider, which is full of errors and mistakes, being evidently picked up from those who knew but little of the work of the association in the past. As my husband (now gone higher) and myself were the founders of the social Sunday gatherings from which the association sprang, and I had the honor of naming it, I think I can write whereof I know. The article speaks of our being content to come out about square at the end of the year. During our fourteen years we have had buildings built, roads made and a large amount of grading done, which has cost about a thousand dollars, all paid for some seven years ago. We have given money to spiritual societies amounting to some hundreds of dollars. As for being jealous, we have ever since we became an organized body been willing to admit any whom we thought were desirable as harmonious workers.

To build these buildings it was necessary for some of the old-time members to dive deeper in their pockets than the present members have kindly done, and it was done just as willingly, I am glad to say.

Useless and expensive attaches are spoken of. I do not know what is meant, as we have never had any salaried or paid officers, and the employes about the restaurant have had more liberal wages than ever in the past. Would it not be well for any outsider to find out the facts in any case before accusing those whom they do not know of jealousy and lack of ambition.

We have paid for all repairs now, and look forward to a successful season in 1906. ELIJA B. MERRILL.

SONGS IN THE DOMAIN OF DREAMS

Do Angels or Spirits Give Their Divine Music to Composers, Authors, Etc., When They Are Asleep?

Many people have dreamed that they heard the most glorious music while they lay asleep, others have seen the angelic hosts singing. Modern spirit research proves that dreams were often not dreams, but realities. My grandmother "dreamed" that her son was sick and dying in England. People laughed away her fears, but the old lady "got it right." Again she dreamed her second son was dying far away from home. Folks tried to laugh it off again, but the old lady "dreamed" it correctly, as future letters proved. The old bible saints often heard angels' both when they were asleep and awake. This phase by modern experts is classified as "clairvoyance."

Some of our spirit mediums have developed this sensitiveness or delicacy of the "hearing organs" to a phenomenal extent. Generally speaking, these "angel voices" are at a superhuman rate of vibration, and therefore are inaudible to common ears. Many people have heard these "angels' songs" when awake, and other modern experts have actually caught them in a phonograph. The evidence is quite scientific and conclusive.

Few scholars care to dispute its accuracy. The old bible records and that of modern psychical researchers are often quite harmonious.

Now, how shall the masses develop their "hearing" to receive these "angel songs" "from dreamland," or the spirit world, by their own organism? Spirits say that people must develop their "psychic," "spiritual," or occult "talents," "gifts," clairaudience, clairvoyance, etc. To do so, they must have pure, clear sensitive, delicate brains. Anything which injures the brain should be avoided, such as tobacco, liquor, beer, etc., meat, etc. "Rum, — and tobacco and meat" have injured the spiritual talents of more people than any other four vices. If people want to hear the angels they must adopt a natural vegetable diet. The ears, nerves, etc., must be clear of "animal atoms" to respond to the higher rate of angelic vibration. If Christ had been soaked in beer, liquor, meat, etc., he never would have been able to perform the "miracles" which occurred in his presence.

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, Oct. 8, 1905, "Charity to All, Malice to None."

Gem of Thought:

Think of the good and you will surely see
Beneath the rubbish of your censure, good;
Hold that somewhere, in the vast eternity,
Shall grow the true and lasting brotherhood,
For every soul is part of that Great Life,
That thinks and moves through Nature everywhere;
And underneath the painful calm and strife,
The soul moves on, to heights that are most fair.

THE PSYCHIC CIRCLE.

Important Communication from Mrs. A. A. Averill.

Dear Sisters and Brothers:—Our circle is growing. Members are being added every day. Names are being received from all over the world, one having arrived recently from far-away Turkey. Requests for thought concentration are so numerous that it would be almost impossible for our kind editor to publish them all.

One sister has a dearly loved boy, who is being led astray through the influence of cheap novels; another, an old lady, wishes that strength may be given her to care for the small child of her daughter who has passed to spirit life; a young couple have two small children whom they desire to bring up with a knowledge of the spiritual philosophy; a brother in Ohio who has been married fifty years, desires that his wife may be brought to receive the truths of Spiritualism, that they may walk the remaining years of their lives hand in hand; and also, that a grandson, who is not walking in the path of goodness, may be led to see the error of his ways, and be started towards right living; a brother in Kansas who is fast losing his hearing, wishes relief; a sister is troubled with what she thinks is an obsessing spirit, and very many have asked for help toward the development of their psychic gifts.

If it were in our power, we would bring every request to the attention of every other member of the circle, but it is impossible. If the requests were sent direct to The Progressive Thinker, many more could be reached.

Accounts of benefits received are also coming in. One very old lady in Vermont, in gratitude for the good she has received from it in causing her to sleep well, and in other ways, has sent us a very nice handkerchief, with the most delicate and beautiful drawn work border, on which she has spent many weeks of labor, which she wishes sold for the expenses of the circle. One sister who has had an almost unbearable mental trouble, has found her sufferings perceptibly lightened since joining the circle and asking the assistance of her spirit friends. Some have received marked help in their spiritual development, while others have seen the beneficial effect upon the lives of loved ones concerning whom they were anxious.

Quite a large number of circles have been formed, sitting at the same time with the larger circle. This is a line of work that can be made of great help, and we urge members to try and induce their friends to form circles and co-operate with us. Please send us word if you are a member of such a circle, with names of the others if they are not already enrolled. One brother has a family circle, himself, wife and six children, even the very smallest being brought under its influence. And so the good work goes on. Please remember that membership is absolutely free, and sit every Friday evening by the time of the place where you live. Send names to

A CONTEMPLATED TRIP.

Moses and Mattie E. Hull Going South and West.

Circumstances over which we have little control seem to have converged to send Mrs. Hull and myself south and west in the very near future. We shall start not far from the first of November, and our route, it is supposed, will be via St. Louis, and the southwest, through Texas to Southern California; thence up the coast via San Francisco and Portland as far as Seattle, and possibly as far as Vancouver and British Columbia, and thence via some of the northern routes to Milwaukee and Whitewater.

We want appointments wherever they can be made along this route. We want to be guaranteed at least our expenses, wherever we may go. Besides this the privilege of advertising the Morris Pratt School and taking subscriptions to aid it in its work.

The principal object of this journey is to acquaint the Spiritualists with whom we come in contact with the fact that they have a school all their own. This school, while it needs their support, can render to its students greater educational advantages than can be obtained elsewhere for a like outlay of money and work.

Spiritualists south and west of Chicago, please do yourselves, the institute and us the favor to afford us the opportunity to do a work in your towns and cities.

As Mrs. Hull and I will fully occupy the time of the meetings with our invocations, songs, poems and discourses, we do not particularly desire that any so-called tests or readings shall follow our services.

Hoping that these conditions are understood we invite correspondence from all who wish such service as will aid them in building up an integral and healthful Spiritualism.

MOSES HULL.

RIGHT AND WRONG.

A Keener Perception of the Same on the Part of Woman.

American men very generally accord womankind all the virtues of the race. They say women are endowed with a keener perception of right and wrong, a quicker intuition of justice, greater regard for truth and call attention to the fact that the larger per cent of high school graduates year after year are girls.

Now these same men are in Congress, State Legislatures and city councils where they can endow all degrees of executive power on women, and why is it that they accord so much ability in theory and grant so little exercise of it in the practical affairs of government? A keener perception of right and wrong brought to bear on questions of corporate as against individual interests would be of great value in many quarters; and a quicker intuition of the justice of the measure would enable legislatures to dispose of bills looking toward humanitarian ends with a saving of time, while a greater regard for truth would materially improve almost any public or private enterprise.

There are, grave questions confronting this generation of men and women who have grown up since the war, requiring high thinking and moral courage to settle; for instance, regulation of public utilities, enforcement of present and passage of better laws relating to rights of children; the problem of converting shiploads of immigrants to our ideal of citizenship; the negro; the treason of Utah—to say nothing of nice points of diplomacy in the relations of foreign countries. Now if our chivalrous brothers think woman so capable and worthy, why do they refuse her assistance? Where is the consistency in attributing ability and deny any play for its exercise? Why not utilize this reserve of moral and intellectual power?

The ordinary, matter-of-fact woman fails to comprehend.

IN THE FIELD.

Notes of Wonewoc and Ottawa Camp-Meetings.

Since the Wonewoc camp-meeting, a report of which has been given in a former issue, the writer has had some very pleasant experiences, meeting old friends, and getting acquainted with some new ones. Three very pleasant days were spent at the Minnesota State Convention in Minneapolis, Sept. 8, 9 and 10. It is always a pleasure to visit the Twin Cities—there are tender memories there for the writer, as it was in St. Paul that he made his first real successes in the work of Spiritualism, and while he had been endowed with mediumship for some years, and had used the same in the cause, it was not until he arrived at St. Paul five years ago that the work took tangible shape of recent years. Consequently it is good to visit among the friends who spoke encouraging words in the time when all were strangers.

You have already had an extensive report of the convention, so it is unnecessary to add to that. I simply wish to say that our veteran worker, Moses Hull, was there and treated the audience to some of the finest thoughts ever uttered from the Spiritualist platform. The vast audience that greeted him on the last evening of the convention, and the rapt attention accorded him, spoke very forcefully of the esteem in which this truly great man is held by those who know him best.

In the election of officers, the convention did the right thing; many tried and true workers were kept in the harness, some new blood was infused into their ranks, and take it all in all, the Minnesota State Association has a good year ahead. Frank Irvine, of St. Paul, in former years very active in the work of the Twin Cities, has again swung into line, and is now the secretary of the State Association. I am greatly mistaken in my estimate of the man, if this fact does not put a good deal of life in the work.

After the Minnesota state convention, I answered the call that came from "Macedonia" and took my way to the Ottawa, Kansas, camp-meeting. Here I found that the elements had tried their best to put the camp out of business, but without success. Despite the high water a goodly number of Truth seekers assembled, and we had one of the most enjoyable camps I have visited this year.

For two days the building in which we were domiciled was entirely surrounded by water, but even this could not dampen the ardor of the Spiritualists and investigators, and many there were who literally "walked the plank" that they might enter the "ark" of truth, and listen to the thoughts and the messages given out. The citizens of Ottawa attended in vast numbers, and the night meetings are events to be remembered.

As you will probably get a detailed report of the meetings, it will not be necessary for me to mention the workers; they all seemed to give quite general satisfaction. As at all camp-meetings there were mediums for different phases of phenomena. I believe these mediums, Mr. Dunakin and Mr. Burroughs were quite well patronized. The writer did not have the privilege of visiting their seances, therefore cannot give a description of their work.

Mrs. Bessie Bellman, of Howard, Kansas, was present for several days and gave some soul-stirring addresses. This little lady will certainly be heard from, for she always "says something" when she talks. We need more Bessie Bellmans in our ranks. Then we had with us that good old-time worker, who is still active in the interest of the good cause, Mrs. A. L. Lull. Though well advanced in years, Mrs. Lull is still young in mind, and gives out thought well calculated to induce thinking. She is good anywhere she is put, either as test medium or speaker. With all due respect to the other mediums the writer thinks Mrs. Lull gave some of the best and most soul-satisfying messages given during the camp.

Another one who did good work was Mrs. Ella Baldwin of Kansas City, Kans. Mrs. Baldwin is deeply versed in metaphysics, and excels in class work. Sincerity and aspiration is very manifest in Mrs. Baldwin's work. She was a very welcome acquisition to the camp. I said I would not mention the workers, but as I have gone so far I may as well say that the others who took part were Max Hoffmann, W. P. Sailing, and Judge Walser and wife of Liberal, Mo., also Rev. Collins of Kentucky. Space will not permit of a more complete report from me.

In closing this account of the Ottawa camp, I would say, Forest Park is one of the prettiest spots in the country. It is the home of the Ottawa Chautauqua Assembly, which has erected a very fine class of buildings, all of which were placed at the disposal of the camp association. This camp is a permanent thing, and bids fair to be one of the camps of the country. Mr. H. W. Henderson is president; to say that he is the right man in the right place is putting it mild. The fact that he has several times succeeded himself is evidence of the esteem in which he is held.

The writer is more than pleased with the treatment accorded him; he leaves Ottawa Camp with many pleasant memories of the days spent there. After visiting several other points in the state among which are Lawrence, Burlington, Wichita and Kansas City, Kansas, as well as Kansas City, Mo., he leaves this section for the winter work in Wisconsin. A strenuous campaign has been outlined in that state, of which there will be more later.

RHEUMATISM

CURED BY ABSORPTION

The Foot Pores Now Made to Yield Up Acid Poisons From the Blood by Remarkable Discovery Which All Can

TRY FREE—PAY WHEN SATISFIED.

Send your name to-day; you will get by return mail, postpaid—FREE To Try—a pair of Magic Foot Drafts, the great Michigan Discovery, which has proven such a remarkably safe and sure cure for rheumatism of all kinds that they are now being extensively imitated abroad as well as in this country. In England infringement against Magic Foot drafts has recently been enjoined by the courts, thus protecting rheumatic sufferers against imitations liable to be injurious.

Magic Foot Drafts are worn inside the stocking (without the least inconvenience), and they cure rheumatism, chronic or acute, in every part of the body, by absorbing uric acid and other impurities from the blood through the large foot pores. Thousands of letters from cured rheumatics—some of them the toughest old chronics in the country, can be seen by anyone calling at our offices. If the Drafts cure all these people, why shouldn't they cure you? Write to-day to Magic Foot Draft Co., X07 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich. You will get the Drafts by return mail. If you are satisfied with the relief they give, send us one dollar. If not, send nothing. You Decide. A valuable new book (in colors) on rheumatism comes free with the Drafts. Send no money, only your name.

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

And lastly, our latest premium book, "Letters From the Spirit World," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea.

All these TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.75 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Dr. Melrose: Q. Although the cause of the pains of woman at child-birth can be anatomically and physiologically accounted for, the question remains: What is the object and the purpose of the excruciating pains which are not necessarily pathological, but normal? All other physiological functions with this one exception are accompanied with some kind of pleasure. Why should woman alone suffer and man be absolutely free from such infliction?

A. This question is put forth as an argument in proof of the "Fall of Man." Eve, the first mother, was tempted and fell; she induced Adam to partake of the forbidden fruit, and for this crime she was condemned to the pains of child-bearing. This is in evidence against her daughters even to the present, for the original sin. The myth was created to account for the facts of observation, and these were taken to prove the myth.

Then the question presupposes that everything was created for "an object and purpose," an idea belonging to the old conception of a personal Creator, directly creating the universe. This idea has given place to evolution, and whatever object there may be, it is for the accomplishment of some overshadowing purpose and minor results come because of the necessities in the constitution of things. The same causes working along the lines of the same laws, diverted by varying conditions, produce the slimy reptile, poison fanged, and the highest type of the human being. The healthy cell, fed by the blood, causes growth of normal tissue. Introduce a cancer-cell, and the same blood multiplies and stimulates the growth of the latter to the destruction of life.

In the meaning conveyed to the human understanding, there is no purpose in the growth or accompanying pain or cancer, neither does travail pains necessarily have an object and purpose. Indirectly they are a warning—as all pain is a danger signal.

Wrought into religious belief and dogmatic theology, the belief died hard. Man wanted to hold it as a menace over woman. He gloried in her suffering as an instance of divine displeasure. He prided himself on his exemption. When ether was applied to relieve labor pains, the clergy arose to a man, in opposition. They preached sermons against it, and bewailed the horrible iniquity of the age which flew in the face of divine providence and sought to avert the just punishment God had ordained for woman's original crime.

It is not true that this exceeding pain is normal and not "pathological." Among savage races, living naturally and healthful, there is no fear of suffering, for it is brief and recovery rapid. Of course the function must be accompanied with a degree of pain but nine-tenths of its danger is the result if the artificial methods of living, of food and dressing, of civilization.

Civilization awakens the mind, which creates a larger brain, protected by a larger skull. The infant of the savage has a larger skull, proportionately, than any other animal. With cultivation the size increases. There is no extra provision made for the birth of this enlarged head. On the contrary the difficulties are increased by abnormal anatomy and reckless destruction of health. The mal-formation has become fixed in a degree, by heredity, and the altogether bearable, and scarcely heeded pains of the free savage have become crucial, and in many cases of extreme danger to life.

When the race forgets this dogma that God in his anger cursed the woman with such punishment; forgets the dogma that made man master and woman a slave, and excused his meanness and cowardly abuse of this slave, the better for human advancement. Had the race advanced in physical perfection, coincidentally with intellectual growth, there would remain no motive for this question—for pains not only this, but all ailments, would have been of the past.

Mrs. McC——.: Q. Twelve years ago I suffered from nervous prostration and have since been tormented with Catholic spirits who want to drive me into that church. I have been nearly crazy. I wrote —— (naming an advertised medium), and he replied that I must every night go into a dark room and say "Depart," forward and back. It made me worse. I wrote to Dr. ——, who treated me for five months. He said I had a very bad case of obsession. My family are opposed. I feel I have a work to do, and I want to do it? What do you advise?

A. It is clear that your "nervous prostration" yet remains, and you are "obsessed" by a disordered nervous system, and instead of brooding over the "Catholic" spirits, with their influences for evil, and planning for "work" in the spiritual field as lecturer or medium, you should take nourishing food, keep in the open air, and engage in some tasks that will take your attention, and prevent the recurrence of your ideas about being "obsessed." If you would reason a moment you would know that your spirit children and friends would not allow you to be approached by others who would make you miserable.

Keep out of dark rooms; especially forbear to repeat a word "forward and back," especially if, as in this case, the backward reflection is "traped," which in your case repeated a hundred times would have any other than a cheering effect. Such advice is cruel in the extreme, as the dark room and senseless repetition can only aggravate your nervous condition. Go to a room flooded with sunlight, and sit in its brightness. Call your scattered thoughts together, concentrate your attention in prayerful communion with your spirit friends, asking for strength, health and self-mastery.

There is no hurry about your work in the world. It will wait until you are ready. It has existed and got on very well before any of the present generation were born, and will move smartly forward after it has passed.

The opposition of your family should be given due regard. The home life is not to be easily sacrificed, for there are few things in earth or heaven that can compensate for its loss. Those dear to you around the home circle see how detrimental to you is your hallucination, and your constant brooding over it, and their opposition is for your good. If you have not the confidence of friends, how can you expect to gain that of strangers?

Henry Leimbacker: Q. Why do not spirits, in their communications take cognizance of communications previously made through the same and other mediums?

A. It is not true that they do not, as this question implies. Instances will recur to every one who has had experience in this matter, where previous communications have been referred to, the same as in incidents in the earthly life. The question then becomes personal; why the questioner's spirit friends have failed in such cognizance? There may be many reasons. Possibly there has been no cause for their making such reference. Have you not had a friend, who came in for an hour, and conversing rapidly all the time, yet making not an allusion to anything they have said before? They were too much interested in the present to think of the past.

Student: Q. I notice you always write Spiritualism with a capital letter, while in many of the secular papers it is not. Which is correct?

A. The names of all religious denominations are written with capitals, but it is noticeable that whenever Spiritualism is mentioned by the religious press it is with a small s. It reminds me of the practice of always writing God with a capital, and the devil with a small d! By what rule this is done is not given in any grammar.

It is an exception to universal practice in using capitals. The free-thought papers give it a large D.

The use of a small s by the secular press, in Spiritualism, show the bigotry of the writers.

Write Spiritualism with a capital, a large capital, for it is the one greatest of all subjects. Always write it with a capital as a matter of distinction.

Harry Brown: Q. I gather from the general teachings of The Progressive Thinker, that all disembodied spirits see and do know the thoughts, words and deeds of their brother spirits toward each other, while they were in the earth life. This means that after we have thrown off the mortal body we at once become cognizant of most secret thoughts, words and deeds of both friends and foes indulged in while here, as well as "seeing face to face" in the next life. Is this correct?

A. That spirits or mortals may read each other's thoughts there must be likeness and sympathy, or they must be attuned in harmony. As this is perfect, is the knowledge of each other's thoughts.

In this life the physical body and its conditions prevent thought transmission in a great measure. The spirit freed from this impediment, transmits and receives thought, but is not without limitations, and is able to set up a barrier against the full recognition of its thoughts by others.

TWILIGHT MUSINGS.

Personal Experiences, Thoughts and Opinions.

To the Editor:—"As I sit in the twilight of the evening musin'," as Samanthe Allen would say, I send my musings far away, for only as they take their flight, are thoughts and feelings brought to light.

I am thinking of the dear unostentatious John Whittier, who said that when doubt like a dove flew over his head, he never allowed it to find lodgment there. But unlike Whittier, my doubts are not easily dispelled; for did I not know that there are trustful souls whose organisms are used to convey intelligence from the beyond, I believe I should remain skeptical. I do not know that it is in order to eulogize people while living, but I sometimes think it is not out of place. I have one in mind who (I am informed) in her early life, like George Eliot, was a devout church member, and like her emerged from the limitations of the church into the broad field of religion of humanity. All of her poetry that I ever read had a tendency in that direction, and that is why I became interested in her. Strange to say that I only hoped that she might have evidence of a future life, when I was unsettled on that question myself.

Then imagine my delight when I learned that she had got the evidence by automatic writing through her own instrumentality; which evidence settled the question with me. Then I longed to know the character or purport of those communications, when she kindly submitted one through the columns of your journal which reads:

"Experience After Death.

"When shortly after the death of an acquaintance whom we had known to be deeply interested in psychical science, as his name was written, we asked, 'Will you tell us what were your individual experiences when you awoke from earth life; what were your emotions?'

Ans. "Crying out with joy when I found my spirit so strongly buoyant, so free of physical hindrance I realized at once that death or freedom from mortal sense imprisonment, was freedom for all that was best in me. But still I longed to be able to shout my joy into the ears of the denser friends still buried in the accursed flesh wherein the grub must change to the spirit with free activities."

I have read this over many times, for it corresponds with an experience that I once had. It seems that I was in a state bordering on a trance condition, and it made a lasting impression, but then I thought that I was still in the body, so it really was no proof of a happy exit. But when I hear an account of one who has passed out, giving the same experience from such good authority as Sara A. Underwood, I think it is proof positive.

While I am interested in this lady I also hold in high esteem her husband, B. F. Underwood, for the valuable expression of profound thought that he contributes to The Progressive Thinker.

And I wish to say of Dr. T. Wilkins, that I am well pleased with his poetry, but think that his "Hello Back" caps all. R. NORTHROP CRANE.

SPIRITUALISM AND THEOSOPHY.

A Medium Points a Lesson From Her Own Experience.

I have just been reviewing Mrs. Annie Besant's article entitled, "Travels in the Spirit Realms," in The Progressive Thinker of August 12, copied from the Inter Ocean, in which she makes a statement proving her ignorance of Spiritualism and its mediums. I quote as follows:

"Observe the difference between astral phenomena and Spiritualism; they are exactly the opposite! In Spiritualism the spirits return to this plane, in the other the astral spirit of the living man or woman goes out of his own free will to meet the spirit that has passed."

Some of the Theosophists, like some of the Christian Scientists, talk as though they had the patent right to the kingdom of heaven and its wisdom. Now any one who has been a medium, I think, can bear me out when I make this statement: Spiritualism long years ago, before I ever heard the term Theosophy or its teachings, unfolded my spirit to the extent where I could travel by my own free will to other planes of consciousness where resided the spirit friends, and teachers, as well as to travel in many new departures of life beyond the realm of the senses, so-called. And Mrs. Besant should know that many mediums (psychics, I suppose I should say) are blessed with the power to go and come at their will, as well as Theosophists, and they did not receive this gift by studying the ancient masters either.

But should our friends return to earth, I can't see why it should be conceded such a disgrace or detriment to either them or ourselves. We used to delight in each other's society when they were here, and since this little mother earth of all the planets in this universe is the select globe upon which to receive all the necessary education and unfoldment by repeated reincarnations as Theosophists teach, I should think then it would be wise for souls in the body and out of the body to keep close in touch with mother earth.

And to go and come in acts of mercy giving lessons to earth's children upon their duties here and words of encouragement to the disheartened and healings to the sick both physically and mentally, to comfort the mourners by giving them the evidence of the continued existence of their loved ones, and the hope of their own continued spiritual awakening by cultivation along these lines, it seems to me is the very quintessence of divinity in mankind, and aids in the unfoldment of the angel after death.

We consider that the people here who have humanity so much at heart that they are willing to sacrifice their social pleasure to go down into the slums and assist the unfortunate to lives of sobriety and purity are indeed, philanthropists, and have the altruistic nature which evolutionists teach is next the angel.

I have attended a good many Theosophical meetings as well as Christian Science and read much of the literature of both, and received much good, but I must truthfully say, all that was consistent in either was familiar to me, the same teachings the spiritual teachers had imparted long before either of these cults were known to me. All that is not consistent with reason, seems, as Dr. Peebles has often said, "Blatherdash"—and that reminds me of the Doctor's splendid and masterly lecture in a late Progressive Thinker. To my mind it was one of the grandest contributions it has been my good fortune to read in a long time, and I only wish that the Doctor would find it advisable to have it published in pamphlet form for the purpose of missionary work among societies and workers, to scatter broadcast, as there are scores of orthodox ministers who should be remembered with a copy and reminded of the "Prince of Peace" instead of Jehovah, whose character, I am sorry to say, was to inspire most of them in their dissertations upon war.

And just here I wish to mention a slimy little sheet which has fallen into my hands of late, entitled "The Expositor," and it seems to me that is a mighty poor way to build one's self up and expect to be supported or elected to any office of public trust to indulge in a sly partnership to cast odium upon others.

Whatever Moses Hull's opinions are, whether we agree with him or not, we must admit that he is honest in giving them expression. Perhaps it would have been wiser for him if he had spoken and written a little more conservative, but since he is not politic in his nature, we can not help acknowledging his integrity to truth as it appeals to him. I believe, however, our grand Spiritualistic movement has much good material for official directorship and that its present officers have done well, and my faith rests in the N. S. A. as the great head of the body universal in regard to the movement and I believe in its future unfoldment.

I am an optimist, I confess, and believe in the cause, and that by repeated efforts of any of its votaries they become more competent to carry on their work from the N. S. A. to the state officers and the M. P. Institute. May they live long and prosper is my wish to each and all, with loving greetings. CATHARINE McFARLIN.

SUMMER RAIN.

The flower leaves were vibrant with rapture,
With the raindrops that came with the breeze,
And the day weary with pleasure and laughter
Fell asleep in the lap of the trees.

The murmuring brooklets were a-quiver,
Responsive to the cloud-laden sky,
And from valley, woodland and river
Was borne a soft, restful sigh.

The flowers that had drooped in the sunlight,
With pale lips parched and dry,
Shone star-eyed with a gladsome delight
As the cooling rain held sway.

And a fragrance like the incense of heaven,
Spread over the languishing earth,
For a new life of joy had been given,
And buds had sprung into birth.

There is healing when life's sorrows are nigh,
When our heart longs for the rain,
And we look for God's helpers on high,
And list to our soul's sweet refrain.

And we thank the good angel givers,
For the love implanted within,
For the songs of the brooklets and rivers,
In Nature all souls are akin.

For the drought o'er the landscape and hedges,
For the shadow, the sunlight and wind,
For the love that strengthens our pledges,
For the good we can do mankind.

LIGHT AT EVENTIDE.

"There Shall Be Light at Eventide."

Standing in a large bay-window of a substantial residence in the Capitol City of the splendid state of Minnesota, were two young people looking out at the coral-red glow of a fading winter sunset.

"Billy," said the elder of the two, "if those far-off hills away over on the other side of the river, where the sunbeams linger latest, were the 'Hills of Paradise,' where care is but a phantom, and it required a ten years' search to reach them, what age and class of people do you think would be found on the various paths leading to them?"

Billy looked over to those far-away hills, listened a moment to the night wind shrillingly heralding the coming cold, and then replied:

"Well, I suppose it would be the 'lean-and-slippered-age' people, who found life a failure and consequently a burden, many of them too old to expect ten years more, but I imagine they would be the most eager to start on such a long journey."

"Oh, that is because you are only twenty-two, Billy, and think people much older ought not to anticipate walking for a decade even to reach 'The Hills of Paradise.'"

"No doubt you think fifty a prodigious age, unmindful of the fact that the desire for happiness is the same in all ages, because the heart never grows old."

"Well, Miss Peripatetic, what age and class of people do you think would be found on this journey after light at eventide?' for this is what those sun-tipped hills seem to presage, at the close of the day."

"I believe, Billy, we would find travelers of every age and class, beginning possibly with your 'lean-and-slippered-age' people, weary with ceaseless toil and heart-sick with hope deferred; to such 'The Hills of Paradise' must mean rest, refuge, heaven, would they not, Billy?"

The sweet, grave aspect of the face raised to his was such a study the young man forgot to answer.

"Then," resumed the girl, "comes the broken-hearted class by whose side sorrow ever sits waiting to claim her heritage. I think, Billy, there would be a great many of this class—mostly women, frail by nature, yet from whom life exacts so much; they give their heart's holy trust and in many instances, meet with deception and heartaches."

"Oh, come, now," cried Billy, "whither are we drifting? You say that, just because you are a woman—what do you know about such things, I would like to know? Heartaches—you! Ha! ha!"

The declining sun made glorious the western sky and without removing her eyes from the mountains of gold in the distance, his companion continued:

"Listen, Billy, there is another class—there is another class to be found on that long journey—the children!"

"Children!" exclaimed Billy, "pray why should we find the children there?"

"Ah," returned the young girl, softly, "the dear little children have a mission there as elsewhere. Let me explain. These children would range from ten to fourteen years of age, and the majority of the little travelers boys, for they have real griefs and heartaches, too, for it seems the world begins to buffet them at a very early age; they are poked and punched, kicked and slapped, and laughed at, mostly by their own sex, sometimes by heartless parents or guardians. Oh, you need not laugh; I've seen it and you know it, until finally they learn to look upon it as the necessary thing and become hardened by the time they are called to fill higher stations in life. My! what a sorry time some of these little fellows have when they are sent out to learn a trade, and at a time when life should be happy and gay they are placed shoulder to shoulder with men careless of their language, and very often called upon to do work requiring a man's strength."

"But this applies equally to girls; you seem to have forgotten the girls without homes, orphans, cold and hungry," said Billy, with a burst of feeling that would have shamed even a Don Quixote.

"No, Billy, not forgotten. You have not given me time to reach them."

"Well, Miss Peripatetic, let us call a halt on the travelers and imagine them well advanced on their journey towards 'The Hills of Paradise'; what hardships are they most likely to encounter along the way?"

"That is a hard question, Billy, for what would be a hardship to one class would be easily passed by the other. Your 'lean-and-slippered-age' people, I should imagine, would be fitted with a passionate yearning for a brighter spot, and would travel hopefully even if weary; the thought of the rest and peace at the end of the journey should, indeed, make them joyous."

"And the broken-hearted ones?" There was a mischievous twinkle in Billy's bright eyes as he said this.

"This class cares not for hardships. They move slowly yet are capable of better speed. They, oh, they are broken-hearted because the spiritual in them was stronger than the material; they have suffered and are hopeless; being mostly women, they travel mechanically, and it is this class the children are going to benefit."

"Pray explain."

"Well, they are amazed to find little children so weary of life as to strive to enter the paths to a distant country, since the country they are leaving can grow no thorns for them at such an age. Little boys—"

"And girls, too," interposed Billy.

"And girls, too," replied the girl smilingly, transferring her gaze to his face, "become objects of interest to these men and women who have played to the finish the game called "hearts" and lost. Here surely is something to inquire into, even with streaming eyes and breaking hearts, for evidently they, too, in some vague sort of way, have had to breast the blows of evil circumstances. Feeling is awakened and despair vanishes, and in their efforts to cheer them on their way they realize these little children with their winsome pleading shadow forth God's rainbow of love to breaking hearts. Thus you see, Billy, it is only those who live within themselves who have time to grow old, crabbed and sarcastic."

"Right!" cried Billy, "and now that the curtains of night are pinned back by the stars, if you will look my way, you, too, (without being broken-hearted) will see a little 'Light at eventide.'"

"I looked, and over my right shoulder saw the first gleam of the bright new moon."

"Wish," he cried; we both wished, and to-day the wish came true.

AN EXPLANATION.

W. Yates on Madison Spiritualism.

In No. 827 of The Progressive Thinker, Mr. Yates deplores the absence of Spiritualist meetings and mediums in Madison, Wisconsin. Also that one Spiritualist meeting here, which he attended, was disappointing.

The meeting to which he refers was inaugurated by the Wisconsin Spiritualist Association. As it was a hasty and unexpected affair with the association, Madison had not been notified. Rev. Nellie K. Baker, secretary, residing at Portage, was appointed the business agent to come here two days in advance to thoroughly advertise and bill the meeting. She arrived promptly. She found a letter saying a guest at her house was dangerously ill and to come home immediately if possible. She left here at once, expecting to return by next train. The case was so much worse than supposed that she could not leave it. And so the meeting was not advertised. It was to continue through three days and evenings. Will J. Erwood and Moses Hull were to be the principal speakers, and a Mr. Miller the platform test medium. Mr. Hull was called unexpectedly away to attend court, and Mr. Erwood found less numbers in the hall than could be counted on the fingers of one hand. It so surprised him that he looked more like a scared yellow fever patient. His usual most excellent inspiration took a temporary vacation. Mr. Hull got there the last day. Despite the dismal opening circumstance, the closing found the meeting grown to a good house.

Several have told me later that they hoped the state association would return, that they wanted to hear it. Bad as were the conditions, the meeting left a good impression. It will come again and next time there will be no complaint of the success.

I hope this explanation will cheer up Mr. Yates and give strength to his patience. All of the other association meetings in the state, so far as I have learned, have been successful.

There are a great many Spiritualists in Madison, of a very excellent class. They have not been fortunate in having good test mediums, and enthusiastic public leaders. It is hoped these will yet be supplied. There have been meetings here in the past. The whole subject was so new and crude they failed of permanent shaping. Many other places besides Madison have suffered likewise. Test mediums have been developed here, and have been attracted elsewhere. Traveling test mediums have come here and done great good.

There is another class of semi-Spiritualists in Madison. They have seen and heard enough to believe there is something in it, and are hungry for more proof. There is excellent Spiritualist soil here. There are those here who have passed through the trying days, never more to return. All of the Spiritualists here would much rather attend a good Sunday Spiritualist meeting than any other kind.

The camp-meetings are doing splendid work. They attract the best mediums and speakers, thus largely recruiting the ranks.

I am acquainted with W. Yates. He is a genial and most loyal Spiritualist, and brimming with the milk of human kindness. The trouble is he fattened so long on the inspiration of the many Chicago Spiritualist Sunday meetings, that he now feels starved; and the starvation doesn't produce a delectable sensation. E. W. BALDWIN.

WAITING.

Dear one, when I left thee in sorrow,
And the last parting words had been said,
And I knew that the coming to-morrow
Would find me alone with my dead,
In the home where all ties are now broken,
With no welcoming step on the stair;
Then I fancied I heard these words spoken
"There is some one just waiting—up there!"

Tho' I wait all in vain for a footfall,
And I list for the call of my name,
And I miss a dear voice every nightfall,
In the home that can ne'er be the same;
When I ponder on days of our roaming,
And I think of the pleasures that were,
Then I hear in the hush of the gloaming;
"There is some one just waiting—up there!"

So again I take up my life's burden,
And will cheerfully wait for the dawn;
For I know that each heart heavy-laden,
Will grow light when earth's sorrows are gone,
And tho' clouds of adversity lower,
And misfortunes seem borne on the air,
Let us take these sweet words as our dower:
"There is some one just waiting—up there!"

Instantly Converted by a Sudden Flash of Lightning.

I would kindly ask you to print in your paper the following manifestations that we had in our home, August 6, 1905. The medium, Mrs. Fannie Conrad of Louisville, Ky., paid us a friendly visit and having had a good social time during the day a home seance circle was suggested. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Paul Rinke and three children, aged 2, 4 and 7, and Mrs. F. Jennerich, aunt of Mr. Paul Rinke, and the medium and her daughter, Genevena Conrad. After the opening of the circle by the medium's control, Professor Dotson, said the trumpet used had something wrong with it, and told me to get a pilot's trumpet, used by river men, which weighed about two pounds, and which seemed utterly too heavy for spiritual force to handle, and told me to bring it from an adjoining room. After receiving beautiful messages from our spirit friends, the medium's husband took the trumpet and gave us a fine lecture on Spiritualism. Just then a flash of lightning came, for there was a rain and thunderstorm raging. This flash illuminated the room as bright as day for about sixty seconds; there could plainly be seen the materialized form of Mr. Conrad standing behind the medium's chair, holding the large trumpet over her head, his strength not giving out during the flash of lightning. That convinced me and my aunt, Mrs. F. Jennerich as firm believers in Spiritualism, and are becoming workers in the light of truth. Thank God for his conversions that were made by his light.

Thomas Paine.

"THOMAS PAINE.—PRESENTED TO THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER 13, 1876, BY THE LIBERALS OF AMERICA." ADDED TO THIS WAS THE FURTHER INSCRIPTION, "BUT REJECTED BY SELECT COUNCIL." ALL THIS WAS POLISHED OFF, AND THE INSCRIPTION NOW STANDS AS IT DID ORIGINALLY, WITH THE EXCEPTION OF THE WORD "LIBERALS," WHICH THE BOARD WANTED CHANGED TO "PATRIOTS."

Fight for the Bust of Thomas Paine Won by a Woman, Mrs. Kilgore, of Philadelphia, an Attorney—End of a Thirty Year Contest to Have Piece of Sculpture Representing "Author-Hero of the Revolution" Put in Independence Hall.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Thomas Paine, whose writings did so much for the cause of liberty, probably rests easier in his grave now that the fight of thirty years to secure a place in Independence Hall for his bust was won and the memorial reposes in a prominent place in the building. The credit belongs to Mrs Carrie Kilgore, a well-known attorney of this city. Ever since the bust was presented to the city in 1876, it has been in Mrs. Kilgore's custody.

The fund for the purchase of the bust was started by the Boston Index, a periodical edited by F. E. Abbott and later by B. F. Underwood and devoted to free religion. Among its contributors were Edward Everett Hale, O. B. Frothingham, Robert Collier, George W. Julian and many other citizens of equal intellect and patriotism.

Notwithstanding the distinguished persons interested in the memorial, a select council, which was called to consider the gift, rejected it absolutely, and would give it no place. Neither would Memorial Hall or the Pennsylvania Academy of the fine arts accept it, even for temporary exhibition, and assume responsibility for its safe keeping. Mrs. Kilgore, who was treasurer for the fund, assumed the custody of the bust, and has tried vainly at intervals to put the matter before the proper authorities and have the bust given the consideration that she considered was its due.

Early this spring Mrs. Kilgore determined to make another effort to have the bust placed. She wrote to the board which has charge of collecting relics for Independence Hall, reviewing the history of the bust. She said that friends had urged that she should present the bust to the congressional library in Washington, but that she considered it would reflect on Philadelphians as narrow-minded and bigoted when the only reason the Paine bust was excluded from Independence Hall years ago was on the plea that he had no religion, whereas it is generally conceded that his religion was identical with that of Franklin and Jefferson.

Original Inscription Altered.

After deliberation the board decided to accept the bust, provided the inscription was changed. This was done, and the statue is now in Independence Hall. The original inscription read:

"Thomas Paine. Presented to the city of Philadelphia October 13, 1876, by the liberals of America." Added to this was the further inscription, "But rejected by select council." All this was polished off, and the inscription now stands as it did originally, with the exception of the word "Liberals," which the board wanted changed to "Patriots."

Sydney H. Morse of Boston, was sculptor of the bust, which cost $1,200. It is of white marble, mounted on a shaft of granite, with a surbase of Tennessee marble.

THE MOTE AND THE BEAM.

The Interesting Part They Play in the Lives of Two Prominent Men, John Davison Rockefeller, the Richest Man in the World, and William Jennings Bryan, the Great Politician, and Twice a Candidate for the Presidency—The Mote and the Beam Analyzed by the New York Sun.

It is recorded in the Gospels that in the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus used this language, and we quote it as particularly applicable to a case which we shall proceed to relate:

"Judge not, that ye be not judged; for with what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again.

"And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye.

"Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote of thy brother's eye."

The mote in the brother's eye which Christian brethren are now undertaking to pull out is in the eye of Brother John Davison Rockefeller. This brother is pre-eminently a Christian, in a conventional sense at least. He is a thorough-going Baptist, and very few members of that denomination of Christians, the second largest among the Protestant churches of this country, are so punctiliously faithful as he to the religious observances of his cult. He is a superintendent of a Sunday-school and is diligent in the performances of the duties of the place. He is a regular attendant at prayer meetings at a time when such fidelity has fallen greatly into desuetude, and his voice is often raised in supplication at the now thinly attended gatherings. He has given more money for the propagation of the form of Christianity which he believes to be the truest than is contributed by any other Christian of his time.

Another Christian, though of a different religious denomination, is Brother William Jennings Bryan. Brother Bryan, thinking that he sees a mote in the eye of Brother Rockefeller, has assumed to himself the duty of pulling it out. Brother Rockefeller, he says, "regards himself as a pious man; in fact, he is quite punctilious in attending upon the ordinary means of grace; yet his life record shows extraordinary moral obliquity."

How? In this way, says Brother Bryan:

"He has so long accustomed himself to putting money-making above ethical considerations that he can bankrupt a competitor through the rebate system, bribe a college with a donation or evade a court summons with equal complacency."

Now, in what respect are the methods in business pursued by Brother Rockefeller different in principle from those on which business generally is conducted, from those pursued by Brother Bryan, for instance? Brother Bryan has made a considerable fortune since he first became politically prominent in 1896. As compared with Brother Rockefeller's fortune it is trifling in amount, but as compared with the average possessions of Americans it is great. Brother Bryan could not have accumulated this fortune, great or small, any more than Brother Rockefeller could have gathered his vast possessions, if he had obeyed the principles laid down by Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount, in which is summed up the Christian theory of the conduct of life—for example:

"Resist not evil; but whoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also.

"Give to him that asketh thee and from him that would borrow of thee turn thou not away.

"If any man will sue thee at the law and take thy coat, let him have thy cloak also.

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal.

"Take therefore no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

These were not esoteric instructions and commands. They were given by Jesus to the "multitudes." They embody the law of Christianity.

Are they obeyed by Brother Bryan any more than by Brother Rockefeller? Are they obeyed by the civilization of Christendom and could the structure of that civilization as it is stand if they should be obeyed by it?

That civilization, however, has established certain moral laws of its own and has expressed them in statute law. Has Brother Rockefeller made himself more amenable than Brother Bryan to penalty because of violation of that statute law in the conduct of his life and in the gathering of his fortune?

In what respect are the methods by which Brother Rockefeller has accumulated his many millions different from those of Brother Bryan in gathering his thousands? Neither of them is in prison, and the assumption is that neither is guilty of any offense recognized by the statute law as immoral. That Brother Rockefeller has more millions than Brother Bryan has thousands does not affect the principle.

The truth is that the methods of money-making pursued by Brother Rockefeller are not different in essential morals from those of business men generally, whether these are successful or unsuccessful in the chase. They engage in a competition which does violence to the principles of Christianity as laid down in the Sermon on the Mount. If Brother Rockefeller's "life record shows extraordinary moral obliquity," as Brother Bryan asserts, the whole system of trade and business of Christendom is of like obliquity.

We do not offer any defense of Brother Rockefeller. We simply point out that in essence his methods are general and not peculiar—that there is no "extraordinary obliquity" in them. Read the testimony in the life insurance investigation now going on; analyze your own methods and motives in money-making.

As to the priestly organization, the practical effect of the Christian organization, "the church," has always been averse to morality, and is now.—William Kingdon Clifford.

Man is not born to solve the problem of the universe, but to find out what he has to do; and to restrain himself within the limits of his comprehension.—Goethe.

Consciousness Analyzed.

A Study of the Consciousness of the Unconscious.

Consciousness, or, to coin a more English word, "awareness," is the most important of all mental phenomena, [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune] inasmuch as it is the first manifested symptom of life and its loss the recognized attendant of death; yet it has, till now, defied all the researches of the physiologist. Its external organs are, it is true, easy to be perceived. We now know, though dimly, how the sensory nerves, through which alone we receive impressions from the external world, communicate their views, with a speed comparable to, but inferior to, that of light or electricity, in some cases directly, in others through the spinal cord to the brain, where they arouse and stir into activity the neurones or pyramidal cells situate within the cortex of its gray matter. But beyond this we cannot go.

What physiology can do for us, however, psychology has attempted, and the experiments made by Dr. Pierre Janet, Charcot's no less eminent successor at the Salpetiere, have shown that in certain abnormal cases every portion of the brain is not equally conscious at the same time. With patients attacked by catalepsy he has shown that the consciousness of the individual breaks up into at least two parts, of which one part remains active, while the other sinks into abeyance. Thus, a cataleptic's arm or leg, when once placed in any position by external means, will remain so fixed during the remainder of the attack, without the patient being conscious of the fatigue thereby caused to the muscles or to the force of gravitation compelling it to take another pose. Yet this is not due to any unnatural rigidity or spasm of the muscles. On the contrary, the limb in question remains perfectly plastic, and can be made to change from one position to another at the will of the observer. Hence, he argues, the only thing which is missing from the brain of the patient is the "awareness" of what is taking place, and it is therefore in the position of a telegraph receiving station from which, though messages are sent to it, the operator is absent. Similar phenomena occur with patients attacked by diseases less rare than catalepsy, such as epilepsy, hysteria, and somnambulism. Perhaps the most cruel of these cases are those of local anaesthesia, where the hysteric during the attack does not feel pain if pricked or burned in one particular part of the body, although remaining sensitive enough in all the rest.

Clearly, argues Dr. Janet, in these cases the consciousness of the patient has become split up, one part being alive, while the remainder is in appearance dead. Yet it is not dead in reality. One knows by other tests that the part supposed to be insensitive is, in fact, telegraphing its sensations to the brain just as much as the other. But the central receiving station has now become not one, but two.

These, it may be said, are cases of disease, but things happen every day to the most normal of us that can be explained by the same theory. How often do we walk along the street thinking, as we say, "of something else," with one part of our consciousness in evident abeyance? Friends may pass us without our recognizing them, incidents in the ordinary life of the streets take place around us without our being aware of them; but our whole consciousness is not asleep. Our legs continue to move us in the direction we have fixed for them, the right corners are turned, and our eyes, the guardians of the body, remain on the watch to warn us of approaching danger in the shape of collisions, which we avoid, as we say mechanically. Nor does the case of normal sleep differ, save in degree. Although blind and deaf to ordinary sights and sounds, although a well known voice may speak near us in hushed tones without our awaking, and regular and expected movements, such as those caused by the motion of a tram or ship, seem to have rather a lulling effect on us than otherwise—let a sudden and unexpected sound strike our ears, or a hand be abruptly laid upon us, and how swiftly the whole ego becomes aware of it, and leaps back into full life with the whole of its consciousness regained. Some part of the consciousness has really been on the watch all the time.

From these facts Dr. J. Grasset has constructed a theory of the consciousness which at least demands attention. He holds that besides the full or upper, consciousness which we all know, and which inspires what we may call our reasoned movements, man possesses a lower or more sensual psychic center, which is, according to him, independent of the other. This, which he calls the "polygon," from the fact that the different centers of bodily sensation in the brain seem to form a many angled figure, is charged with the supervision of the functions which we call instinctive, as also of those the daily exercise of which has become familiar to us by use. Among these he would include the passions and the emotions which we share with the lower animals, such as, for instance, the unreasoning fear, anger, and the like displayed by crowds.

Not the least valuable point of Dr. Janet's theory is that it explains in great measure the important part played in our daily lives by this division of the consciousness. Whatever view we may take of the physical machinery of thought, there can be no doubt that its long and uninterrupted exercise puts a vast strain upon the powers of the body, and leads to the expenditure of what we call nervous force. Now, later researches all indicate that while the energy of the muscles is really increased by constant use, and is in effect inexhaustible, this does not hold good for nervous force, which, once expended, can only be renewed by long continued rest, and even then by means which we cannot accurately trace. But nearly all actions of mind or body tend, when constantly repeated, to become, as it were, mechanical, or to pass, in Dr. Janet's language, from the control of the upper to that of the lower consciousness. If we compare, for instance, the laborious reasoning by which a child succeeds in casting up a long column of figures with the machine-like ease that enables a bank clerk to go through his ledger, with, perhaps, his mind at the same time occupied with his own thoughts, we see that this must be the case. But the greatest blessing conferred on us by the possession of two states instead of only one state of consciousness is that of sleep, whereby, while the body, instead of being "left naked to its enemies," retains enough consciousness for its own protection, the higher functions of the brain obtain the rest which alone enables them to gain fresh strength for the renewal of the struggle with the coming day.

JOHN A. HOWLAND.

LIFE IS WHAT YOU MAKE IT.

To the preacher life's a sermon,
To the joker it's a jest;
To the miser life is money,
To the loafer life is rest.

To the lawyer life's a trial,
To the poet life's a song;
To the doctor life's a patient
That needs treatment right along.

To the soldier life's a battle,
To the teacher life's a school;
Life's a "good thing" to the grafter,
It's a failure to the fool.

To the man upon the engine
Life's a long and heavy grade;
It's a gamble to the gambler,
To the merchant life is trade.

Life's a picture to the artist,
To the rascal life's a fraud;
Life perhaps is but a burden
To the man beneath the hod.

Life is lovely to the lover,
To the player life is play;
Life may be a load of trouble
To the man upon the dray.

Life is but a long vacation
To the man who loves his work;
Life's an everlasting effort
To shun duty to the shirk.

To the heaven blest romancer
Life's a story ever new;
Life is what we try to make it—
Brother, what is life to you?

—S. E. Kiser.

SELF-GOVERNMENT.

As Maintained in the Public Schools, With Excellent Results.

Organized self-government of children by children for children, is in successful operation in many of the schools of New York, Philadelphia, and other localities. It ought to be introduced everywhere, for it has solved the problem of municipal politics, and has vindicated the wisdom of representative government, irrespective of sex. Like the system of "juvenile courts," as a substitute for ordinary police supervision, it has proved its superior efficiency, and has come to stay.

The first trial of the new system was made in a disorderly school of more than 2,000 pupils in one of the suburbs of New York. The whole discipline of the school was placed in the hands of the children themselves. They elect a mayor and council. Their teachers are present at the meetings of the council, and retain ultimate authority, but rarely exercise it. Formerly the constant presence of policemen was required on the playgrounds. Within a week, with the right and responsibility of governing themselves, the school became orderly and law-abiding.

In these miniature republics of boys and girls, governing themselves and each other by universal suffrage, holding their own courts, making and enforcing their own laws, no special legislative or private interest has any chance. There is no graft, no boodle, no collusion between their police and wrong-doers.

President Roosevelt has commended the teaching of civics by this admirable plan. Many eminent educators give it their enthusiastic approval. But if children, without distinction of sex, have thus demonstrated their ability to carry on government, how long will it be before the same principle will be applied to all citizens, men and women, with similar beneficent results?—Henry B. Blackwell in Woman's Journal.

$300,000 IN THE BALANCE.

Spiritualists May Lose a Big Bequest.

Bloomington, Ill.—Spiritualists the world over who have been interested in the remarkable will of J. T. Crumbaugh the wealthy banker of this county, who left his estate of nearly $300,000 to the cause of Spiritualism, will be disappointed in learning that this sum may be lost, because of a decision of relatives to contest.

Mr. Crumbaugh died last April and there was great surprise when it was learned that his property had been left to the Spiritualistic cult with instructions to erect a magnificent church in his home city of Leroy and also a free public library in the same place. The remainder of the estate was to be used for instruction in the belief.

With the use of this large sum the followers of Spiritualism anticipated a boom in that belief and there was rejoicing wherever the facts became known. Mr. Crumbaugh became a believer in Spiritualism several years prior to his death and was most enthusiastic.

Say Spirits Instructed Him.

It was declared by followers of the cult that he had received instructions to so dispose of his estate from spirits with whom he was in communication prior to his death. His widow, who was left but a small portion of the estate, freely renounced her dower interest and entered as heartily into the proposed disposition of the property as had her husband. Now it has just developed a number of relatives who are entitled to a share in the property are disposed to dispute the will, claiming that Mr. Crumbaugh was not mentally competent when the will was drawn.—Moline Dispatch.

CATHOLICISM AND PERSECUTION.

Some Pertinent Illustrations in Reference to the Same in the New York Sun.

"A Catholic Priest" is perfectly justified in saying that the motive of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew was political rather than religious, though religion was the basis of the parties. But history will not bear him out if he contends that Rome was clear of the business. Te Deum was sung in St. Peter's; a triumphal medal was struck; a triumphal picture was painted on the wall of the Vatican; a triumphal oration was composed by the papal orator, who said that on the night of the massacre the stars had shone with unwonted brilliancy and the Seine had rolled an ampler tide that it might cast forth the foul carcasses into the sea.

It is unfortunately true that the habit of persecution was transmitted by the Church of the Middle Ages and the Inquisition to Protestantism, and especially to the State Churches. But it presently died out, and Protestantism now heartily renounces it and thinks with shame of the burning of Servetus.

However, I do not want to bandy accusations and reproaches. We welcome a sign of grace when a representative of the Church of Innocent III., of Torquemada, of Philip II., of Alva, of Louis XIV. and his Dragonades, of the Jesuit, of the Syllabus, shows that he is ashamed of persecution.

GOLDWIN SMITH.

Thomas Paine.

"THOMAS PAINE.—PRESENTED TO THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER 13, 1876, BY THE LIBERALS OF AMERICA." ADDED TO THIS WAS THE FURTHER INSCRIPTION, "BUT REJECTED BY SELECT COUNCIL." ALL THIS WAS POLISHED OFF, AND THE INSCRIPTION NOW STANDS AS IT DID ORIGINALLY, WITH THE EXCEPTION OF THE WORD "LIBERALS," WHICH THE BOARD WANTED CHANGED TO "PATRIOTS."

Fight for the Bust of Thomas Paine Won by a Woman, Mrs. Kilgore, of Philadelphia, an Attorney—End of a Thirty Year Contest to Have Piece of Sculpture Representing "Author-Hero of the Revolution" Put in Independence Hall.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Thomas Paine, whose writings did so much for the cause of liberty, probably rests easier in his grave now that the fight of thirty years to secure a place in Independence Hall for his bust was won and the memorial reposes in a prominent place in the building. The credit belongs to Mrs Carrie Kilgore, a well-known attorney of this city. Ever since the bust was presented to the city in 1876, it has been in Mrs. Kilgore's custody.

The fund for the purchase of the bust was started by the Boston Index, a periodical edited by F. E. Abbott and later by B. F. Underwood and devoted to free religion. Among its contributors were Edward Everett Hale, O. B. Frothingham, Robert Collier, George W. Julian and many other citizens of equal intellect and patriotism.

Notwithstanding the distinguished persons interested in the memorial, a select council, which was called to consider the gift, rejected it absolutely, and would give it no place. Neither would Memorial Hall or the Pennsylvania Academy of the fine arts accept it, even for temporary exhibition, and assume responsibility for its safe keeping. Mrs. Kilgore, who was treasurer for the fund, assumed the custody of the bust, and has tried vainly at intervals to put the matter before the proper authorities and have the bust given the consideration that she considered was its due.

Early this spring Mrs. Kilgore determined to make another effort to have the bust placed. She wrote to the board which has charge of collecting relics for Independence Hall, reviewing the history of the bust. She said that friends had urged that she should present the bust to the congressional library in Washington, but that she considered it would reflect on Philadelphians as narrow-minded and bigoted when the only reason the Paine bust was excluded from Independence Hall years ago was on the plea that he had no religion, whereas it is generally conceded that his religion was identical with that of Franklin and Jefferson.

Original Inscription Altered.

After deliberation the board decided to accept the bust, provided the inscription was changed. This was done, and the statue is now in Independence Hall. The original inscription read:

"Thomas Paine. Presented to the city of Philadelphia October 13, 1876, by the liberals of America." Added to this was the further inscription, "But rejected by select council." All this was polished off, and the inscription now stands as it did originally, with the exception of the word "Liberals," which the board wanted changed to "Patriots."

Sydney H. Morse of Boston, was sculptor of the bust, which cost $1,200. It is of white marble, mounted on a shaft of granite, with a surbase of Tennessee marble.

THE MOTE AND THE BEAM.

The Interesting Part They Play in the Lives of Two Prominent Men, John Davison Rockefeller, the Richest Man in the World, and William Jennings Bryan, the Great Politician, and Twice a Candidate for the Presidency—The Mote and the Beam Analyzed by the New York Sun.

It is recorded in the Gospels that in the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus used this language, and we quote it as particularly applicable to a case which we shall proceed to relate:

"Judge not, that ye be not judged; for with what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again.

"And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye.

"Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote of thy brother's eye."

The mote in the brother's eye which Christian brethren are now undertaking to pull out is in the eye of Brother John Davison Rockefeller. This brother is pre-eminently a Christian, in a conventional sense at least. He is a thorough-going Baptist, and very few members of that denomination of Christians, the second largest among the Protestant churches of this country, are so punctiliously faithful as he to the religious observances of his cult. He is a superintendent of a Sunday-school and is diligent in the performances of the duties of the place. He is a regular attendant at prayer meetings at a time when such fidelity has fallen greatly into desuetude, and his voice is often raised in supplication at the now thinly attended gatherings. He has given more money for the propagation of the form of Christianity which he believes to be the truest than is contributed by any other Christian of his time.

Another Christian, though of a different religious denomination, is Brother William Jennings Bryan. Brother Bryan, thinking that he sees a mote in the eye of Brother Rockefeller, has assumed to himself the duty of pulling it out. Brother Rockefeller, he says, "regards himself as a pious man; in fact, he is quite punctilious in attending upon the ordinary means of grace; yet his life record shows extraordinary moral obliquity."

How? In this way, says Brother Bryan:

"He has so long accustomed himself to putting money-making above ethical considerations that he can bankrupt a competitor through the rebate system, bribe a college with a donation or evade a court summons with equal complacency."

Now, in what respect are the methods in business pursued by Brother Rockefeller different in principle from those on which business generally is conducted, from those pursued by Brother Bryan, for instance? Brother Bryan has made a considerable fortune since he first became politically prominent in 1896. As compared with Brother Rockefeller's fortune it is trifling in amount, but as compared with the average possessions of Americans it is great. Brother Bryan could not have accumulated this fortune, great or small, any more than Brother Rockefeller could have gathered his vast possessions, if he had obeyed the principles laid down by Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount, in which is summed up the Christian theory of the conduct of life—for example:

"Resist not evil; but whoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also.

"Give to him that asketh thee and from him that would borrow of thee turn thou not away.

"If any man will sue thee at the law and take thy coat, let him have thy cloak also.

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal.

"Take therefore no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

These were not esoteric instructions and commands. They were given by Jesus to the "multitudes." They embody the law of Christianity.

Are they obeyed by Brother Bryan any more than by Brother Rockefeller? Are they obeyed by the civilization of Christendom and could the structure of that civilization as it is stand if they should be obeyed by it?

That civilization, however, has established certain moral laws of its own and has expressed them in statute law. Has Brother Rockefeller made himself more amenable than Brother Bryan to penalty because of violation of that statute law in the conduct of his life and in the gathering of his fortune?

In what respect are the methods by which Brother Rockefeller has accumulated his many millions different from those of Brother Bryan in gathering his thousands? Neither of them is in prison, and the assumption is that neither is guilty of any offense recognized by the statute law as immoral. That Brother Rockefeller has more millions than Brother Bryan has thousands does not affect the principle.

The truth is that the methods of money-making pursued by Brother Rockefeller are not different in essential morals from those of business men generally, whether these are successful or unsuccessful in the chase. They engage in a competition which does violence to the principles of Christianity as laid down in the Sermon on the Mount. If Brother Rockefeller's "life record shows extraordinary moral obliquity," as Brother Bryan asserts, the whole system of trade and business of Christendom is of like obliquity.

We do not offer any defense of Brother Rockefeller. We simply point out that in essence his methods are general and not peculiar—that there is no "extraordinary obliquity" in them. Read the testimony in the life insurance investigation now going on; analyze your own methods and motives in money-making.

As to the priestly organization, the practical effect of the Christian organization, "the church," has always been averse to morality, and is now.—William Kingdon Clifford.

Man is not born to solve the problem of the universe, but to find out what he has to do; and to restrain himself within the limits of his comprehension.—Goethe.

Consciousness Analyzed.

A Study of the Consciousness of the Unconscious.

Consciousness, or, to coin a more English word, "awareness," is the most important of all mental phenomena, [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune] inasmuch as it is the first manifested symptom of life and its loss the recognized attendant of death; yet it has, till now, defied all the researches of the physiologist. Its external organs are, it is true, easy to be perceived. We now know, though dimly, how the sensory nerves, through which alone we receive impressions from the external world, communicate their views, with a speed comparable to, but inferior to, that of light or electricity, in some cases directly, in others through the spinal cord to the brain, where they arouse and stir into activity the neurones or pyramidal cells situate within the cortex of its gray matter. But beyond this we cannot go.

What physiology can do for us, however, psychology has attempted, and the experiments made by Dr. Pierre Janet, Charcot's no less eminent successor at the Salpetiere, have shown that in certain abnormal cases every portion of the brain is not equally conscious at the same time. With patients attacked by catalepsy he has shown that the consciousness of the individual breaks up into at least two parts, of which one part remains active, while the other sinks into abeyance. Thus, a cataleptic's arm or leg, when once placed in any position by external means, will remain so fixed during the remainder of the attack, without the patient being conscious of the fatigue thereby caused to the muscles or to the force of gravitation compelling it to take another pose. Yet this is not due to any unnatural rigidity or spasm of the muscles. On the contrary, the limb in question remains perfectly plastic, and can be made to change from one position to another at the will of the observer. Hence, he argues, the only thing which is missing from the brain of the patient is the "awareness" of what is taking place, and it is therefore in the position of a telegraph receiving station from which, though messages are sent to it, the operator is absent. Similar phenomena occur with patients attacked by diseases less rare than catalepsy, such as epilepsy, hysteria, and somnambulism. Perhaps the most cruel of these cases are those of local anaesthesia, where the hysteric during the attack does not feel pain if pricked or burned in one particular part of the body, although remaining sensitive enough in all the rest.

Clearly, argues Dr. Janet, in these cases the consciousness of the patient has become split up, one part being alive, while the remainder is in appearance dead. Yet it is not dead in reality. One knows by other tests that the part supposed to be insensitive is, in fact, telegraphing its sensations to the brain just as much as the other. But the central receiving station has now become not one, but two.

These, it may be said, are cases of disease, but things happen every day to the most normal of us that can be explained by the same theory. How often do we walk along the street thinking, as we say, "of something else," with one part of our consciousness in evident abeyance? Friends may pass us without our recognizing them, incidents in the ordinary life of the streets take place around us without our being aware of them; but our whole consciousness is not asleep. Our legs continue to move us in the direction we have fixed for them, the right corners are turned, and our eyes, the guardians of the body, remain on the watch to warn us of approaching danger in the shape of collisions, which we avoid, as we say mechanically. Nor does the case of normal sleep differ, save in degree. Although blind and deaf to ordinary sights and sounds, although a well known voice may speak near us in hushed tones without our awaking, and regular and expected movements, such as those caused by the motion of a tram or ship, seem to have rather a lulling effect on us than otherwise—let a sudden and unexpected sound strike our ears, or a hand be abruptly laid upon us, and how swiftly the whole ego becomes aware of it, and leaps back into full life with the whole of its consciousness regained. Some part of the consciousness has really been on the watch all the time.

From these facts Dr. J. Grasset has constructed a theory of the consciousness which at least demands attention. He holds that besides the full or upper, consciousness which we all know, and which inspires what we may call our reasoned movements, man possesses a lower or more sensual psychic center, which is, according to him, independent of the other. This, which he calls the "polygon," from the fact that the different centers of bodily sensation in the brain seem to form a many angled figure, is charged with the supervision of the functions which we call instinctive, as also of those the daily exercise of which has become familiar to us by use. Among these he would include the passions and the emotions which we share with the lower animals, such as, for instance, the unreasoning fear, anger, and the like displayed by crowds.

Not the least valuable point of Dr. Janet's theory is that it explains in great measure the important part played in our daily lives by this division of the consciousness. Whatever view we may take of the physical machinery of thought, there can be no doubt that its long and uninterrupted exercise puts a vast strain upon the powers of the body, and leads to the expenditure of what we call nervous force. Now, later researches all indicate that while the energy of the muscles is really increased by constant use, and is in effect inexhaustible, this does not hold good for nervous force, which, once expended, can only be renewed by long continued rest, and even then by means which we cannot accurately trace. But nearly all actions of mind or body tend, when constantly repeated, to become, as it were, mechanical, or to pass, in Dr. Janet's language, from the control of the upper to that of the lower consciousness. If we compare, for instance, the laborious reasoning by which a child succeeds in casting up a long column of figures with the machine-like ease that enables a bank clerk to go through his ledger, with, perhaps, his mind at the same time occupied with his own thoughts, we see that this must be the case. But the greatest blessing conferred on us by the possession of two states instead of only one state of consciousness is that of sleep, whereby, while the body, instead of being "left naked to its enemies," retains enough consciousness for its own protection, the higher functions of the brain obtain the rest which alone enables them to gain fresh strength for the renewal of the struggle with the coming day.

JOHN A. HOWLAND.

LIFE IS WHAT YOU MAKE IT.

To the preacher life's a sermon,
To the joker it's a jest;
To the miser life is money,
To the loafer life is rest.

To the lawyer life's a trial,
To the poet life's a song;
To the doctor life's a patient
That needs treatment right along.

To the soldier life's a battle,
To the teacher life's a school;
Life's a "good thing" to the grafter,
It's a failure to the fool.

To the man upon the engine
Life's a long and heavy grade;
It's a gamble to the gambler,
To the merchant life is trade.

Life's a picture to the artist,
To the rascal life's a fraud;
Life perhaps is but a burden
To the man beneath the hod.

Life is lovely to the lover,
To the player life is play;
Life may be a load of trouble
To the man upon the dray.

Life is but a long vacation
To the man who loves his work;
Life's an everlasting effort
To shun duty to the shirk.

To the heaven blest romancer
Life's a story ever new;
Life is what we try to make it—
Brother, what is life to you?
—S. E. Kiser.

SELF-GOVERNMENT.

As Maintained in the Public Schools, With Excellent Results.

Organized self-government of children by children for children, is in successful operation in many of the schools of New York, Philadelphia, and other localities. It ought to be introduced everywhere, for it has solved the problem of municipal politics, and has vindicated the wisdom of representative government, irrespective of sex. Like the system of "juvenile courts," as a substitute for ordinary police supervision, it has proved its superior efficiency, and has come to stay.

The first trial of the new system was made in a disorderly school of more than 2,000 pupils in one of the suburbs of New York. The whole discipline of the school was placed in the hands of the children themselves. They elect a mayor and council. Their teachers are present at the meetings of the council, and retain ultimate authority, but rarely exercise it. Formerly the constant presence of policemen was required on the playgrounds. Within a week, with the right and responsibility of governing themselves, the school became orderly and law-abiding.

In these miniature republics of boys and girls, governing themselves and each other by universal suffrage, holding their own courts, making and enforcing their own laws, no special legislative or private interest has any chance. There is no graft, no boodle, no collusion between their police and wrong-doers.

President Roosevelt has commended the teaching of civics by this admirable plan. Many eminent educators give it their enthusiastic approval. But if children, without distinction of sex, have thus demonstrated their ability to carry on government, how long will it be before the same principle will be applied to all citizens, men and women, with similar beneficent results?—Henry B. Blackwell in Woman's Journal.

$300,000 IN THE BALANCE.

Spiritualists May Lose a Big Bequest.

Bloomington, Ill.—Spiritualists the world over who have been interested in the remarkable will of J. T. Crumbaugh the wealthy banker of this county, who left his estate of nearly $300,000 to the cause of Spiritualism, will be disappointed in learning that this sum may be lost, because of a decision of relatives to contest.

Mr. Crumbaugh died last April and there was great surprise when it was learned that his property had been left to the Spiritualistic cult with instructions to erect a magnificent church in his home city of Leroy and also a free public library in the same place. The remainder of the estate was to be used for instruction in the belief.

With the use of this large sum the followers of Spiritualism anticipated a boom in that belief and there was rejoicing wherever the facts became known. Mr. Crumbaugh became a believer in Spiritualism several years prior to his death and was most enthusiastic.

Say Spirits Instructed Him.

It was declared by followers of the cult that he had received instructions to so dispose of his estate from spirits with whom he was in communication prior to his death. His widow, who was left but a small portion of the estate, freely renounced her dower interest and entered as heartily into the proposed disposition of the property as had her husband. Now it has just developed a number of relatives who are entitled to a share in the property are disposed to dispute the will, claiming that Mr. Crumbaugh was not mentally competent when the will was drawn.—Moline Dispatch.

CATHOLICISM AND PERSECUTION.

Some Pertinent Illustrations in Reference to the Same in the New York Sun.

"A Catholic Priest" is perfectly justified in saying that the motive of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew was political rather than religious, though religion was the basis of the parties. But history will not bear him out if he contends that Rome was clear of the business. Te Deum was sung in St. Peter's; a triumphal medal was struck; a triumphal picture was painted on the wall of the Vatican; a triumphal oration was composed by the papal orator, who said that on the night of the massacre the stars had shone with unwonted brilliancy and the Seine had rolled an ampler tide that it might cast forth the foul carcasses into the sea.

It is unfortunately true that the habit of persecution was transmitted by the Church of the Middle Ages and the Inquisition to Protestantism, and especially to the State Churches. But it presently died out, and Protestantism now heartily renounces it and thinks with shame of the burning of Servetus.

However, I do not want to bandy accusations and reproaches. We welcome a sign of grace when a representative of the Church of Innocent III., of Torquemada, of Philip II., of Alva, of Louis XIV. and his Dragonades, of the Jesuit, of the Syllabus, shows that he is ashamed of persecution.

SUNDAY AND SUN WORSHIP

Some Interesting Points in History in Reference to These Two Important Questions—Constantine the Worst Except Nero and the Devil.

The Sunday question looms up more especially during fair weather. Some people think it should be spent in serious thought and badly ventilated rooms listening to some platitudes they have for the thousandth time. Many claim to spend it in any way agreeable to themselves which does not injure their neighbor. In this matter, Saints Wilson, Smith, Fraser and others of the unco guid don't agree with St. Paul about the Sabbath and other Jewish observances, who left these matters to every individual conscience. These modern saints, clerical and lay, object even to touch money gathered for charity, because it was the result of an entertainment on Sunday. But it is to be remarked that money received from the city council, collected from the very lowest levels, was taken gladly. I hope that there will be more such Sunday entertainments.

This question of observing the Sabbath was settled when St. Paul visited Jerusalem specially to confer with James and the church there, and it was settled in St. Paul's way for everyone to do as he liked about such matters. After 300 years of practice in that way a man of the name of Constantine, Emperor of Rome, a man worshipper, did something. This man Constantine was perhaps the worst person, excepting Nero and the Devil, that ever trod the earth. He was a multi-murderer! He murdered the following persons: Maximian, his wife's father, A. D. 310; Bassianus, his sister's husband, A. D. 314; Licinius, his nephew, A. D. 319; Fausta, his wife, A. D. 320; Sopater, his former friend, A. D. 321; Licinus, his sister's husband, 325; and Crispus, his own son, A. D. 326!

And it is to this monster that the Christian world today owes the observance of Sunday, the day devoted to the worship of the sun. The pagan priests refused to grant him absolution for his heinous crimes, a fact the Christian priests took advantage of by applying their patent process for removing stains on character.

"Ah! easy fools," said Ovid, "to think that a whole flood of water e'er can cleanse the stain of blood." He was absolved and baptised into the Christian church. These latter events did not occur until his death for the reason that a person that had accepted the faith could venture freely to indulge his passions in the enjoyment of this world, while they still retained in their own hands the means of salvation!

This most damnable doctrine amounts to a direct premium on the commission of crime. Gibbon says: "* * * Future tyrants were encouraged to believe that the innocent blood they might shed in a long reign would instantly be washed away by the waters of regeneration."

This scoundrel, a sunworshipper, who had, as other heathen, kept the Sun-day publicly, ordered the day to supplant the Jewish Sabbath (Bonwick). "He commanded that this day should be kept holy throughout the whole Roman empire, and sent an edict to all governors of provinces to this effect." (Eusebius' "Life of Constantine.") Sunday, therefore, is pagan, and in this respect in no wise differs from every other observance, sacrament, or rite, or festival in the Christian church.

Christmas, the birthday of the sun, is pagan; Easter, the resurrection of nature from the grave of winter, is pagan; the doctrine of the Trinity is pagan; the sacrament is pagan, and it were easy to add to the list. I may remark that the sacrament exists now only in Christian practice, and drunkenness exists now only in Christian practice also. They have always gone together.

I have room to say only a few words about sun worship. It was the earliest form of worship. The sun was worshiped as the savior of the world. Then men reputed to have had the qualities of the sun were worshiped, and pictures of them were marked by putting the sun rays about their heads. I have the names of sixteen of those chaps who were crucified. There were probably many others who unfortunately escaped that fate.

All the peoples around Judea or near it were sun worshipers—Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, Persians, Babylonians, Assyrians. Our own ancestors also. When a Jew backslid it was into sun worship. The sun was a son of the beautiful, chaste, immaculate virgin Dawn. His birth was heralded by a star. He was received with acclamation by the hosts of heaven, who soon disappeared. It is He that ascendeth into heaven (or the heavens) and descendeth into the nether world; that not only walks but dances on the water; calms the storm; makes many loaves of bread out of one; many fishes out of one; whose holy day is Sunday; who rises triumphant out of the graves of night; turns water into wine; the great miracle worker; the Father who art in heaven or the heavens; the light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world—the light of lights. What are the matins and vespers and noonday song but praise to the sun? He is at once the creator, preserver, and destroyer; a trinity of qualities in one person. Perhaps you can find space for the following pageant of ancient Persian sun worshipers.

Mithras the Mediator was the sun god. The birthday of all the sun gods was December 25, when the sun commences to go north. He comes bringing renewed verdure and manifold presents to his children. (Hence the green things and presents at Christmas), Santa Claus is the sun. * * But the Persian festival, it was called the "Annual Salvation of Mithras," and lasted forty days.

The procession was formed long before the rising of the god. The high priest was followed by a long train of the magi in spotless white robes, chanting hymns and carrying the sacred fire on silver censers. Then came 365 youths in scarlet, representing the days of the year and color of fire. * * Then the chariot of the sun empty, decorated with garlands and drawn by superb white horses, harnessed with pure gold. * * Then a horse, his forehead blazoned with gems. Close behind him rode the king in a chariot of ivory, inlaid with gold, followed by his kindred in embroidered garments and a long train of nobles on richly caparisoned camels. This gorgeous retinue, facing the east, ascended Mount Orontes. Arriving at the summit the high priest assumed his tiara, wreathed with myrtle, and hailed the first rays of the rising sun with incense and prayer. The other magi gradually joined him * * Finally they all joined in one chorus of praise while king, princes and nobles prostrated themselves before the orb of day."

Space forbids me enlarging on the subject. Polytheism also existed from a very early time, but, as remarked by Sir William Jones, these many gods melted in the last analysis into the sun who was the "Lord of Lords"; the moon was his wife. Sun worship lies at the foundations of all the great religions of the earth and its footprints are discernible every where. We cannot even salute one another without committing a sun-myth. "Good day," that is God-day or sunny day. I must leave my readers to think these matters out for themselves or the few of them who have sufficient respect to do so.

VEHEMENT VIEWS

Concerning Clara Watson and Religion.

Of all the rational, clear-headed, and common-sense writers for your columns, who accept a belief in Spiritualism, Clara Watson easily takes the lead and holds it. She always presents sensible thoughts and does so in language both direct and plain. I never miss reading anything she contributes, for her name appended to any article is sufficient to establish its worth. She never writes to pile up words in profusion, but to express ideas, and she does with unerring exactness.

Ambiguity plays no part in her pen productions, and when you have read what she has to say, you know what she means.

Those Spiritualists who are so anxious to make a religion out of that which, if true, is nothing but a fact in Nature—spirit existence and communion—would do well to read and reflect on her remarks in number 825 directed to H. D. Barrett; and all those so desirous to be known as "Christian Spiritualists" can consider with profit what she says about that particular brand of religion, for if ever words contained the living truth they do.

Religions of all kinds are frauds and fakes so great that all others are insignificant when placed in comparison with them. They have been so in all ages and are to-day; and when history has recorded their works and results so that they who care to read and investigate may know how the race has been enslaved, deceived and bamboozled by rank superstitions, it is hard to see why the word religion seems to embody so much value for some Spiritualists.

Spiritualism is either true or false, and if true it is not a religion and has no use for the name in any way, shape or manner. Facts can never be anything but facts; and religions of all kinds are mere beliefs, around which sacred ignorance loves to hover with a devotion correctly described by the word stupidity.

All efforts to connect Spiritualism with religion invite disgust on the part of rational men and women, for it has no more to do with religion (every kind of which rests as a foundation on some sort of a god) than it has with any other delusion that humanity is foolish enough to entertain. Therefore Mr. Barrett and others should drop the word and present Spiritualism to the world exactly as it is; an effort to prove that life and consciousness as seen in human beings is not destroyed by death. If Spiritualism can do this, it will do a work so imporatnt that religions of all kinds will have no interest for thinking men and women.

With nothing but faith to predicate another life on, religious beliefs catch many dupes; but give the world knowledge and no one will be satisfied with faith and her fables, and religious nonsense will pass away and become obsolete like ancient mythology.

The word religion and all it embodies could be withdrawn from use at once and the world would lose nothing, in fact it would be a gainer; but if Spiritualism is mixed with it as some desire it to be, the result will be so injurious to Spiritualism that it might as well go out of business.

Religions of all kinds are dying out as men and women grow in intelligence, and to tie Spiritualism to such a rotten thing as the Christian religion is to invite death by contagion; for the company it keeps will prevent investigation by many who might otherwise wish to test its claims.

Let Spiritualism live or die on its own merits, and if it has a collection of facts that prove the indestructibility of man's consciousness, those facts are what the world wants, and not a mixture of sense and nonsense put forth as a holy and sacred religion. Present your facts, Mr. Spiritualist, and if they are facts, that is all you need to do, for nothing can injure or destroy them in the long run. But do not, if you have any regard for common sense and reason, try to mix up with religion in any form. CHANNING SEVERANCE.

BRIGHT POINTS IN MOTION.

Seemingly They Are Little Entities.

To the Editor:—The scientific sentiment of the times seems to drift towards trying to solve the beginning and formation of life, of what it is composed and whether spontaneous generation is a fact or not. In your issue of Sept. 23 you give mention of these fine animalcule and invisible structures of the air, stating that the atmosphere is swarming with infinitesimal life.

I wish to give a statement that goes to show that this is the case. It may prove nothing to anyone else, but it remains a fact with me all the same.

When the day is clear and the sun shines I can look into space at about the focal distance of the eyes for reading. I can see then bright points constantly in motion, causing little streaks of light as they go darting in every direction. They seem to be thicker than any wigglers in a rain-barrel could be, and they are everlastingly full of life. I have been told from the spirit side of life that they are life and sustain the life on this planet.

I am not the only one who can see these millions of struggling life entities. There is a lady in my neighborhood, who has been an excellent medium, but does not practice it now, who says she can see these same brilliant points darting and dashing in every direction.

I wish to ask, who has a similar power of sight. This has been common for me all of my life. If other people have this power of sight I do not know of it. T. F. LEE.

COMMERCE—WHAT IS IT?

A Picture of the Conditions of Modern Life.

Commerce finds its justification for an honest existence in want. Want bespeaks, or confesses a weakness—an inability to meet required demands—avarice takes advantage of this and exacts her tolls. It has been called demand and supply—want hesitates, avarice stands firm—the conjecture is heard that the price will raise; they wait, they watch; one prays, the other yearns; ravaging privation grapples the heart strings. There is a yielding, a giving up on one side, a gorging; a gluttonous gratification of greed; a garnishing of gold gained by gutting a generous government on the other. "Shrewd foresight," "excellent judgment," or something of the kind, is the way the headlines of the daily press read when the holdup is divulged.

No man has a right to take advantage of another's wants. Commerce's mission is to supply the necessities of life. It is a great and a responsible one, one that vitally touches every individual. No one man can produce all the various commodities required for his maintenance. Interchange is therefore a necessity. A government is derelict in its duty when it leaves unprotected and unguarded this avenue to the fireside of its people, to be hawked, balked, swayed and operated according to the whim or avariciousness of man. This is not a protectionist article. The inhabitants of a nation are entitled to the necessities of life, at the lowest figure possible, and a tariff to protect home industry is nothing but a tax on the rest of the community for the sole benefit of the producer. I have serious doubts, yes, grave apprehensions of the honesty of the man who applies to government to restrain its neighbor from selling to the people what they need for less than he demands for a similar article.

Intellectually, socially, morally and financially a people, a nation, yes, humanity must rise together. An equipoise in all of these must be maintained. Any excelling, any outstripping that operates as a hindrance of one, results in retarding the whole. A spontaneous spurt begets conceit in the individual, and the strange thing of it is that it subsists by consuming all of the high, noble and refined qualities of the possessor. Sooner or later the afflicted becomes indifferent, callous, hardened.

Man's assumed, usurped right to succeed at the expense of his neighbor, has become so prevalent, widespread and deep-rooted that it is considered, yes, even called a natural right by those whose energy, ability and time is wholly given up to attempted accumulation.

Traffic, trade, tricks and trespasses on the weakness of your brother is the order of the day. Humanity is engrossed in but one object, gain. Does competition make this necessary? Then do not compete. Exchange; equally exchange. Give as much as you take.

At table, on the street, the cars, coming and going, wherever you may, heed for a moment the conversation; it all runs in the same channel; the burden is generally, the turning of a scheme, the landing of a deal. Anxious and distressed, tired at night and exhausted at morn, the schemer calculates, devises and plots ways and means to vanquish his competitor. Run down and wasted, he has exhausted all on the low groveling plane of self. I doubt if the idea ever occurred to him that by benefiting others he would be enriched. No, that is too broad and magnanimous. By his own skill and shrewdness he says he did it. Therefore must be wary, on the watch lest some other take it away. Here, uneasiness, doubt and fear come to him in a different form, with all the unnecessary anxieties attendant on their train.

What a useless expenditure of time, energy and brains. The duty of beings is to produce, build up, beautify, enlighten and enjoy this earth. To make it more comfortable, inhabitable. Not merely tolerable, but a place of joy. This seems to be an unrecognized instinct of man, as shown by his aversion to leaving it, and all for what purpose? The means that he employs, the avenues to which he most strenuously applies himself, are the methods by which this object is thwarted. All the necessities of life are but incidentals to the other nobler and grander purpose. Yet we wrangle over the incidentals and neglect the accomplishment of the principle.

A difference between Christ and Myron W. Reed, late of this city, is that Christ scourged the money dealers out of the synagogue, whereas here, the money dealers scourged poor, honest Myron Reed. What would have been the destiny of Christianity if, like the money dealers in Denver, those whom Christ denounced had driven him away? I know not what became of those of olden times, but these here in this city still wallow in their extravagant luxuries, and have hired a man to preach what they want to hear. Jesus Christ and Myron W. Reed preached the love of God and the brotherhood of man. Christ's preaching was a success, Reed's was a failure. What can the man in Mr. Reed's old pulpit be preaching? I do not know. Have not been there since he—Mr. Reed—was scourged. He cannot be preaching what Christ and Mr. Reed preached, if he did they would drive him out of the synagogue. That is, they would ask for his resignation. Oh, how polished and refined villainy has become! Can it be, oh, can it be, that religion is also a commercial commodity? That the voice of love, liberty, truth, the brotherhood of man and the cries of want are all drowned in the rattle of gold?

"Freely thou hast received, freely give." A boon should never be sold. By doing so, you in a measure exhibit your appreciation. Place your motive for selling alongside of the motive for giving. Look at them closely. You will find no comparison.

Spiritualism, or the re-establishment of the fact of spirit return, has not been for the purpose of locating gold mines, accumulation of wealth, nor for furnishing the means by which you may gain an advantage; but on the contrary to draw the mind of the human family away from trivial things, away from commercialism, the vampire that smothers generosity, saps the foundation of honesty, and is driving competition from off the earth, and to direct it to the duality of being, to the possibilities of the Am, and to impress thereon the necessity of "keeping yourself pure and unspotted from the world."

When will man cease to grovel,
To wallow in the dust,
Move out of his low hovel,
To chambers of the Just?

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Light on the Question, Was Lincoln a Spiritualist?

There seems to be much speculation in regard to President Lincoln's belief in spirit return. Quite frequently articles are seen in The Progressive Thinker headed "Was Lincoln a Spiritualist?" I write what follows at the dictation of one who knows.

My cousin Justin Hulburd was born a medium. Spirits tell us that long before the outbreak of the Civil War he was destined to play a part which has never been made public—that of President Lincoln's private spy. He was very petite, four feet tall, small features and fragile build. He was kept in that condition until after the close of the war, then, after forty years of age, he grew fourteen inches, his features enlarged and he became of much stouter build.

Sveral years before the war Gen. Warren became his guardian, and Justin was known in the army as "Little Warren."

Gen Warren exacted from President Lincoln a solemn promise that the services of Justin—or Little Warren as he was called—should never be made known. Publicity would have been fatal, the rebel element being so prevalent throughout the United States during the war and for considerable time subsequent to its close; it was to be kept secret on account of Justin's profession, which was the stage.

Notwithstanding such secrecy he was three times shot at when on the stage by men who, recognizing his voice, suspected his identity—once in Washington, D. C., once in St. Louis, Mo., and once in Louisville, Ky. He was poisoned three times, but saved by spirit power, the spirits compelling him to vomit, thereby expelling the poison from his stomach.

The above we did not intend giving to the public until his life was published. In time it will be given to the world in three volumes, but there having been several articles in print asking "Was President Lincoln a Spiritualist?" we permit it to be given now.

He went through the war as in a dream, guided by a voice—the voice of George Washington—assisted by Joan of Arc. He was promptly admitted to the White House at any hour, day or night.

He answered the guides' purpose admirably, being so small and having small features he could represent either a boy or girl as conditions required. As a boy he would enter the rebel lines dressed in a pair of little nankeen pants buttoned to a blue waist, go direct to headquarters and ask about his father, take out a top, wind it up and then make it spin, sing for the officers, win their friendship with his childish ways which he could play to perfection.

At one time while Justin was playing in Chicago Abraham Lincoln and Hon. David Davis attended the performance. The name of the comedy was "In and Out of Place," in which Justin represented five different characters. At the hotel Mr. Lincoln said to Mr. Buckley, the manager of the company, "That little creature would make a good army spy, he can represent so many different characters." He did not then think that that little individual would become his private spy. Justin did not belong to the army or the secret service. He belonged to the nation.

President Lincoln believed in Spiritualism, also in Jesus the Christ, often quoting from the New Testament passages connected with the life of Jesus.

Mr. Lincoln had several sittings with a man claiming to be a medium who went by the name of Colchester. He discovered he was a fraud of the worst kind, and ordered him out of the White House.

He had several sittings with a man named Conklin. He told me he thought he was genuine.

Miss Kennedy, he said he knew was genuine, also Nettie Maynard, who was usually the medium for the circles held at the White House.

A woman by the name of Hilton, he thought used some sleight-of-hand business, and also a ventriloquist. Hon. David Davis thought the same.

Hon. E. W. Stanton, David Davis, James G. Blaine, Salmon P. Chase, Gen. Winfield Scott, Richard M. Hooley and President Lincoln pronounced Nettie Maynard and Miss Kennedy genuine mediums.

Miss Kennedy was a wonderful medium, but her health failed, and she gave up sitting for the public.

On one occasion Charlotte Cushman, Laura Keene, Joseph Jefferson, Edwin Forrest, Mr. Conway, Mrs. Scott and Miss Jennie Maybury attended an "afternoon tea" at the White House. President Lincoln sent for Miss Kennedy, and the tests they received from the spirit side of life were wonderful, so much so that Laura Keene took a diamond ring from her finger and presented it to Miss Kennedy, saying "she was the only medium that ever gave her mother's name to her in full. She went back six generations and gave Laura Keene the names of her ancestors in full, which made Laura Keene from that moment a Spiritualist. She never gave up the church, as she felt it was her duty to speak of Spiritualism to all those with whom she came in rapport.

Mr. Lincoln would often talk with Justin about spirit life, and would ask him if when the "voice" spoke to him it sounded harsh or soft.

Justin says, "I haven't seen it stated in print that Mr. Lincoln had sittings with Charles Foster. I think that is a mistake. I never heard him speak of Charles Foster. My intimacy with Mr. Lincoln was such that if he had sittings with Mr. Foster he would have spoken of it to me."

President Lincoln and Hon. David Davis first met Justin in Chicago some time in the forties.

At Mr. Warren's rooms at the National Hotel in Washington, D. C., in 1854, George Washington, through Justin's organism predicted to David Davis the election of Abraham Lincoln to the presidency, which Mr. Davis received with a burst of laughter, to think his old friend Abe Lincoln would become President of the United States.

To corroborate my views of Mr. Lincoln's belief in the spiritual philosophy, I will give his own statement given through the organism of this medium, June 8, 1901:

"I was a Spiritualist and knew that Justin was a medium, all the time I had a desire to take him to one of Nettie Maynard's circles where four of us sat on a piano while the medium was playing, the piano would be raised from the floor. I wished to have him see this, but Mr. Warren would not permit it, saying he did not wish him to come in rapport with Spiritualists," but I said, he is a medium, and some day the world will know it. * * * *

"I remain your everlasting friend and thanking God that I was permitted to understand the beautiful philosophy of Spiritualism before I passed out of my body. I know there are many frauds calling themselves spiritual mediums, but one genuine medium makes up for a thousand of the low-lived villains that rob the people of their money by fraud.

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

"One that loved truth always, no matter what it cost."

The Hon. J. W. Somers, who after the war held a prominent position in the Pension Department at Washington, and was for many years an intimate friend of Mr. Lincoln, was visiting at our mountain home twelve years ago. One day in conversation with Justin he remarked that Hon. David Davis told him that six years before Mr. Lincoln's election a little chap in Washington predicted that his old friend Abraham Lincoln would become President. Justin smiled, but said nothing.

AT LAST REACHING THE LIGHT.

Leaving the Orthodox Church and Finding Peace and Rest in Spiritualism.

The article in No. 827 on "The Methodist Catechism" is timely. From childhood up to within a little over ten years ago I had been a subscriber to the creed and catechism of that church. Ten years ago we were placed under the teaching of an elderly gentleman, who had accepted the "higher criticism," and began teaching his class along these lines. All were of middle age and no longer children. Under this gentleman's teaching, "light" began to break in upon my dwarfed and untaught mind, and suddenly one morning I awoke a "new creature," a freed soul, freed from the bondage in which the orthodox church had held me. I began to study this catechism for myself and in the light of my own reason, and the points the brother has brought out began to stand forth clear and plain as manifestly ridiculous and false.

This teacher was "watched," his class "visited" by the pastor, church and Sunday-school officials. He had been a lifelong church member, and was a member of the "official board" at the time. At last he was so persecuted that he resigned as a teacher, but still held his "class" at his residence. God bless him—I can't thank him enough!

Several members asked that their names be taken from the church record, among them myself. In a conversation with the pastor he said to me: "Even if this were true, it would not do to teach it to the children and the young members of the Sunday-school."

I said, "Not? Why not?"

"Because it would destroy their faith and leave them stranded. Would you want your boy to go to Brother H's class and be taught along the lines of higher criticism?"

I replied, "Most certainly I should, and I shall see to it that he is taught along those lines in the future. You may remove his name from the church record as a probationer. I want my boy to know the truth if it destroys his faith in every falsehood he has been taught."

Readers of The Progressive Thinker, here is one who was once strictly orthodox, who gave up in one night of thought with her own mind the idea of a personal God, a special creation, a fall of man, a salvation by atonement, and all the creeds and dogmas attached to it, and did I find myself stranded? Nay! verily, I had found a new country, the region of my own mentality. My own being, and I've been exploring it ever since, and reaching out into the realm of thought unhampered, and free from the chains that bound my mind in darkness.

It does my soul good to read the editorial page of The Progressive Thinker. I have no hatred for these Reverend Doctors, who stand in our pulpits, "blind leaders of the blind," but I do want them to be honest with their congregations, and I know they are not.

A minister compelled to resign because he attempted to give to his congregation what he believed to be the truth, said to me: "For eleven years I stood and preached what I did not believe, and that I knew was false. For three years my conscience hurt me so that I could not rest, and when I began to preach the truth they kicked me out, and I know that there are hundreds of ministers to-day standing in our pulpits preaching what they know to be lies. They do not themselves believe their own words."

But the time is here when all this is changing, crumbling, and nothing can stop the progress of the minds of man and angels.

SEES A BROADER RELIGION.

Mr. Mangasarian Descries Decline of Worship—Service of Man, He Asserts, Is Superseding Reverence for God—Thinks Ministers Care More for Saving Sunday Than for Helping the People—Calls Altruism the Highest Ideal—Finds Narrow Selfishness in Adoration of the Deity.

"The world—in its cultivated portions at least—is hastening toward a great turning point. A change is coming over us which will make us totally different men and women. That change is from the worship of God to the service of man."

This, in brief, was the theme of M. M. Mangasarian in his lecture at the first service for the season of the Independent Religious Society of Chicago at Orchestral hall. His subject, "The Awakening of the World," is the title of a group of lectures, to which this was introductory.

The lecturer expressed admiration for the ministers of Chicago as men, but referred to them as "parasites on the resources of mankind." He said they cared more for saving Sunday than for helping the people.

Says Worship of God Is Immoral.

"The worship of God," he continued, "is a religion of the past. It is impossible to be really moral in the worship of God. Why? Because the highest ideal of mankind is altruism—doing good for which you can expect no return. Now, you cannot do good to God. As you look up to God altruism is far from you, and your service is tainted with the expectation of return—an eternal crown, mansions in the sky. The service of man is the purest form of religion."

No Grecian's pencil e'er did trace
A Nymph, a Beauty, or a Grace
Of fairer form or lovelier face.

But many years ago she left me and passed into that beautiful Summerland that we all are going to.

The old idea that a person whom men ignorantly call "God" made this and all the other innumerable worlds that fill up universal and unending space, is just as much of a mythical idea as is the idea that old Santa Claus brings the children their Christmas presents.

The great truth is, that worlds and systems of worlds—a universe—did not derive existence in any such a way at all. The old Mosaic story about the origin of our world is only a guess. There is not one single word of real true history in the whole old story.

The imperfect workings of the phenomena of nature brings sorrow, pain and death to millions of good people. But amidst their wailings and cries for help to their God, He hears them not! All the help we ever get in these trying moments, if it comes at all, is from our spirit friends and guides. They do the best they can for us under all the circumstances. When we feel their magnetism, we call it either conscience or the Holy Ghost. I myself have received warnings of danger, which if I had not received, I never would have written this article, and you would never have had the pleasure (or pain) of reading it. PROF. J. SYPHERS.

ANALYZING THE UNKNOWABLE.

And Taking Into Critical Consideration the Relation of a God to Man, Concluding That the Only Help We Get From an Unseen Source, Comes From Spirits.

Ingersoll was an agnostic, and simply and honestly said, "I don't know" concerning the existence of a personal God, and the continuation of human life after death. But Wm. Jennings Bryan said in his Chautauqua lecture that if Bob did think that, he ought not to say it before the public, for it would have a strong tendency to take away the Christian's comfort and hope. But Ingersoll's saying and speaking his honest convictions on these great questions (that are now as never before taking the right of way in the human mind), should not take away the self-styled Christian's hope and comfort. Ingersoll speaks only for himself.

If the Christian has proof enough to satisfy his mind, that is enough for him. But men's minds are far from being all of the same caliber. What might satisfy some uneducated, unthinking small and weak minds, would hardly set great minds to thinking.

I heard a preacher the other day who thought he was smart enough to handle the God question, declare that his idea of God was, that He could make a world in a minute! That fool idea as to how worlds come into existence, set the more enlightened people who were listening to him into a roar of laughter.

We told him that he was entirely too narrow between the eyes to throw any light upon that great question; that he must study the sciences of astronomy and of geology more, and the old heathenistic Jewish idea of a personal God less; and that finally we had no doubt he would come to the conclusion that the man who entertained such a silly thought as that, did not know one-half as much about God as a grasshopper or a cricket knows about man!

The preacher's unanswerable argument (to his mind) was that we all can see our great little old world and absolutely know that it exists. All our five senses tell us that it exists, and it could not and did not, make itself. That idea looks to the undeveloped mind as proof positive that a God must have made it. But unless you can sink away down deeper than that on the God question, you will never grasp the true idea.

If men had never pushed their investigations in astronomy any deeper than you do on the God question, they would still believe that the flat earth (as they thought) stood still and the sup moved clear around it once in every twenty-four hours. But now all enlightened men, women and children know it is just the other way.

There are so many things both in the bible of nature and in the bible of men, that you have to read backwards to get the truth. The motions of nearly all things in nature that have motion go right contrary to the way they appear to human eyes.

The account given by Moses of the creation of this world by a big and all-powerful being whom he called "Jehovah" or God, was a made-up story—a plausible guess, before the science of astronomy was born. That story did very well as something to rest the undeveloped human mind upon until the true astronomical theory was discovered and everything was demonstrated to be exactly the opposite of the way it looked to the uneducated human eye. But the superstitious and ignorant sapheads declared they would not suffer the old geo-centric theory to be changed and give place to the new heliocentric theory, which could be demonstrated in a thousand different ways to be true. No! those old orthodox would not give up their old ideas for the new without a fight. Their most reliable argument in those dark ages was Fire! And only think of the tens of thousands of good, honest, and the most enlightened people, who had to suffer martyrdom and to part with their sweet lives at the stake, a sacrifice to ignorant bigots.

But the conflict between religion and science is now about over, and the fires of persecution have been stamped out, and such liberal laws enacted that they have put a stop to the murdering of men and women for a slight difference of opinion either in science or religion.

The man who in this age of science and light would point to our world as positive proof that it must have been made by somebody, his mind is in the same childish state that children's are who point to their presents about Christmas time, as positive proof that Santa Claus does exist. Yes, we acknowledge that the world exists, and that the children have their nice presents, but they get them some other way.

When I told my beautiful wife (Mrs. Sarah Syphers Kent) of my conviction and conversion on the Santa Claus question, she was greatly delighted. She said she had never told the Santa Claus lie to her children but what she felt a deep conviction for sin. She herself was one of the most beautiful women I ever saw, tall and shapely; her complexion was equal to the tints of the peach-blow, her beautiful wealth of hair was pure black, wavy and glossy as the raven's wing. Her eyes were black diamonds, and How to Eliminate Fraud.

That fraud exists in our ranks IS LAMENTABLY TRUE, and that we as a class are in a measure responsible for it is also a fact. Let me explain what I mean.

About eighteen years ago I was one of a party who held a seance every Monday evening at the home of a staunch Spiritualist. There were six of us besides the medium, a young man who possessed wonderful power for physical manifestations. It was his custom to go into a deep sleep while we sat around a large table and he would then be controlled by a high spirit who gave us instructions how to proceed. These seances continued regularly for over six months, and many phases of mediumship were developed in this young man. We received otherealization, as many as three full forms being seen at once, independent writing on sheets of paper left on the floor under the table, independent playing of musical instruments, etc.

The more we received the more we demanded, and we thought we were unkindly used by the spirits if they didn't give us something new each seance, after a while the power waned, and the medium began to substitute fraudulent messages instead of holding himself negative to receive the spirit manifestations, and to do other little things in which he was finally detected. When accused of fraud he defended himself with the plea that when he came out of the trance condition he was exhausted, and felt weak for several days afterward, that the more we demanded of the spirits the weaker he became until finally he refused to submit to their control and thought he would try to satisfy us himself.

We, unconsciously, were the cause of his prostituting his wonderful gift. Is it not so in many cases? It takes the strength and vitality of the mediums to produce genuine spirit phenomena and unfits them to do other work whereby they can earn a living. We do not appreciate the sacrifice on their part, but keep demanding more, thus ofttimes forcing them to fraud whereby to earn their daily bread.

This is all wrong, and can be eliminated by placing the right conditions around our physical mediums. Every society should have its regular settled pastor and also its message bearer or one who can produce physical phenomena. Sundays should be devoted to expounding the philosophy and the week-day meeting to the phenomena. Salaries should be paid each and the most harmonious conditions made for both, so that only the higher intelligences can come to instruct.

Materialization is a fact in nature and I have had many opportunities to witness the genuine phenomena, some of which I may write of later. The time will come when it will occur in broad daylight and then all "cry of fraud" will cease.

Hypnotically Produced Music.

In the last number of the Journal des Debats M. Henri de Parville carefully goes over the whole ground and the facts presented are well worth considering. M. de Parville first takes up the case of a subject by the name of Aubert. "This man, although he had but a rudimentary knowledge of music, performs on the piano, in a semi-hypnotic state, compositions which recall the musical style of Mozart, Chopin, Beethoven, Schubert and others.

"A second and far more remarkable case, however, is that of Mlle Nydia. This woman, in a hypnotic state and with her eyes carefully bandaged, is able to play on the piano any piece of music which may be given her. Thus, at a sitting recently held at the Theatre de la Monnaie, in Brussels, Mlle. Nydia was led to M. Silvayn Dupuy, chief of the orchestra of the theater, who gave her a piece of music composed by himself, which had never been published. M. Dupuy saw that the bandage had been tightly placed over the girl's eyes. Mlle Nydia then sat down, held the paper in her hands for a few moments, and then to the great astonishment of every one played the piece without hesitation.

"Two physicians examined the young woman and found her to be in a real hypnotic state and absolutely insensible to the exterior world. There were then placed over her eyes a succession of bandages, alternately white and black, and she was led to the piano. One of the spectators offered a new opera which was placed on the piano. The hypnotizer looked at his subject and immediately the girl played the piece with the greatest cleverness.

"Another spectator, who had just arrived from New Zealand, offered a piece which had never been performed in Europe. Mlle. Nydia, however, executed it at once, and she played with the same skill a piece which had just been composed by M. G. Germain. At public request she played a piece of Paderewski, which was unknown to her, and finally, a lady wrote the title of a piece of music on a slip of paper, put it into an envelope which was afterward sealed, and gave it to the girl. She placed it on her forehead for a moment, and the next instant was playing Beethoven's 'Clair du Lune' sonata."

AN OBJECT LESSON.

The Great Evil of Child Labor in Georgia.

The Georgia legislature has again refused to give any protection to the tiny children in the cotton mills. Little girls and boys of five and six years old may still be legally worked for eleven hours, and all night through if it pays the mill-owner to work night shifts.

The women of Georgia have labored earnestly for years to secure a child labor law, but the women have no votes. Is it likely that the legislators would have proved so deaf to the request of thousands of women if those women had represented thousands of votes? It was a Georgia lady who said, several years ago, when this bill had been voted down, that the Georgia legislature seemed to be in league with the Woman Suffrage Association to convince the women that they needed the ballot.

Colorado's child labor law is considered the best in the United States, and it is worthy of note that children cannot be worked to death with impunity in any state where women vote.

The Spirit World.

Its Status as Presented by a Learned Swedenborgian.

The spiritual world includes three great divisions, heaven, hell and an intermediate region which Swedenborg calls "the world of spirits." In the last man lives, as an unconscious denizen of the spiritual world, during his life on earth; and in this he awakes, after the brief period of unconsciousness which usually accompanies physical death. There are innumerable subdivisions of each of these great primary divisions, but with them we need not now concern ourselves. The central fact of them all is that they are essentially states of the individual and collective human mind; heaven, a confirmed love of good or use and of the truths which support, enlighten and direct it; hell, a confirmed love of self and of the falsities by which it is supported and justified. The world of spirits is a state in which influences both from heaven and hell meet in the same mind; where, during man's life on earth, his choice is made between them; and where, after death, the results of that choice are fully disclosed.

Swedenborg's statements about the spiritual world often raise in the same mind two difficulties of an opposite kind. On the one hand, life in that world, as described by him, is so like life in this that his teaching seems to reduce the vague, emotional ideas which most people who believe in a future life form, by methods of which they are but dimly conscious, to something like commonplace. And on the other hand, the fundamental facts of that world seem so remote from human experience that it is difficult to conceive of a real, stable and vivid human existence subject to such conditions. Whether there be any substance in these difficulties remains to be seen. They at least afford a convenient line of exposition; and I will, therefore, state briefly in what respects life in the spiritual world, as depicted by Swedenborg, resembles life in this world and in what respects it differs.

They are alike in these respects. When the separation of a man from his physical body is completed, which is usually on the third day after his decease, he finds himself, so far as his senses inform him, exactly what he was before, except that the material world and all that it contains have absolutely disappeared from his consciousness. Every bodily and mental faculty is perfect. His heart beats, his lungs respire, he eats, drinks and sleeps, he mingles in society, converses with others and amuses himself according to his tastes. He reads, studies and works according to his aptitudes and the habits he has formed. A man is a man, a woman a woman and a child a child still. He finds himself in a world, the scenery and surroundings of which closely resemble those of the world he has left. There are hills and valleys, streams, lakes, seas, animals, plants, houses and cities, and people living in them. In a word, he is surrounded by objects such as he was familiar with during life on earth. There is no apparent difference whatever. Swedenborg, indeed, repeatedly states that the similarity of the other world to this, in all its outward aspects, is so complete that a man does not know, unless he reflects on the subject, that he is not still living in his physical body in a material world. Here, however, in the external appearances of things, the similarity ends. This dissimilarity is great and not so easily described.

Though the objects of that world appear to be separated by spaces, like the objects of the natural world, the spaces are of an entirely different order. The objects sensated there are spiritual objects, though presented under appearances like those of natural objects, and the spaces in which they are seen are spiritual spaces. They are not fixed as material spaces are, because there is no matter or physical sensation there to constitute such fixity. The objects which are sensated by spiritual beings are states of their own minds and of the minds of others with whom they are in more or less close and permanent relations; that is, the objects of the spiritual world, regarded as a whole, are all the infinite varieties of goodness and truth, and of the perversions of these, which are the substances that constitute it. In other words, angels and spirits sensate spiritual qualities as objective forms; their sensory state being just the contrary of that of men in the world, who sensate material objects, while spiritual qualities outside their own minds are not sensibly existent to them, except so far as they learn to discern them through the veil of matter.

The conception of the spiritual world as being divested of fixed or limited space, and consequently of definitely measurable time (for all the measures of time depend on the motions of matter in space) is fundamental in Swedenborg's teaching. Unless we can bring ourselves to believe that at least there may be a real world which is not in space and time such as we know in this world, it is impossible to believe in or even to conceive the nature of his alleged experiences. It is not possible to discuss here the reasonableness of this conception. It will, I imagine, present little or no difficulty to a mind that is somewhat versed in psychology, provided its knowledge is derived from direct inspection of the processes of mind and not merely from text-books.

The spiritual world, considered as an object of sensation, is created by God through the minds of angels and spirits and in correspondence with their states, individual and collective. That world is real because it is His creation, and because it bodies forth the supreme realities of human existence, which are spiritual. The difference between the state of consciousness of angels and good spirits (or those who are becoming angels) and our own is that, whereas we apprehend objects as external to and independent of ourselves and see little in them that is germane to our spiritual states, their consciousness is primarily fixed on the states of mind out of which the sensuous objects are generated and which they embody and depict. And this bent of their minds does not mean, as might be imagined, an everlasting concentration of their consciousness on themselves, but the precise opposite of this. For they know that they receive all the things which constitute heaven within them and around them as free gifts out of the abundance of the Divine love and mercy, and they love to have it so. It is not, therefore, self they see when they look within and around, but something from the Source of all unselfish good, who has moulded them into and keeps them in some resemblance to Himself.

Nevertheless I am aware how exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, it is for the mind in certain states to grasp this idea with any confidence. Nor is there any harm in thinking that the things we sensate are exactly like our sensations. That is how we are meant to think for the purposes of our active life in the world. It is only when we begin to reason adversely to the divine from these sense impressions that they become dangerous, and may become fatal. For they tend to a practical if not theoretical atheism. Beware, then, lest you permit the conception of the external world as existing independently of mind to dominate your ideas of God and Divine things. Perhaps enough has been said to show that there may be weight in the warning which Swedenborg so often utters, when explaining the nature of spiritual realities: "Do not, I beseech you, mingle your thoughts with Time and Space, for to the degree that Time and Space are in your thoughts while you read what follows you will not understand it."

Let me beg those to whom such an idea may seem difficult, if not impossible to grasp, to put this question seriously and reverently to themselves, "Ought we to think of God as existing in space and time?" If the answer is "Yes," one or the other of two consequences, both disastrous to clear spiritual thought, will ensue. Either we must conceive of God as a person located in some spatially measurable portion of his universe; that is, as being in reality neither infinite nor omnipresent; or if, shrinking from this, we try to preserve the idea of His omnipresence, it will be difficult, if not impossible, to avoid confounding His immanence with some undefined inmost principle of nature. But if the answer is, "No," if the supreme source of all being, reality and power is not in space and time, why may there not be worlds of real and orderly being, created and sustained by Him, which also are not in space and time? Or, to put the problem in another way, can you believe that love and thought are in space and time? It is true that, acting through the physical brain they cause motions in space and time; but these motions are not the things themselves. Can you measure them by inches or weigh them in scales? We do, indeed, apply many of the terms we derive from the material world to states of mind—such as high and low, hard and soft, hot and cold—for there is a true correspondence between matter and mind, and the qualities of the one therefore aptly describe the states of the other. But in so using them we instinctively reject the merely material conceptions which adhere to the terms, and convert them into their mental equivalents.

If the reality of a non-spatial spiritual world would be granted, and that man as a spiritual being, lives in it, even during his life on earth, Swedenborg's experiences become at once intelligible and even simple. The progressions of that world are as real as those of this; but they are mental, not physical progressions. A man's spiritual journeys consist in all those states of other minds with which he is brought into more or less sympathetic or, it may be, antipathetic relations. As Tennyson finely says:

Eternal process moving on,
From state to state the spirit walks.

Swedenborg could traverse the spiritual world, as it were, from end to end, without being in the least impeded by his earthly body, whose motions had no relation whatever to these spiritual journeyings.

THE TRUE TEMPLE.

In far-off Egypt's sunny land,
Out on the desert and the sand,
Stands a pyramid alone,
Made of mighty blocks of stone;
And in its chambers vast and deep,
The forms of many monarchs sleep.

And one was wound in purple folds,
His name wrought out in letters of gold,
And a crown of diamonds that sparkle now,
Was placed upon his honored brow;
And a jeweled scepter was in his hand,
Whose power was felt throughout the land.

And when his earthly mission was done,
They laid him to rest as a child of the sun,
And the tears of a nation were o'er him shed,
For the king they loved was silent, was dead.

But his spirit comes to you to-day
To speak through these living lips of clay,
And they say that in the years gone by,
Men raised great steeples to the sky,
And built great pyramids of stone,
To stand on desert lands alone.

Where the sunlight kisses them each day
Yet drives not their mystery away
Or tells just how, or why, or when,
They were built by the powers and strength of men.

And in the cathedrals vast and dim,
Where the sunlight never enters in
Men stand in all their pomp and pride
And say, when some mortal form has died,
That some day, near a far-off throne,
You, perchance, may meet and greet your own.

But I have come in the spirit to-day,
These words of truth to speak and say,
That never has the hand of man
'Neath sun or sky of any land,
Gathered their little strength to do
A thing so noble, grand and true,

As to build a temple that will stand
As a beacon light to the spirit land—
A temple so clean and pure and white
It will ever let in the golden light
Of truth wherein the soul can see
The way to light and liberty.

And some day ye shall stand in the watch tower
And hail each passer by,
And give them the fruit of the spirit,
When in hunger their soul doth cry.

For the teachers and friends in spirit,
Have long since willed it so,
That the little band of workers
In faith and love below

Should blaze the way for a temple
With thoughts so grand and high,
That help would come from far-off lands,
And from angels in the sky,

That know the needs of the spirit—
Just a simple, pure white home,
A temple of love, and hope and peace
Where all are welcome to come

To receive the blessing of heaven,
In this haven of sunshine and love,
Brought to us in tender compassion,
By the angels of light from above.

AGE OF MAN ON EARTH.

Some Pertinent Reflections Thereon Illustrating Important Facts.

Most readers are familiar with the eloquent disquisition on lost arts written and spoken to thousands of Americans many years ago by Wendell Phillips. Few can have read what he wrote without being led to reflections on what may be the deeper significance of such facts as wrote of, and to them many have since been added.

Within recent years there has been great activity in exploration and excavation on the sites of ancient cities of which history has long had more or less vague mention. Among the striking facts emphasized by the result of this activity is the knowledge that many of these ancient cities, though now in complete ruins, and some of them for long periods entirely lost to man's knowledge, prove upon being turned up to the light to have been superimposed upon the ruins of yet other cities far older than themselves and that these yet older cities are known to have existed at all only through these recent excavations.

The University of Chicago has an excavation expedition in the great plain of Babylonia and the field director has recently published some account of its results. In this are particulars, in part, of the excavation of Bismaya, a Sumerian or ante-Babylonian city, believed to have flourished 5,000 to 6,000 years ago.

The Babylonian plain, almost perfectly level, a thin crust of clayey soil imposed on a bed of caving sand of unknown depth, without slopes on its surface, offered difficulties to any kind of drainage that would seem to be nearly insuperable to the best sewer-building science of our own day.

Yet this excavation has revealed that the drainage engineers of 6,000 years ago overcame them triumphantly by an elaborate system of terra cotta drains sunk many feet into the sand, erected vertically of sections resting on each other, each with grooved flanges to receive the one above it, and all perforated with small holes through which water could escape into the sand in the event of any choking of the lowest outlet.

In this drainage system are found, also, constructed of terra cotta still well preserved, several examples of arched drains. Until the discovery a few years ago in the lowest stratum under the Babylonian city of Nippur of a dilapidated arch it had been supposed that the arch was wholly unknown until Roman times. But it now appears in this excavation and in some others made by the Germans in the same region that the arch was frequently employed by builders of cities long anterior to Babylon, or more than 6,000 years ago.

When we read of these things to-day we can not avoid yet more interesting reflections. Within the memory of living men it was the well-nigh universally accepted belief that the earth was spoken into existence "out of nothing" only about 6,000 years ago. Here and there some daring individual speculator thought and spoke differently, but he was looked upon as a profane and dangerous man in whom other men scarcely dared repose confidence even in the ordinary affairs of daily life.

Yet now we are learning that before the day when Adam was believed to have been created as the crowning act of the creation of the earth, even then men were living in millions on the plain of Babylonia, building great cities, furnishing them with what we of to-day call "modern improvements," and achieving therein these and other works which amount to indubitable proof that they had developed a civilization which all of human history that we know anything about goes to show could only have been the product of evolution through thousands of anterior years.

Further, men have long known that in Egypt and in many other parts of the world are the remains of other cities demonstrating the existence of other forms of civilization approximately as old as Babylon. And if in Babylonia there had been elaborate civilization long anterior to Babylon is there any reason to deny that older civilizations also preceded the vast remains of dead civilizations in other parts of the world? It could hardly have been true of Babylonia without being equally or nearly equally true of other regions.

Moreover, since we long supposed Babylon to have been the outgrowth of the first civilization attained by mankind and now find that it was not so, but had been preceded by other far earlier civilizations, culminating in the greatly older cities of Bismya and Fara and others, all evincing growth through many ages, are not we authorized to believe that Bismya and Fara were no more than Babylon products of man's earliest civilization? As they underlie what we long supposed the oldest of man's work, may not—indeed, considering their character, must not—there be others still older still underlying them?

Are we not almost driven by such revelations of antiquity not heretofore conceived of to the conclusion that for countless millions of ages the old earth, which has not essentially changed since our civilization began, has been the scene whereon human civilization after civilization, varying in form but always human civilization, has been born in endless succession, each growing up through thousands of years, culminating in the highest attainment possible to each and then dying out and perhaps through unrecorded ages of savagery or in some other wise regerminating into a new form of life to bear blossom and fruit and die in its turn? And we must further conjecture that this process of birth and bloom and culmination and decay and death and rebirth of man's civilization, as of men as individuals, is to go on through uncounted ages of a perhaps endless future?—Chicago Chronicle.

IF I WERE YOU.

If I a little girl could be,
Well—just like you,
With lips as rosy, cheeks as fair,
Such eyes of blue, and shining hair,
What do you think I'd do?
I'd wear so bright and sweet a smile,
I'd be so loving all the while,
I'd be so helpful with my hand,
So quick and gentle to command,
You soon would see
That every one would turn to say,
"'Tis good to meet that child to-day."
Yes, yes, my bird, that's what I'd do,
If I were you.

Or, if I chanced to be a boy,
Like some I know,
With crisp curls sparkling in the sun,
And eyes all beaming bright with fun—
Ah, if I could be so,
I'd strive and strive with all my might
To be so true, so brave, polite,
That in me each one might behold
A hero, as in days of old.
'Twould be a joy
To hear one, looking at me, say,
"My cheer and comfort all the day."
Yes, if I were a boy, I know
I would be so.

Review of Passing Events.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE, EDITOR-AT-LARGE, N. S. A.

A Letter Which Answers Itself.

The following letter from Ex-Senator R. A. Dague, speaks for itself, and its questions carry their answers with them. Henry Frank has on several occasions received flattering notices from Spiritualists, because of his iconoclastic utterances. He has appeared on the platform of at least one of the leading camps. He belong to the bushwhackers who carry on a guerilla warfare along the borders of free thought. As for what a "new-thoughter" believes, or is aiming to accomplish, I confess I do not know. Not that I have made no effort to know, for I have read most of the books and magazines devoted thereto, but to my mind the more I read the thicker the fog settles and darkness gathers. No man can be better qualified than Henry Frank for teaching this potpourri of smattering science. As any charlatan can place "professor" before his name, and even barbers are "tonsorial professors," no one will object to Henry Frank's taking that title, but when it is claimed that he is a scientist, we ask in what department of investigation he has made himself proficient? This talk about "science" and "scientists" is cheap rubbish, which the real scientists never indulge in:.

Alameda, Cal.

Editor-at-Large—I attended a lecture in San Francisco, delivered by Henry Frank, who spoke on "Psychic Phenomena and Science." The chairman introduced him as a distinguished scientist from New York, whose books and lectures had caused a tremendous new thought movement throughout the United States. The chairman further announced that it was the purpose of the New Thoughters to establish a great university in which the New Thought was to be taught by Mr. Frank and his followers.

The professor after a few preliminary remarks, plunged right into the subject, by declaring that 999 spirit mediums out of every 1,000 were sleek impostors and conscienceless fakirs. Most if not all the spirit phenomena is clever trickery, and the true scientist believes that the 1000th part not legerdemain, can be accounted for by science. Mediumship shatters the nervous system and disorganizes the brain, and that is the reason such large numbers of mediums go insane.

"Do you know," thundered the lecturer, "that stimulants, especially whisky, help wonderfully to procure spirit manifestations? Often the drunker the medium the more convincing are his tests." The learned professor then confided to his hearers the all-important fact, that he had given the subject of intuition and man's "sixth sense," profound study, and had about arrived at the conclusion that these so-called faculties, or powers, were not prophetic of new unfoldment coming to mankind, but are remnants or lingering fragments of man's equipment in the infancy of the race. In due time man will probably outgrow them and they will disappear.

"Have you ever noticed," said Mr. Frank, "that the first control of mediums are Indian savages?" This to him indicated that the deranged brains of mediums dig up from the depths of their submerged sub-conscious minds, shadows, memories and impressions that come from the experience of remote ancestors when they were savages. These Indian spirits, seen by mediums, are not real spirits, but memories and images recorded in the subconscious mind of the mediums.

Here the professor imparted the startling discovery which he had reason to believe the solemn truth, that every man and woman has stored away in their subconscious minds the entire history and experience of all their ancestors clear back through the dim historic past.

"My friend, Minot J. Savage," declared the speaker, "is one of the really good men who has been obfusticated on Spiritualism. Dr. Savage tells of two men, who had agreed on a code of signals to be given by the first one dying to his living friend, if spirit communion were possible. "A" died. On one occasion "B" received through a medium a message from "A," in which the letters, words and figures were correctly given as agreed upon. No one but "A" and "B" knew of this signal.

"Now," declared Mr. Frank, "this is no evidence that 'A' communicated with 'B.' The phenomena can be accounted for in a scientific way. The medium's sub-conscious mind is in contact with the infinite ocean of thought and when 'B' called on the medium the latter drew on his reservoir of his subconscious mind, which extracted from the ocean of mind the signals where they existed, and the medium then gave them to 'B' as a message from spirit 'A.'"

At the risk of exposing my ignorance, I wish to inquire who is Henry Frank who comes to us away out on the western edge of the continent, and tells us there is no more than one honest medium in a thousand; that whisky produces the best manifestations, and that a very large proportion of mediums go crazy? Is he a distinguished scientist, as stated by the chairman? Is it true that to him is due the credit of the much talked of New Thought movement?

Am I too stupid to know whether or not I have a sub-conscious mind? Have I? I am so dull that I do not understand how all thoughts that have ever been "thunk" by the myriads of earth's inhabitants, are things floating about like driftwood on the infinite ocean of thought, or flying through infinite space like black birds, some singly, some in pairs and some in dozens linked together like a string of sausages, all prowling around, watching for an opportunity to fasten to the innocent subconscious mind of mediums, and palmed off on Minot J. Savages and other gullible Spiritualists as messages from departed friends.

Now, Mr. Editor, you will confer a great favor on correspondent, by telling me if I really have a sub-conscious mind chockfull of Indians and bear fights, and all the records of all the rackets my reverend ancestors were engaged in back to that far distant period when they climbed trees for cocoanuts for dinner, and if so, is it also a fact that "these crazy" mediums with wrecked nervous systems and disordered brains, either when drunk or sober, can fish up these old records of my ancestor's capers and play them on me for spirit messages? Is it true I have two minds—a deep cellar and an upper story mind, and the chief business of the lower one is to deceive and make a fool of the upper one?

R. A. DAGUE.

A "scientist!" Science is truth. The true scientist is always for the truth, even though it subverts his most cherished theories. The scientist never makes a statement without knowing it by evidence to be true.

Does Mr. Frank know that mediumship shatters the nervous system and promotes insanity? Can he give the name of a single medium who has by that gift become insane? Can he give the names of mediums who claim drunkenness is promotive of mediumship? If all are frauds, why should this practice drive them to insanity, or why should whisky assist?

This talk about the sub-conscious mind, and "infinite ocean of thought" on tap for those who can become connected with it, has no more real foundation that a dream. This is a prolific field for the pretender and the quack and their wildest vagaries are glossed and made attractive by the glamor of pseudo-science.

A $50,000,000 Gift.

Fifty millions is the gift of Rockefeller to the University of Chicago. President Harper visited him, not satisfied with the few odd millions already bestowed, and like another Oliver Twist, cried "More! More!" until the great gift ought to satisfy even an impecunious college president.

It will be remembered that the first gift was for the prosecution of bacteriological research, in which the oil king had a strange interest. Really it was to place the university in the front ranks of the schools where vivisection of animals, and unlimited cultivation of virus in their flowing blood were to be practiced. Vivisection—the strapping of living animals to the dissecting table, and cutting through quivering nerves, as a dead animal would be dissected, before gaping classes, has become such a horror in many of the leading colleges and been upheld with such arrogance by many medical men, that societies have been organized in England and America to prevent, as far as possible, the inhuman cruelty perpetrated under the name of science.

When the great fair at St. Louis was in preparation, the American society applied for space to make an exhibit. The intention of its officers was to show the public that the appliances for holding motionless the living dogs, cats, horses, etc., while dissected, and pictures of the various stages by which it was ascertained, how much pain an animal could endure—how much of its body could be cut away—and yet life remain. The fair management granted the space, and the Humane officials were pleased with their success. The matter came to the ears of the vivisectionists, and they appealed to President Harper who advised with the board, and the grant was rescinded. All the space the Humane Society could have was headquarters for display and circulation of its literature! The implements of the inquisition as practiced on animals must not under any form be displayed!

We believe that this matter appeals to Spiritualists more than those of old beliefs. The Bible and church teach that animals have no rights man is bound to respect. They are his for life or death, to do with as he pleases, and the torture or death of thousands is nothing if human needs require it. Spiritualism teaches that the dumb creatures of the field and wood should be treated with kindness and never subjected to unnecessary pain. To torment, and cause suffering to animals, differs only in degree from causing the same in human beings.

The most eminent surgeons have unequivocally declared that this dissection of living animals is useless, and misleading and inoculation with virus harmful, instead of curative. Rockefeller's gift allows callow professors, to experiment on hecatombs of guinea pigs, dogs, cats, horses and other animals, inoculating them with various forms of deadly virus, extracted from putrid blood. Confined in cages, these animals can be watched day by day through all the prolonged agony of the engendered fevers, and from their burning veins, "toxins," and "anti-toxins" extracted to ferment the blood of human patients. It is all to the glory of "science," and alleviation of human suffering!

Is it, or is it for the lust for cruelty, the gratification of the beast in human nature?

Already the fruits appear. The Associated Press is furnished a report of the experiment of Doctors Guthrie and Carrell, in grafting vital organs on other parts of the body than those to which they belong. They opened the throat and chest of a dog and moved the animal's heart into its neck and grafted it there, and its functions went on without much disturbance. In other dogs they reversed the circulation of the blood!

Ordinary man, with the modesty true science yields, would wait the completion of their studies. Not so these college professors. They fill the ears of greedy reporters with their expectations. Dr. Carrell, says: "What we have learned gives us hope that we may replace a wounded or worn out heart in a human being with the healthy, youthful and strong one from a living monkey."

Here is the full confession of object and intention of this sacrifice of countless animal victims. Some time, somebody may need a heart, and a kind monkey will be called on to give up its valuable treasure. Of course the monkey has nothing to say about it more than the dogs. Man wants it, and takes it. If such a man should need another heart, and the grafting can be done, a strong living hog would be the most appropriate animal to furnish it.

Do the professors believe that a monkey's heart can be grafted into the place of a man's? Of what value to science, or to anything else, is moving a dog's heart into its neck, or reversing its blood-current? The fiends who did the will of Torquemada in the torture chamber, might have learned lessons of these Chicago professors. Calvin, instead of burning Servetus, might have given him over to them, to perform the experiment of dislocating his heart into his neck, or grafting in its place that of a dog or a monkey; or more horrible, the Holy Father's might have called on these doctors for a tube of one of their toxins, and with a hypodermic injection set the blood of the heretic aflame, and for weeks and months gloated on his agony. Even an anti-heretic toxin might have been invented for their use.

Do these professors believe in their expectations? Not for a moment. They are not idiots. They seek the reporters, to exploiter, and gain cheap notoriety.

The University of Chicago will be endowed as no other. It will have the means to become equiped to completeness. Yet is there a Spiritualist willing to place his children in a school dominated by such a spirit? Endowed by money-madness and ruled over by the arrogance of Pecksniffian piety and parvenu science, where cruelty to animals, cruel brutality in college games, hazing, and all that goes to make up what George T. Angell calls "the college devil," are at a premium.

And yet with accents of surprise, we hear it asked: What do Spiritualists want of a school of their own?

UNIVERSAL NATURAL ALPHABET.

An Interesting Report From J. Madison Allen.

Permit me to present a brief sketch of my present outing so far as it has developed. For the first time in my career as a public advocate and teacher of Spiritualism, I find myself in the midst of a large community composed almost entirely of Swedish people. I find them teachable, ready to receive truth—tho' as a people sincerely "devout"—conscientious, home-loving, friendly, unpretentious. My lectures were given in English (which they understand); but their conversation with each other is a linguistic puzzle which I am not yet able to make out or keep up with. Their speech flows forth seemingly with almost the rapidity of lightning, without effort hitch or pause, and all the words blended into one! I am availing myself of the opportunity, however, while here, at Verona, Mo., to secure good illustrations of the language and of its scheme of elementary sounds, for insertion in the so long deferred but by no means abandoned work on the Universal Natural Alphabet, or Normalfa—with which system the exact pronunciation of any possible language, dialect, or gibberish, can be represented with scientific accuracy; so that any person anywhere who has mastered the alphabet can readily and correctly pronounce any written or printed word he may see, or spell any spoken word he may hear, without spelling book or pronouncing dictionary.

This is an achievement fraught with such immense benefits to universal mankind, that it ought not to be suffered to lie upon the shelf until the earthly originator of the system shall have left the mortal body.

In the midst of many other duties, extending over a period of nearly half a century, he has elaborated a complete compendium of the science of Alphabetism and has prepared illustrations from about 200 languages and dialects of America, Europe, Asia, Africa and the isles of the ocean, thus fully demonstrating the world-wide adaptability of the system. Supplying a connecting link or common tie between the nations, the Normalfa will prove to be of the greatest assistance in the inauguration of the era of universal peace, justice, liberty, brotherhood. The subject, or proposition, of unifying human speech by means of a scientific and natural system of sound-representation, was brought prominently before the Spiritualist public during a period of about ten years, dating from August 8, 1863, at which time an announcement of the discovery appeared in the Banner of Light. Numerous essays, etc., followed from time to time. Commendatory resolutions were adopted at a state convention held in Boston; at the National Convention held in Providence (at which I was a delegate from Vermont); at the National Convention of the Children's Progressive Lyceum held in Philadelphia (at which I was a delegate from New Jersey), and on other occasions. Several introductory booklets and charts were published, advertised and widely circulated, and class instruction given in that portion of the system required for writing English. Some correspondence was had with foreign countries. But the effort at propaganda required a full and complete presentation of the science of speech and art of representing it, and the matter was temporarily dropped until a work could be brought out doing full justice to the subject. The material for such a work is now accumulated, and the author hopes to be able to present to the world ere long a fitting compendium of this gift from the higher life—declared in a letter from Hon. G. S. Boutwell, United States Secretary of the Treasury, to be "one of the most valuable and important discoveries since the art of printing."

I return to the "home" field from here in time to speak on Sunday, September 24. The next point will be Nevada, Mo., for the annual convention of the "New Thought" thinkers. Will fill a few more engagements before going south for the winter. Address 651 So. Grant street, Springfield, Mo.

OCCULT GEMS NOW A FAD.

Society Folk Wear Mystic Stones to Ward Off Evil.

Word comes from London, Eng., that talismanic gems are the fad of the hour. Society, which has been reveling in occultism, is having its jewels reset cabalistically.

The idea comes from Paris, where the Parisians are wearing mystically engraved jewel amulets to ward off evil influences. Mounted in platinum and gold, the jewels, which do not become talismanic until they have left the engraver's hands, are being set in fantastic designs as rings, pendants, bracelets and necklaces. Needless to say, the new craze is good for the jewelers, for the jewels must be new, or, at least, recut, if they are to gring good luck to the wearers.

Mystic Stones and Their Signs.

The mystic stones and their equivalent signs are:

January—The Water Bearer—Sapphire.
February—the Fishes—Amethyst.
March—The Ram—Blood Jasper.
April—The Bull—Garnet.
May—The Twins—Emerald.
June—The Crab—Agate.
July—The Lion—Cornelian.
August—the Virgin—Sardonyx.
September — The Balance — Chrysolite.
October—The Scorpion—Alectorine.
November—The Archer—Topaz.
December—The Goat—Coral.

The topaz, engraved with a falcon, procures sympathy for its wearer, and the blood red coral, with a man bearing a sword, is reputed to protect the wearer from epidemics.

Beryl engraved with a frog and set in platinum and gold in the form of a pendant is the favorite love talisman, while the alectorine, which is one of the stones of the season, when engraved with a human hand, sustains affection between husbands and wives. The cornelian, bearing a man with a scepter, favors fortune, and so does the sardonyx when engraved with an eagle.

Onyx Supposed to Cause Dreams.

Not every stone, however, brings good luck, for the onyx, which, like the jade, is being extensively used for studs, rings and charms, when engraved with the head of a camel, produces frightful dreams.

These are some of the principles of the exponents of the new cult.

THE BIBLE New and Revised Edition.

Authenticity, Credibility, Morality.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S GREAT WORK

Ingersoll's desire that somebody should at last tell the whole truth about the Bible has been brilliantly fulfilled. No Freethinker worthy of the name can afford to pass over Remsburg's book in silence. Like Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," may it, let us hope, find admirers and translators in other languages. And again, like Paine's book, may this brilliant work bring to its author the praise of posterity.—Der Freidenker (Milwaukee).

This great work on the Bible by Mr. Remsburg is most valuable—it is an encyclopedia of information in regard to the Bible, and surpasses in importance all other works of the kind now published. It is up-to-date in every particular. Price, $1.25.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.

Historical and critical review, with replies to an objection. By G. W. Brown, M. D. Price, 15c.

A SYMPOSIUM.

Suggested by Dr. Alex. Caird, of Lynn, Mass.

Massachusetts steps to the front and demands a hearing. Alex. Caird, M. D., an influential Spiritualist, suggests a Symposium on an exceedingly important subject. It will be inaugurated in his special honor as a leading and highly respected Spiritualist of the Old Bay State, one who is constantly working for the spread of the Truth as manifested in Spirit Return. It will prove especially interesting, suggestive and valuable to every reflective mind.

The Important Question.

What Does Spiritualism Teach That Spiritualists Believe in Common?

Spiritualists Require No Creed

On What Fundamental Principles Do Spiritualists Agree?

The discussion of this question has called out a wide range of views, and while some of the replies have narrowed the field of agreement to the single fact of spirit communion, others have given it a wide extension. The question seems to presuppose that there necessarily should be agreement, and be something like a church creed to which all may subscribe.

If it be entertained, that spiritual beings have a knowledge superior to mortals, and are infallible, which is the old idea, then divergence and disagreement in their teachings is of vital import. But the modern view of spirit existence being a continuance of this, and that spirits are not endowed with intelligence greatly superior to that possessed in this life, places the utterances of inspiration on the plane of common things and does away with the superstitious acceptance of spiritual authority.

A spirit may be in error, misinformed, and prejudiced, just the same as before leaving its earthly body. We are not to expect the communications received from such spirits to agree, on the contrary we are assured they must differ, as the views of men differ. Each and every one, by the laws of his being, must reach his own conclusions by reason.

Why should it be held essential that spiritual communications should agree, more than all men should agree?

Why should a formula of thought be drafted to which all can or must subscribe? Is there a scientific body in the world that makes membership dependent on adhesion to certain beliefs, or even demonstrated principles? To belong to a geological society one does not have to avow belief in evolution. He may or may not hold to a personal Creator, and the cosmology of Genesis. Only do church organizations demand acceptance of a creed—or agreement.

Such a creed is the abhorrence of most Spiritualists. Many of them have escaped from years of bondage of cruel dogmas, and will not submit to the faintest indication of thralldom. They might look with some deference on superior spirit messages, did not these carry with them the limitations of their authors. A spirit, born and reared in earth-life in the church, does not at once come to the truth. It returns and through a medium also of church belief, affirms the doctrine sacred to it while here, and is positive about God, Christ, heaven and hell as the most orthodox preacher.

Other spirits affirm the old doctrine of reincarnation they believed in here, which they have not, or cannot verify in their state more than in mortal life.

Others repudiate the eastern myth, and would have the spirit a product of evolution by law.

Some divide the the spirit world into seven spheres, while again it is taught that there is no arbitrary division.

What are we to conclude? Simply that spirits are limited in knowledge and fallible, and must not be taken as authority, and in this all Spiritualists agree.

There are other points, as the fundamental proposition that man is a spirit, incarnate, which at death passes from the earthly body, remaining the same individual. That this spiritual being has an infinitely progressive existence. That there is no other savior than by growth in knowledge. That spirits are cognizant of those in this life, and can under favorable conditions communicate with them.

Nor is there any difference of opinion on the fundamental principles of morality. The ethics of all religions, freed from their theology, are nearly identical, for the principles of duty, obligation, and right conduct, are exponents of countless ages of thought-selection, whereby that which was best for the community and the individual has been preserved. The right way is right because thereby all interests are best protected and promoted.

In fact, in the great essentials there is agreement, and differences of opinion only in minor detail and non-essentials. There is more unity of thought than among the Christian churches. For two thousand years they have never settled the vital point whether there is one God or three, and those who believe in three have contended over the relations the three sustain to each other until befogged in the verbiage of definitions. Yet each sect would compel every one to believe in the creed—that is statement of principles—it promulgates. Therein Spiritualism widely differs. It allows each and every mind freedom of thought. It has no thumb-screw, rack or dungeon, or ostracism to enforce acceptance.

Don't magnify the differences. Don't hold on to the old notion that the truth is proven by the unanimous hurrah of the crowd.

Magnify the great principles which are indisputable; principles which form the foundation of Spiritualism, as a science—not a theology.

We have different views, what of it? Opinions, beliefs, ideas, theories, of men and spirits are all brought at last to the tribunal of reason, which accepts and stamps with the seal of immortality only the demonstrated.

We need not worry about the result. We may assist, or we may retard, but no alliance can for long sustain error, or restrain the truth. When that is found, there will be unity of knowledge—not belief.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

What Shall We Do to Make Spiritualism Grow?

Dr. Caird's query is a good one, and out of it I hope some suggestions may come that will help us. It seems to me that Spiritualists need to right-about-face, and realize that it is neither a dime show nor a convenience, but a great revelation that reaches into every department of human need, therefore it is a source of education instead of a fragment of truth around which to build another sect. It seems in the immediate past that most of the time and energy of societies, local, state and National, have been trying to build up a sect to compete with other sects, so have clamored for quantity instead of quality, and have wasted much time in trying to devise means by which they can get privileges from certain laws, and acquire certain titles that we have no moral right to in any sense, and will be of no real value when we do get them, if we succeed.

What we need, first and foremost, is men of some practical business ability at the head of our societies, and who have a respectable standing in the community; some one who can work for the good of the society instead of for a clique; some one that can and will stand for principle.

We need state organizations that are organized in the proper business manner. Instead of states trying to organize first, organize the locals first, and have the state organized from locals and then have the National, from the state. As things now are cliques can and do run things, and this is never wise or safe,

We have a few societies that are burning illustrations of what can be done along this line, but we have more of the other, which in turn show the dangers of this, too.

One of the first things I would suggest that the N. S. A. do towards bringing about this stable work, would be to change its missionary policy. It has for several years kept missionaries in the field and they have gone from one state to another, but as we follow in their trail we find that neither local nor state societies are more numerous or better organized. On the other hand we hear many criticisms—not of the workers, but of the method. It really looks to me like much time, energy, and money wasted so far as the working body of Spiritualism is concerned.

What to me seems a much more economic and practical plan, is for the N. S. A. and the state society where there are such to take hold of this jointly, and where there are local societies in working order which are employing speakers by the month or more, to mark out routes that are within a reasonable radius of the local, and make terms with these speakers, which I am sure would work for a nominal sum; and get them for one or two evenings in the week to go out to the places. In that way a steady course of meetings could be held each season; at least once a month in each city or town and in many of them more often. In this way a growing interest could be created which would be self supporting. Then this one would become an independent employer and so become a strong factor in the state; then this would reach with so much added power to the N. S. A., and in a few years I believe every state that now has any working bodies would become honey-combed with good societies. And then the N. S. A., backed by these states could start in the states where now there is practically nothing, and in twenty-five years we might have a working body that could lead the thought of the world, thus become a power.

And, too, we must come to realize that Spiritualism can never do its best work by being confined to the opinions of a few as to what it really is. When men try to put a fence around truth, they fence out more than they get in. It makes me fearful for the cause when I read of state societies passing resolutions, that any speaker that takes up the great questions of the day is to be barred from their platform, because they cannot see wherein Spiritualism has anything in this connection. And when I read letters from some of our young men workers who are pleading with societies to keep the rostrum free from all discussion of the economic questions of the day, I feel to say, Oh, spirit world, broaden that intellect by the powers of inspiration.

What we need are minds of breadth and power.

So many refer us to the great men of the past who labored in Spiritualism and these intellects with the burning fires of the spirit realms drew the attention of the world.

Why do you turn to the work and name of Brittan, Wheeler, Mrs. Luther, Amanda Spence, A. J. Davis, Edmunds, and a host of others?

Principally because they taught Spiritualism in all its breadth and power.

And all men of brains acknowledged their worth, no matter whether they believed in all the new attitudes of life they brought out.

The one constant cry is, why don't men of means help us more?

Why don't people of intelligence that believe in the philosophy and phenomena come out and support us?

Simply because we have FAILED TO BECOME THINKERS AS A BODY; WE HAVE DROPPED TO THE STANDING OF A SHOW, AND A VERY CHEAP ONE, SOMETIMES, TOO.

Only this week I have had a call to take a church that was built for Spiritualism and run as such for a few years, but because the average speaker only tries to "play on one string," as the letter stated, it has been a failure, and is closed, and is a living example of our poor working policy.

Spiritualism is here to stay, and its only danger lies right in its own ranks. When we as a people will refuse to in any way COUNTENANCE IMITATIONS OF ITS PHENOMENA, AND WORK FOR IT AS A GREAT REVELATION THAT IS HERE TO EDUCATE THE WORLD, AND STAND FOR THAT AND NOTHING ELSE, WE SHALL BEGIN TO SEE BETTER RESULT FOR OUR TIME, ENERGY, AND MEANS EXPENDED.

When we will see to it that such men as Dr. Caird, Dr. Warne, J. R. Francis and others of the same sterling worth are kept in the places of trust and are supported there, we shall get something of a standing among truth lovers.

ELIZABETH HARLOW.

The Constitution of Man.

A Chapter From a Forthcoming Book by T. A. Bland, M. D., Author of That Popular Book, In the World Celestial. Copyright. All Rights Reserved.

Man is an intellectual and moral being who possesses a physical body which he comes in relation with physical phenomena, and an astral or, as Paul called it, a celestial body, which enables him to relate himself to psychic phenomena.

These two bodies do not differ in their essential elements but only in the degree of fineness. They are both composed of material elements, but they are formed—organized—by different rates of vibration, so greatly different indeed, that the first is tangible to our physical senses while the other cannot be seen by physical eyes, felt by physical fingers, nor can it make its presence known to ordinary earth-dwellers through any phenomenal manifestation which appeals to the physical senses.

These bodies are constituted of organs of thought and instruments of motion. The brain as a whole is the organ of mentality. But the brain is a compound organ whose various parts or centers, correspond with and respond to the different faculties of the mind. Each mental faculty has its brain center or organ. The brain proper, the intellectual brain, the congeries of mental organs has no function or office other than the mental functions of the observatory, memory, reason, imagination, emotion, moral consciousness, etc., etc. It has no physical function. It is the workshop of the mind, the laboratory of thought. Could every mental organ be removed from the cranium without injury to the contiguous tissues, physical life would continue as before; the functions of the stomach, bowels, liver, kidneys, heart, etc., would not be suspended or disturbed. This fact has been established by experiments on animals and birds.

The brain of both brutes and men, which compose the mental organs, rest upon a foundation substratum of the brain tissue, whose function is purely vital. Its office is to support physical life. It is the organ of sub-mind, or sub-consciousness which presides over and conducts the operations of the internal machinery of our bodies. The action of the stomach, of the heart, the liver, etc., are dependent upon it. This sub-brain varies in thickness, in different men, from one-half an inch to an inch. Its function was discovered first and defined by that eminent anatomist, physiologist, and mental scientist, Dr. Wm. Byrd Powell, whose work on the Human Temperaments attracted great attention among the more progressive scientists half a century ago. Prof. Powell occupied the chair of Cerebral Physiology in a medical college where I took my last course of lectures, and from his own lips I received my most valuable lessons in anatomy and physiology of the brain. From him I learned some important facts about the functions of the mental organs which were new to me, though I had previously read Gall, Spurzheim, Combe and other great writers on the science of Phrenology.

Dr. Powell taught me how to determine by external measurement the thickness of the sub-brain. His directions are as follows

"Draw a line from the spinal protuberance of the os-occipitus to the external orbit of the os-frontis and measure from the meatus auditorus externus up to that line."

The occipital spine is a small protuberance, in some cases very small, situated at the lower center of the back of the head. The orbital prominence is immediately above the outer corner of the eye. A line drawn between these two points passes above the ear, and to measure from the opening of the ear up to that line gives the depth of the sub-brain, sometimes called the vegetative brain. It is the foundation on which the mental brain rests. The organs of perception, the seeing organs, or to be exactly correct, the brain centers through which the observing faculties of the mind act, are located immediately above the eyes, and immediately over the front portion of the sub-brain; and the organ of amativeness, sexual passion, rests on the extreme back portion of it, while the organs of destructiveness, combativeness, alimentiveness, etc., occupy positions over the center of the sub-brain, tier upon tier in regular order, the organs of memory, reason, ideality, aspiration, benevolence, veneration, firmness, conscientiousness, etc.

The eyes are only instruments of sight, the organs of sight are in the brain. The nerves of sight, the optic nerves terminate at the back of the eye in a network of thin nerve filaments which serve as a sensitive plate like that used by photographers. The eye, like the photographer's camera, receives the rays of light reflected from objects, and thus pictures of those objects are formed on the sensitive plate, which is called the retina. The mind, the man, sees these pictures through the organs of observation, and projects them out magnified to the size of the objects thus pictured. Without the eyes the organs of sight would be useless. Persons who have large perceptive organs and good eyes have excellent sight, but those with small organs of sight or defective eyes see indistinctly.

Each organ of sight possesses a special function.

The function of the organ of color is to enable the mind of the person to see colors, and if it is large and active in a man or woman he or she is a good judge of colors; such a person can discriminate between the different shades produced by the mingling of different colors. One whose organ of color is very small cannot tell red from brown, or blue from green. In some the organ of color is so small that they are color blind. Such persons often have perfect eyes and have the organs of form, size, etc., well developed and are good judges of the form, size and weight of objects, but cannot tell you what the color is. The organ is located immediately above the center of the instrument of sight, the eye. It is small in many heads, especially the heads of Americans.

The organs of memory are located immediately above the organs of sight and may very properly be termed the picture gallery of the mind, as one with large organs of memory can at any time see a perfect mental picture of anything which has ever been photographed upon the retina of the eye. This wonderful gallery not only contains pictures of things, but of ideas also. The historian sees pictures of every event he ever witnessed or read of.

The scientist finds in this gallery pictures of all the facts he has ever discovered or heard of. While the philosopher finds there every idea he ever conceived or had presented to him by oral speech, or by written words.

The organs of reason, are located immediately above those of memory. Through those organs the mind is able to determine the logical relationship and comparative value of things and of scientific facts and philosophical ideas. These organs occupy a position immediately above the organs of memory in the superior region of the forehead. The side head is occupied by a number of organs through which the faculties classed as selfish act, and also those classed as semi-intellectual. The selfish organs are on a line with the organs of sight, hence they rest upon the sub-brain.

The organs of alimentiveness, destructiveness, combativeness, etc., are in this lower range of organs. Immediately above these the organs of constructiveness, calculation, etc., are located. And in the next higher range of the side head, ideality, sublimity, etc found. The organs of imagination, hope, conscientiousness, etc., occupy a still higher position in the brain. While the organs of benevolence, veneration and firmness occupy the crowning region of the head. And the organ of self-esteem, approbativeness, friendship, and sexual love are in the back region of the head.

The discoverer of the science of cerebral physiology, popularly known as phrenology, Dr. Franz Joseph Gall, was, like Darwin, a close observer, his organs being very large. He discovered, verified and mapped out the location of 26 organs of mental faculties and some twenty have been discovered by observing and thoughtful students of the constitution of man, during the past century. How many remain to be discovered and classified we do not know; but that the mind has faculties whose organs have not been differentiated and located, is generally believed by students of human nature.

The brain consists of two hemispheres, the right and left, hence the organs are double. There are two instruments of sight, the eyes, and each of these has its set of organs. Were it not so the loss of an eye would cause total blindness. If one hemisphere of the brain could be removed from the skull, without injury to the other hemisphere, the organs of the remaining half of the brain would serve the faculties of the mind, as well as the single eye performs the function of both when its fellow has been destroyed. I am now speaking of the brain, not of the sub-brain.

The reader is asked to remember the primary proposition, which is that the sub-brain is vegetative or life supporting, and the brain proper is the organ of mentality. The function of each being distinct from that of the other. This distinction is made clear by the fact already stated, that to remove the brain which is composed of the organs of the mind does not necessarily cause death, but a loss of mental power only; while to remove the sub-brain or to cut into it, or pierce it with an instrument or projectile of any sort produces death almost instantly.

During my career as army surgeon, of the American Civil War, a soldier who had been shot through the head came under my care. The ball had entered the right eye and ranging upward had come out at the top of the head immediately back of the organ of benevolence. It carried away a portion of the skull about two inches square and two or three ounces of brain, including the right lobe, or half, of the organ of veneration. My surgical associate pronounced the wound fatal. He said: "That man can't be saved."

"I beg to differ from you," I replied. "If the ball had penetrated the vital part of the brain he would have died at once. The fact that he is still alive proves that he has a fighting chance for recovery. If the inflammation can be controlled, the wound will heal and the man may live to a good old age. But he will not see quite so well, one eye being destroyed and one half of the organ of veneration being gone, he may not pray so fervently as formerly."

About half a century ago, an incident occurred in Tennessee, which attracted great attention especially in scientific circles. By the premature explosion of a charge of powder a man had a steel drill an inch square and three feet long driven through his head, yet he did not die, but recovered from the wound. The drill did not touch the vital brain, but the mental brain only.

Besides the divisions already named the brain is divided into the cerebrum and the cerebellum, the cerebrum being known as the brain of intellectuality, and the cerebellum the organ of sexual instinct. The phrenological name of this organ is amativeness, from "amo" to love, but although it is the basis of the love which brings women and men together in marriage, yet it is the organ of animal instinct rather than of a human faculty.

Love is the greatest and holiest word in our language, and so I protest against calling an animal instinct by that holy name. Passion is a more fitting word to use. The function of amativeness, should be under the control of the moral faculties and the guidance of the intellectual faculties. Thus controlled and guided, it is the source of much happiness, but when not so controlled and guided, it plunges those in which its organ is large and active, into vice, crime and omisery. Marriages based on animal passion are usually dissolved by the divorce court, or they are ended by the murder of one of the parties by the other. The man who kills his sweetheart because she refuses to wed him would probably have murdered her if she had. It is selfish passion, not unselfish love that leads to murder and suicide in such cases. The man who loves a woman, loves her with his whole nature. He loves her because she is his intellectual, moral, social and sexual mate. She is his soul mate, his other self, and the woman loves her masculine mate with unselfish devotion.

Young men and women should be informed of this fact for their own sake, and for the sake of their children. The science of sex and its function and relations is an important section of the science of the Constitution of Man.

The Transition of an Aged and Esteemed Spiritualist

I kindly ask for space in your paper to announce the transition of Mrs. Sarah Walker of this city, and mother of Mrs. Minnie Martindale. The relatives and close friends of our arisen sister gathered at the home of Mrs. Walker, 1205 South Water street, at three o'clock yesterday afternoon, to listen to remarks and eulogy of Mrs. Walker, by the Hon. Judge Tucker, it being Mrs. Walker's wish that he should officiate at the laying away, or preparatory to the laying away of the body. It was indeed a truly Spiritualist funeral, and I am sure one that all Spiritualists should pattern after.

Mrs. Walker was 75 years of age, had been a staunch Spiritualist and a very fine psychic all her life, many times seeing and hearing the loved ones who had preceded her to the realms beyond, so she can better return to her much loved family than those who have not studied into and become thoroughly imbued with our spiritual philosophy. Our sister was most lovingly and tenderly cared for by her two daughters, Minnie and Sylvia. She was a great sufferer but patiently did she bear her physical ailments.

Mrs. Walker passed to the higher life Sunday, Oct. 1, 1905, at 7:15 a. m. The many friends in Whitewater, Wis., will be sorry to learn of Mrs. Martindale's sad bereavement, for in this bereavement Mrs. Martindale has lost the truest and dearest friend of earth. But the family has the sacred consolation of knowing that "Mother" can and will, and has returned. The family has the sympathy of all friends and acquaintances.

Just a word now about Wichita Spiritualists. They are very enthusiastic in keeping up the interests in meetings here. The Light of Truth society has engaged our good brother, Will J. Erwood, to lecture for them, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, and I to follow with spirit messages.

My independent Sunday evening meeting is having fine success, full houses and seemingly an appreciative audience. There is a young lady, resident of Wichita, who assists me in messages and who bids fair to be a fine platform message bearer—a Miss Morris. The people here enjoy a good circle, and are also greatly interested in the philosophy of our belief.

It seems that my great desire and wish to leave Chicago and get so far away from it that I could not get back in a hurry, has been granted. Not that I wished to leave any of my friends, but because of the struggle for a living, where there are so many workers; and it makes me smile when I think how nicely my desire has been granted. At the same time I am getting homesick to see my dear boy, Frank, and I think it will not be much longer until I pass through my home city, en route for the East, and dear old home in Steubenville, Ohio, the land of my parents and my birth.

A Prominent Medium Speaks of the Deception She Has Witnessed.

It has been some ten years since I first began my investigation of Spiritualism, and since that time I have been a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker and therefore have read a great deal about the deception which is being practiced at the present time in our ranks.

It has brought to my mind many of my own experiences along that line of so-called phenomena, such as materialization, trumpet and slate-writing, etc., and reading an article in No. 827 from Mrs. C. H. Mullins, I thought I would just give a little of my own experience that I have had along that line. I have often thought of doing it before, but as there was so much being said, pro and con, from, I might say, master mind in our ranks, I thought I would keep silent, and watch and pray for the results which might spring from the thoughts being expressed. Knowing Sister Mullins as I have for some time, I know her to be sincere and honest in all she does, and one whom the angel world guides, and I have attended all those places of which our sister speaks and with her I can truly say, Oh! such deception, and I might add, such a hold-up game I never saw before, as I have proven, to my own satisfaction it to be. I believe I have witnessed the slate-writing by the same mediums of whom Mrs. Mullins speaks; if not, the trick was done in the same way. I know just how our sister feels, for I, too, have wept over the deception practiced. I, like her, went in all sincerity and truth, not thinking that any one would stoop so low as to practice such deception.

Oh! what a shame that our fair Spiritualism is being dragged down daily by just such as these, and then we have those who will get on our platforms and will tell all of the wonderful things which they think they have received from that source, and applaud those so-called mediums, and endorse them as almost angels, only they lack the wings.

It makes my heart ache when I think of how many good, honest people, with money and means and a good amount of common sense, who have been turned away from Spiritualism on account of the disgusting things they found being practiced in its name. I will say this, that I have more respect for the hold-up man and the sneak thief, than I have for such so-called mediums. They are not worthy the name, for it is too sacred. I am glad that I had proven, and found the truth of Spiritualism to my own soul's satisfaction, and in the sanctuary of my own home, before I encountered any of this deception. If I had not I would not to-day be enjoying the blessing that I now do.

Good Words for a Worker.

During the absence of our beloved president, F. W. Martin, who is at present in Europe, we are congratulating ourselves on being so fortunate in securing the services of Mrs. Elizabeth G. Reed, of Toledo, who has been conducting our meetings during the month of September. I regret very much that I am deficient in language to express the sentiment of our society in praise of this dear sister. She is an inspirational speaker, and test and message bearer in every sense of the word.

Mrs. Reed gave many interesting thoughts relative to mediumship as the foundation of the revelation of Spiritualism, its philosophy and the value of the same to the world and to humanity, by the knowledge and the tests given through her mediumship, proving the continuity of life in the spheres of eternal existence, and the truth of spirit return by her loving messages and descriptions of spirit friends who come to comfort. She spoke of the influence the planets have over human life according to their ruling characters; what phase of mediumship each person was best adapted to develop, how to rise to supreme heights by concentration and proper thinking.

She advocates peace and the advisability of woman's voting, to help in the reform as Spiritualists teach the principles of the same. Her work was all very interesting, of a high order and appreciated by all who were fortunate enough to get into our well-filled hall. All available space was taken, and the same can be said of our home meetings during the week, many coming from Lorain, Cleveland and Akron.

Wednesday, Sept. 28, closed Mrs. Reed's engagement with our society, when she left for other fields of labor. She will long be remembered by us all, and we trust in the near future that we may have her with us again.

How a Woman Paid Her Debts.

I am out of debt, thanks to the Dish-washer business. In the past three months I have made $600,000 selling Dish-washer. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dish-washer and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family-dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dish-washer sold brings me many orders, the dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dish-washer. I give my experience for the benefit of any one who may wish to make money easy. I buy my Dish-washers from the Mound City Dish-washer Co., 3888 A R LeClede ave., St. Louis, Mo. Write them or particulars. They will start you in business in your own home.

TWENTY MINUTE SERMONS.

Some Comprehensive Reflections in Regard to the Same.

Bishop Potter gives ministers good advice in telling them to preach only twenty minutes. When a Spurgeon or a Beecher arises he may preach as long as he pleases. The longer his sermons are the better his hearers like them. But most clergymen are not Beechers or Spurgeons, and the average minister who preaches more than twenty minutes, by boring and wearying his auditors, undoes, in the last half of his sermon, all the good he has done in the first half.

The Puritan minister usually preached an hour or more. The congregation listened with rapt attention or was moved to demonstrations of religious enthusiasm. Ministers find it difficult to understand why, since people then listened gladly to a long sermon, they now object if it lasts for from thirty to forty-five minutes.

The causes of the change might be hard to give. As to whether the change has taken place or not there can be no question. Not only do people object nowadays to long sermons, but many will not go to hear them who would go to hear short ones. Long-winded sermons have emptied more pews than anything else. The minister may prefer to preach long sermons, but he should consult his hearer's wishes, not his own. He should set before his customers the wares they want.

Preachers accustomed to talking from a half hour to an hour perhaps think that they cannot compress their arguments and exhortations into twenty minutes. Let them try it. They will be surprised to find how many good thoughts may be driven home in that time, if they are expressed as briefly and pointedly as they ought to be. They may also find that, instead of sending their hearers away filled to such repletion that they will never want to come back, they will send them away with just enough pabulum to last until the next time for the next sermon, when they will return hungry for more.

The art of visiting, which many young men never learn, is to make short calls and to be so agreeable and entertaining that when the visitor leaves his hostess regrets his early departure and hopes he will come again. The art of sermonizing and of speech-making is after the same pattern. Speaker or preacher should learn to talk briefly and interestingly, so that when he stops his hearers will regret that he did not talk longer and will be eager to hear him again. He never will lack an audience.

In the common language of the day, let us give the Bishop "the glad hand." Let us endorse with our whole hearts the above ringing words of the Chicago Tribune. The shorter the better for the sermons, even of to-day, with their progressed ideas and systematic precision of construction.

There are many ministers to whom one might listen for an hour, without tiring, but these cases are rare.

This advice might as well come home to Spiritualist lecturers as to those to whom Bishop Potter wishes to refer. The fact is, a subject can be talked to death very easily by the prosaic monotone of the "below-average" preacher in Spiritualism or in the church, and an audience will soon become weary of a mere talker, who talks much and long and says little.

Speaking to our own people, we only wish to say, there is but one Harrison D. Barrett, one J. Clegg Wright, one Prof. Lockwood, one J. S. Loveland, one Lyman C. Howe, one Moses Hull, one Mattie Hull, one Cora L. V. Richmond, one Mary T. Longley, one Jennie H. Brown, etc., etc., on through the list of eloquent speakers in the ranks of Spiritualism; and while the lesser lights may educate to the limit of their understanding and ability, they need not expect to be a Demosthenes or Cicero, a Henry Ward Beecher or an Ingersoll, and hold an audience in profound interest to the last word of a long lecture that is neither profound nor interesting.

Volumes can be said in a few words, and often more in profound silence.

The most inspiring prayer was the "silent prayer" of the Quakers, and perhaps it is in use in that church to-day.

At least a sermon boiled down gives more substance for the amount of talk, and has a far more telling influence, both for the subject and the speaker.

"A STARTLING FACT."

See The Progressive Thinker of September 23.

If it is true, that a number of ancient French words are found in St. Paul's Epistles, then we need no further proof of the fact that they were written by some French scholar, during the Middle Ages; for no French language existed nineteen hundred years ago.

The inhabitants of ancient Gallia were Celts, and spoke a very different tongue. When Julius Caesar conquered this people, shortly before the Christian Era, he Romanized them so thoroughly, language and all, that only few remnants remained of the original language. These remnants, greatly mixed with Latin, became the idiom of the common people, while the educated classes spoke and wrote Latin.

When the Franks, a German tribe, conquered the land, four to five centuries later, they named it "France" and left its civilization as they found it. They even adopted the mixed language and encouraged its further development.

Documents are still existing from the sons of Charlemagne (ninth century), writen in modified Latin. But by and by there developed distinct characteristics, mainly through the efforts of early writers, and towards the end of the Middle Age we find already "Old French," the mother of the French of our day.

Now, if St. Paul introduced in his Epistles an unborn language, would it not beat the phenomenon of Pentecost? But why did it take so long to discover the "Startling Fact"?

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.
600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

Col. Ingersoll's Church.

Two weeks ago we quoted Col. Ingersoll's statement of what constituted his Bible. All who read it were pleased. His church, as told by himself, is no less worthy of approbation. He said:

"I belong to that great church that holds the world within its starlit aisles; that claims as members the great and good of every race and clime; that joys to find the grain of gold in every creed, and floods with light and love the germs of good in every soul."

Who would ask for a nobler church?

A Romish Object Lesson.

An object lesson demonstrating the purposes and methods of the Romish church is afforded by what is occurring in Canada in the province of Ontario. As stated in Secular Thought, published at Toronto, the fact has recently been brought into prominence in consequence of several disputes concerning public schools. In some cases the Catholics have managed to secure possession of the public schools by sharp practices; in others they have built their separate schools within a short distance of the public schools. What seems clear is, that by hook or crook, the Catholics are very rapidly securing control of education in eastern Ontario.

One of the latest cases has occurred at Tweed, a village that marks the Catholic advance as having reached a point in its western progress about one-third of the length of Ontario. Here two Catholic schools have been built within a mile of the public schools; and, though some of the farmers wished to keep their children at the public school, they were compelled by priestly pressure to send them to the new schools.

In this same neighborhood, a large number of Catholic schools have thus been established, and it is probable that several more of the public schools will be closed, in which case the Protestant children will have to tramp four or five miles to school.

In one case the managers gave up the use of the Bible in the school, with the idea of conciliating the Catholic priests, but, as might have been expected, their effort was in vain.

In this district also, a $45,000 church was but recently built, and this had become such a heavy burden upon the farmers that some of them had sold and gone elsewhere. Here, again, the priestly interdict was used to stop the exodus, and some who had made arrangements to leave have succumbed to clerical pressure, and remain to bear the unwelcome burden.

It is asserted that in this district there are no less that seven public schools in which the catechism is regularly taught in school hours, in defiance of the Education Act and the regulations of the Board of Education; but in these Catholic districts the priests openly disregard the law. The rest of the education naturally suffers; so much so, indeed, that in some cases even Catholic parents refuse to send their children to the priest-directed schools.

Secular Thought continues that it is all very well to talk boastfully of our advancing liberalism and freedom, but there is serious danger for us in the near future if the Catholic priests are thus allowed to control and misdirect the schools. It cannot be helped if a farmer allows himself to be browbeaten by his priest, and stays in bondage in his old home, instead of seeking greater liberty and prosperity elsewhere; but surely it is the duty of all free Canadians to prevent the education of the children being neglected, as is invariably the case in Catholic schools in Catholic districts. In large towns, such as Toronto, the Catholic schools are perforce obliged to maintain some sort of efficiency; but in the rural districts, in most cases the education given in the Catholic schools is practically nil. They are, indeed, a menace to the public welfare.

Schools for the inculcation of Romanism are the only schools the Romish church desires, and such schools the priesthood is determined to secure, by lawful or unlawful methods.

Incontrovertible Facts.

All know, or may know, if attention is turned in that direction, that letters and literature were devices of priests in the earlier ages of the race, to govern humanity. All laws, they alleged, came from God; the priests were only the agents of that God who proclaimed his will, and made record of what he had declared to them for preservation.

For several thousand years the authority was not called in question. The hierarchy rode rough-shod over the people. In all the empires of the East, in Babylonia, Assyria, Egypt, Greece, Rome, the priestly head was the reigning monarch. Church and state were one, each department aiding the other.

It is now apparent the priestly device of letters, by which priestcraft and kingcraft gained power and perpetuated it, is to be the instrument of their destruction. Scholars have penetrated ancient secrets, and though good churchmen, they have the nobleness to tell of their discoveries.

Prof. Daniel Volter, a teacher of Divinity in one of the Universities of Germany, has just published a book entitled "Egypt and the Bible." He shows that the earlier books of the Old Testament are but reproductions of the sagas and myths of the Egyptians, altered in some respects and adapted to meet the needs of the Jews. He shows that the Bible account of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Esau, Joseph and Moses, is purely Egyptian. He finds every important feature in the Bible relating to those "patriarchs" even the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, have their counterparts in the Egyptian sagas. Abraham is identical with the Egyptian sun-god Nun, whose wife Nunet, like Sarah, had her first-born in her old age.

Gerald Massey, for twenty years, has been engaged in a similar work to that of Prof. Volter, and though each has labored independent and unknown to the other, they have come to the same conclusions.

Our earlier readers will remember we published during our first year, a voluminous article, occupying some two pages of The Progressive Thinker, from the pen of G. W. Brown, M. D., of Rockford, Ill., entitled "What Did Christianity Borrow From Egypt?" He showed that every feature of the Christian system, including salvation by faith, was of Egyptian origin. Now these Egyptologists go the Doctor one better, and demonstrate that the Old Testament, on which it is claimed Christianity was based, is of Egyptian origin. Verily, we live in a critical age, and Error must recede before the advance of Truth.

A Hopeful Outlook.

It has been our sad fortune during the last few years to be present at the burial services of several dear friends which were conducted by clergymen of the olden faith. In every instance we were surprised and rejoiced to note the change in the discourses in contrast with earlier years. This was so marked, had we not been informed the speaker was a member of one of the old churches and was ministering with approbation in a Christian pulpit, he would have been mistaken for a Spiritualist lecturer.

This evidences the fact, as frequently mentioned in these editorial columns, that the sects of all denominations are accepting the revelations of spirit return and communion with their mortal brothers.

In the beginning the ambition of Spiritualists was, that all the churches accept the new revelation, and engraft it on the old; but the clergy repulsed every movement in that direction, and ridiculed the idea that the resurrected would leave their blissful abode in heaven, and return again to earth to tell of the joys of their new home. With the honest and thoughtful this is changed. Now there is no desire of the best informed Spiritualists to engraft their better faith on the errors stolen by the church from ancient Paganism. They cannot accept the ancient belief of an offended God, a fallen race, the need of a Redeemer to restore man to his pristine condition. Blood atonement of barbaric origin, they have no need of, so they choose to remain outside the churches, firm in the conviction that the latter will give way, and a better faith will be built on the ruins. Such is certain to be the final outcome. The race is too intelligent to always cling to the rude concepts of an uncultured people of from two thousand to five thousand years ago. Religious knowledge has been retarded through all the centuries by priestcraft and priestly interests.

Light on Bible Literature.

Dr. Koldewey, the head of the German Exploring Expedition to the site of ancient Babylon, where he has been operating for the last two years, has made some very important archeological finds, which throw additional light on that old-time civilization. The throne room of Nebuchadnezzar, a magnificent structure, 59 feet wide and 169 feet long, has been opened. A niche where stood the throne, is well preserved, with magnificently colored decorations on the walls, telling of the glory of ancient art. An abundance of new tablets have been found with important inscriptions, containing psalms, letters, contracts, word lists, and other records. In the near future excavations will be extended to what is believed to be the Babylonian pantheon, the temple of all their gods.

Says a semi-Christian daily, "This new find will add to the material for the interpretation of the Old Testament both historically and linguistically."

Yes, it will do just what all other discoveries in ancient ruins have done, aid in demonstrating that the historical features of that pretended old Jew book, are but a collection and adaptation of Babylonian and Assyrian literature to Hebrew mythology, now received as a "Thus saith the Lord!"

Buddhism Taking Root in America.

The Buddhists have determined to build a temple in Los Angeles, the first in America. The necessary money is reported in reach. The structure is to be built on a scale of grandeur not equaled in this country, Oriental architecture being employed.

It is reported the Buddhists have a large mission in Los Angeles, with many American converts, among them some persons of wealth. There is very much in the Buddhistic faith we admire. Their religion has not been propagated by the sword; neither have they sacrificed doves, and larks and bullocks on bloody altars to an avenging God to placate his anger.

Tainted Money and Tainted Creeds.

There is a degree of reason in the opinion that Rev. Frank C. Bruner is sound on the "tainted money" question, of which so much has been heard of late. In a sermon quite recently he said:

"We have been hearing altogether too much about tainted money. There is no such thing. To say money is tainted is a misnomer. The taint is in the moral bent of a man. Money is taintless. It may be current in harlotry, gambling and drunkenness. To talk about the legitimate utility of money is superlative nonsense. The exchange of currency from the till of a saloon into the exchequer of the church makes that money holy if the treasureship is clean and the creed is untainted.

"It would have been far better if Dr. Washington Gladden had spent his strength in getting the taint out of the creeds of the church and the uncleanness from the officials in high religious places.

"A creed that advocates an element of fatalism and the destiny of childhood to perdition and a degree that a certain church retains in its dogmatism, the only certainty of eternal salvation; that is a taintfulness that in the ultimatum will lead to everlasting rot in the kingdom of demoninationalism."

No taint attaches to money that is used with good intent, for a good purpose, such, for instance, as a subscription for The Progressive Thinker.

There may be an immoral taint in the method of acquiring money—as for instance by selling worthless mining stock to poor widows or others, it being glowingly advertised as of great value—but this does not vitiate the money or its use for a good purpose.

Far worse than so-called tainted money can possibly be, are the tainted creeds of orthodoxy, with their false and soul-tainting dogmas concerning God and man instilled into the minds of young and old, perverting human minds from the ethical principles founded in human nature and its relations. Catholic and orthodox Protestant churches alike are tainted with false and immoral conceptions and beliefs, subversive of morality and degrading in their effects upon mankind.

Yes, tainted creeds are a worse curse than tainted money.

Angels and Angels.

Quite a ripple of excitement is agitating the usually placid minds of our Protestant Episcopal brethren down east because the sculptured angels at the Belmont Memorial chapel and the cathedral of St. John the Divine are all lady angels. The result of the flurry over the discovery is that the sculptor has been ordered to change the faces of some thirty or forty of the angels from ladies to—to gentlemen.

This is because of the fact that all of the angels mentioned in the Bible bear masculine names—not one lady in the entire lot.

This remarkable fact may be considered distinctly complimentary to womankind, or not, just as one views it. Certainly some of the deeds attributed to Bible angels would be considered very unjust and cruel, even barbarous, if they were done in our day, even among savages.

In II. Samuel, xxiv, we read of an angel who slew seventy thousand people because King David had taken a census of Israel and Judah. We may be sure this angel was not a lady.

Passing over accounts of other Bible angels, including those that "kept not their first estate"—mentioned by Jude; and those mentioned by Peter, as "angels that sinned" and were "cast down to hell"—none of whom are designated as ladies, we may continue our little sermonette by enouncing as a fact that the ideas concerning angels, as elaborated in those days of semi savagery, would partake of the mental characteristics of the uncultured and unrefined people of that day and time.

Woman was a sort of slave, wholly secondary and inferior to man, convenient to have around as a servant and a bearer of children. "In her place," she was of use, and a good thing, but her place was subordinate to the glory and greatness of her "superior" man.

To have pictured or described an angel as a woman would have been wholly out of harmony with the ideas that prevailed in those days in the minds of such unrefined people.

Of course under such conditions, no lady angels could be expected to receive mention in their holy writings.

On the whole, the women of our civilization, may rather take it as a compliment that the Bible has no mention of lady angels.

We might properly point to the difference in this matter, between the old Jewish idea, and the teachings of Modern Spiritualism. A very instructive comparison might be instituted.

Shamefully False.

"Thus saith the Lord: 'Behold, I will fill all the inhabitants of this land, even the kings that sit on David's throne, and the priests, and the prophets, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem with drunkenness. And I will dash them one against another, even the fathers and the sons together,' saith the Lord. 'I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy them.'"

Thus says Jeremiah13:13, 14. He concludes with: "Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud; for the Lord hath spoken."

The Progressive Thinker desires to say, "The Lord" never said any such thing. It is a gross libel on the Monarch of all worlds, and it is blasphemous to publish it as emanating from him. It is the words of a vulgar priest, who falsified the mighty Ruler to accomplish some ignoble purpose by frightening his people and making them submissive to priestly will.

How Christians can be guilty of dishonoring the God they worship by accepting such shameful misrepresentations as the "Word of God," "inerrant Scripture," "Divine Revelation," is more than we can understand. And yet it is heard every Sunday from what should be a truthful pulpit: "Every word between the two lids of that book came from God; it is faultless in character; given us by Infinite Wisdom for our guidance, and it must be accepted as such; and he who rejects it is a candidate for everlasting fire, and the worm that dieth not." ATTENTION, SPIRITUALISTS!

The President of the N. S. A. Issues a Stirring Call.

No Spiritualist should forget the thirteenth National convention of the Spiritualists of America that will open Oct. 17 in the Unitarian church in Minneapolis, Minn. Every one who believes in Spiritualism and desires the work to be carried forward along progressive lines should plan to attend the convention. It is the most important gathering ever called together under the banner of Spiritualism, from the fact that the work it has to do is most vital to the cause of reform, to ethics, and to religious unfoldment.

Among the numerous items of business that will be acted upon by the convention may be mentioned the licensing of mediums under the laws of different states. The coming convention will endeavor to act in such a manner as to secure exemption for all worthy persons from the provisions of the license law.

Another vital question is the definition of our terms in such wise as will enable the courts of our land to discriminate between true spiritual mediumship and commercialism. No question of greater moment has ever been presented to the Spiritualists of the world.

A proposed change in the Declaration of Principles, and an extension of the sessions of future conventions from four days to seven will prove interesting topics to every thoughtful mind.

The Lyceum, the Editor-at-Large, the History of Spiritualism, are all topics of interest to all progressive thinkers.

The reports of the president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer will introduce no less than fifty separate items of business, every one of which is of importance to our cause as a whole.

The augmenting of the Pension Fund to generous proportions is likewise a matter of interest to every true-blue Spiritualist. Plans will be offered looking to the raising of an endowment fund of one hundred thousand dollars during the next five years.

Counterfeiting in mediumship will also be dealt with in a fair and impartial manner.

In fine, every business item means something to every intelligent Spiritualist, hence every intelligent Spiritualist owes it to himself and to Spiritualism to attend this great convention.

Aside from the interesting and all-important business matters that will be considered by the convention, are numerous other attractions that cannot fail to interest the thoughtful Spiritualist.

The evening meetings will be free to all and some of the ablest speakers in our ranks will address the assembled multitudes. Platform messages from true and tried psychics will follow each address. These, with the splendid music that will be presented, every session will be veritable feasts for all who are so fortunate as to be present. These evening gatherings will be well worth the cost of a trip to Minneapolis.

Reduced rates have been obtained from all of the leading railroads of the land, on the certificate plan. This reduces the cost of travel to a minimum figure, and brings the convention within the reach of almost every one who takes an outing every year. Those who attend will be repaid five-fold for every dollar they pay out in the good they do as delegates, and the instruction they receive as visitors and lookers-on. It will be a year-memory of great power and beauty, rewarding the one who makes a sacrifice to take the trip, every day after he returns home.

President Maxwell and his aides have done yeoman service to make the convention of value to all. The Spiritualists of Minnesota do not do things by the halves; they have guaranteed the N. S. A. in such wise as to have free doors every night at the convention. The hands of these unselfish workers should be upheld, and it is earnestly hoped that our brethren throughout the nation will profit by this noble, unselfish example. Would it not be the right thing for every Spiritualist in Minnesota to send President Maxwell a dollar to help the State Association in its good work?

Then there is the good fellowship side of the convention to be considered. Old friends will meet again after years of separation, new friendships that are to last forever will be formed, warm hand-clasps, words of encouragement, helpful suggestions from each to each will be exchanged. Truly the convention will be a veritable oasis in the dreary desert of a year's hard work, hence every one should go to it for rest and recreation. No one can really afford to stay away! Go to Minneapolis and make yourselves living influences in the mighty work of Spiritualism. You are needed by the convention as much as you need its helpful cheer. Go and you will never regret it! It will be the memory of a lifetime and you cannot afford to be without it. You will never miss the expense a year hence, and you will have the consciousness that you have done your full duty in the case.

Spiritualists of America, present yourselves in the Unitarian church in Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 17, and stay there until the convention closes! Now is your opportunity! Embrace it and do good to yourselves and to all your fellowmen! Yours for Spiritualism,

HARRISON D. BARRETT,
President N. S. A.

THE RESTLESS CONFEDERATE.

A Mother and Aunt Had a Curious Experience in the South.

My mother and aunt had a curious experience in the south. A large brick house in the neighborhood was said to be haunted and was closed. While driving to town one afternoon they saw the figure of a delicate looking young man seated on the upper balcony of this house. Two hours later the figure had not moved and my aunt remarked that it was odd that any one should want to stay so long in that place, especially as the house was closed and the weather cold.

A friend hired the house, and while on the balcony one day waiting for the children's return from school saw this same figure seated beside her. On asking him what he wanted he disappeared.

Another person hired the house two years later, and, standing in the upper hall, saw this figure pass across the open drive way. Rushing out to see who it was she found nothing. The negroes talked much about the house and its peculiarities.

Later we heard that a young confederate officer had lived there and parted from his sweetheart never to return. His spirit was supposed to return in quest of some thing he could not find.

"BEWARE OF THE PSYCHICS."

Rev. T. B. Gregory Tries His Hand at Putting Down Spiritualism.

The Rev. Thomas B. Gregory, in the Los Angeles Examiner of Sept. 21, in giving a part of the story of Clarence Ladd Davis, who it is said attempted suicide in New York City, ends by moralizing in the following manner:

"Beware of the psychics;" "It is a dangerous thing to fool with!" "If fooled with long enough it will destroy your usefulness and wind up by making a lunatic of you." "Common sense and every-day reason are good enough for any of us." "Be satisfied with knowing how usefully and honorably to live down here on the earth, without trying for one moment to lift the curtain that nature has dropped between the Finite and the Infinite. * * * "

Now isn't that refreshing? What are these Reverends doing if they are not "trying to lift the curtain nature has dropped," and telling us all about what the "Infinite" God has decreed? how he has prepared a great mansion surrounding the white throne, and eternal happiness as a reward for the faithful, and hell's fires for the wicked who will be everlastingly damned?

Oh, it is all right to guess at things, or to tell the people that which you know nothing about, can not demonstrate or establish by competent witnesses, but it is all wrong to study "psychics"—the science of the soul and its phenomena.

Let us apply Rev. Thomas B. Gregory's reasoning to another case:

Jones, a young man of excellent morals and an enviable reputation, was dragged into the church and Sunday-school by his family and friends, including the pastor in charge; here all went well for a time, when suddenly, two young women of the same flock and associates of the model young man were found dead, brutally murdered. Our hero was arrested and tried, and failing to satisfactorily account for his whereabouts at the time it was supposed the crime had been committed, the jury found him guilty and he was later executed. Years after the triple crime had been committed, the pastor in charge where these three young people had sought for knowledge of the beyond the "curtain," and who had been active in his efforts to fasten the murder of the two young ladies and the other more heinous offense upon our hero, confessed on his death bed to the unmentionable crime committed on the young women, and the murder to hide his crime. And this is no isolated case.

Hundreds of cases can be cited of men and women who having lived years of healthy, normal lives, when brought under the influence of frenzied religious excitement lost their balance and landed in the whirlpool of insanity, crime and even debauchery.

Now, by the same rule of logic used by the Rev. Thomas B. Gregory we have, Moral: "Beware of the church and Sunday-school!" "It is a dangerous thing to fool with!" "If fooled with long enough it will destroy your usefulness and wind up by making you a debauchee, a murderer and a lunatic!" "Keep close to the earth. Don't attempt to ride off into the circumambient ether, astride of a moonbeam or a flicker of the Aurora Borealis!" Under such logic where is the Rev. Gregory at? What has he done to the church? One world at a time has been the cry for years, but if literally applied where would it land us?

Under such teachings Columbus would never have come to America and the red men might still be chasing the buffalo over the spot where now the city of Phoenix stands. Where would be our boasted civilization, our progress in the sciences, mechanics, arts, etc., for all these once were like psychics, beyond the "curtain which nature has dropped between the Finite and the Infinite."

That one word "Beware," has for ages been applied as a brake to the wheels of the car of progress, with incalculable injury and appalling effect. Beware! of everything except what the church teaches. "If you think, you are lost." If you investigate, you will be damned. It would seem that the sole passport to heaven and eternal happiness were ignorance, self-abasement and blind following of church teachings.

In his closing paragraph the Rev. Gregory's advice is too good to pass without comment:

"Learn how to keep your stomachs healthy and your conscience clear, how to love one another, and be honest and just." Isn't this most excellent? Would that he had advised as soundly all through his article as the paragraph just quoted.

But to finish, "and a fig for the rest." Well, well! has the Rev. Gregory cut loose from the church? Does he mean to cut out the saving faith dogma and swing us into heaven on an ethical platform alone?

When we write for instruction of the people, let us be fair, let us be honest, let us be reasonable. I am for the cause of truth. GEO. HEFFNER.

ANNUAL CONVENTION

Of the National Spiritualists' Association.

The thirteenth annual convention of the National Spiritualists' Association will be held in the First Unitarian Church, Eighth street and Mary Place, Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 and 20, 1905.

This gathering will be one of the grandest convocations ever held in the name of Spiritualism; no one, no matter what his sect or faith, should fail to attend, while Spiritualists can afford to sacrifice much, if necessary, in order to be present at every session.

Note the fine array of platform talent expected to be present and participate in the exercises, none better in the world: Prof. W. F. Peck, Dr. Austin, Will J. Erwood, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, Mrs. Ressegue, Oscar Edgerly, Mrs. Lillie, Mrs. Fixen, Eva McCoy, Margaret Gaule-Redinger, and a host of others.

The musical program, under the auspices, for one-half of the convention, of the well known artiste, Mme. Ida May Poulson, and for the other half, of Prof. Paul Zumbach, will be a rare treat which none will care to miss.

The business sessions will be of the utmost importance and interest; come and listen to them even if you are not delegates.

The lyceum movement will be explained to you by its enthusiast, John W. Ring, the general superintendent of lyceums; he has something more than good to tell you of the children of the lyceum.

Come one and all and give your influence and encouragement to the N. S. A. and its hard-working auxiliaries. Secure your rooms at the Nicollet Hotel, one dollar a day for good accommodations—a first-class cafe is attached to the hotel. Be sure and get certificate tickets at your home railroad office and by it secure your return trip for one-third regular fare; bring those certificate tickets to convention with you.

All sessions, day and evening, open to the public, FREE.

STRANGE WORK OF TELEPATHY.

Mankind Developing the Sixth Sense in Wireless Telegraphy of the Brain—A Race of Soothsayers—Some Startling Experiences of Englishmen Related—Occult Forces at Work.

A series of remarkable experiences in mental telepathy is being contributed by Englishmen to a discussion now proceeding in the London newspapers as to whether the human race is developing a sixth sense in the form of wireless telegraphy of the brain.

Hundreds of startling incidents are related and the widespread ability of people to foretell circumstances affecting themselves is believed by London doctors to indicate that evolution is developing mankind into a race of soothsayers.

George R. Sims, a well-known writer, says that he dreamt his sister was standing at his bedside and told him some one was dead. The next day his sister called at his house and told him his brother-in-law had died during the night.

Last year Mr. Sims was in Lausanne with his wife. They were to depart for Chamounix, and the night before they left Mrs. Sims dreamt that when they got to Chamounix her husband would receive a black-bordered envelope announcing the death of someone. After their arrival at Chamounix no letter came, but in its place a telegram announcing that Mr. Sims' nephew had been drowned the previous day.

The Rev. Prebendary Granville declares that on three nights he dreamt that a newly constructed vault in the graveyard of his church had become flooded and the coffins in the vault were floating about on the water. He ordered the sexton to investigate, and there was discovered an exact fulfillment of his dream.

Another man while ill dreamt that his doctor called on him and said, "Would you like to go for a drive with me?" The patient dreamt that he went, and in the course of the drive the doctor said, "I would like to take you back to lunch, but unfortunately we have only cold mutton, which would hardly do for an invalid, would it?" Two days after the doctor called, invited the patient to go driving, and on the way home made the same remark about liking to take the invalid home to lunch, but being debarred by the cold mutton.

B. H. Sherard says while he was in France several years ago he was impelled by some mysterious force to visit an old friend of his, Prof. Fenine, a Russian revolutionist. When he arrived at the place where Fenine lived he was told the man had just died.

Some time later, while walking along one of the Parisian streets, a thought came to him that it was urgent that he call on his friend, Alphonse Daudet. He arrived at Daudet's house, put his hand on the door bell to ring it, but changed his mind and walked away. The next day the newspapers announced Daudet's death. He had died almost at the very minute when Sherard grasped the door bell.

Recently, while engaged on certain memoirs of his life in Paris, Sherard had written about his acquaintance with William Bouguereau, the painter. He wrote of him as dead, when suddenly the question presented itself to him whether Bouguereau was really dead. He could not remember definitely, and put the matter by until next day. The next morning the papers had the death notice of the great painter, who had passed away the night before.

Innumerable other incidents similar to these are being vouched for by persons of prominence, and they are thus explained by Dr. McNamara, a wellknown London physician:

"Physiology teaches that whenever a nerve is stimulated or whenever a muscle contracts an electric impulse flashes along the nerve and through the muscle. So, also, when a thought passes through the brain, a discharge of energy in the form of vibrations in all probability passes through the brain cells. These vibrations, transmitted through space, will meet certain brains prepared to receive them in somewhat the same way as the receiver in wireless telegraphy is prepared to receive the wireless message."

"Success, and How to Win It." A lecture and course of twenty-four success lessons by Dr. B. F. Austin, B. A., D. D. The titles of some of the lectures are as follows: Self Helps; Financial Success; Ideals; Economy; Planning; Attraction; Courtesy; Kindness and Tact; Angelic Help. Price 25 cts. HER DOUBLE SEEN THERE.

The House of Her Dreams Realized.

Since the Carne Rasch incident in the London House of Commons a good deal has been heard of the "astral body" and the "double." Perhaps the best story of the kind is that related by the late Augustus J. C. Hare of a Mrs. Butler, a popular lady living in Ireland, who dreamed almost every night for a long period that she was spending the hours in a most delightful house, with an enchanting garden and conservatory. About twelve years ago the Butlers gave up their place in Ireland and went to look at a house in Hampshire, which Mrs. Butler recognized as the house of her dreams, and surprised the housekeeper by telling her the position of all the rooms. Only once was she puzzled, and that was by a door which she had not seen in her dreams, and which the housekeeper explained had only been there a few weeks.

When the Butlers had completed the purchase of the house, they asked the agent why the price was so small. He replied that it had had the reputation of being haunted; "but you, madam," he added, "need be under no apprehension, for you are yourself the ghost." As a matter of fact, on the nights when Mrs. Butler had dreamed she was at the house, her "double" had been seen there.—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE MARCH OF FIFTY YEARS.

A Sturdy, Stirring and Characteristic Lecture, Delivered in the Spiritual Church of Baltimore, Md., by J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A.

The March of Fifty Years—Universalism and Spiritualism—Old Memories, Slavery and Freedom—Animal Before Man—Church Progress—The Decline of Spiritism—Where can the Soul's Rest Be Found?—Is Spiritualism a Finality—Watchman, What of the Night?

It will be fifty years in a few months since I became the pastor of the First Universalist Church in this goodly city of Baltimore. There was but one church of this denomination here then, and there is but one at the present time—a tardy growth. And yet there are doubtless a number of pulpits where the cheering doctrine of the final restoration of all human intelligencies is believed, if not openly preached.

The leavening, diffusing principles of Universalism have far outstripped its organization policy. Its creed proved to be a moral pest. Its gospel requires no crutch. Universalism's chief work is done. And yet, touching the final harmony of the universe, I am still a Universalist. Universalism literally dug the grave of Calvinism. It is a beautiful faith. And though comparatively young and somewhat ambitious, fifty and sixty years ago I was just as sincere and conscientious then as now while standing on this broader pulpit platform. It is but just to say that preachers generally are honest, and often exceedingly self-sacrificing; but they dreamily lag in the grand march of achievement. Many of their churches are moss-shingled. They echo the old "Thus saith the Lord." They know nothing comparatively of psychoses, little of psychological science, or of those psychic phenomena, objective and subjective, that demonstrate man's future existence with the superior opportunities and varied employments, relating to that existence.

Every one must cognize the difficulty of adjusting and harmonizing slavery of any kind with the doctrine of a universal brotherhood. This, I never attempted. Nevertheless, in this Southern slavery city, I preached the best I knew, preached the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, the final salvation of all mankind, and we sung with ringing enthusiasm:

"Go preach the great salvation—preach it present, full and free, Go preach the great salvation—go sound the jubilee."

But thinking, reading, investigating, traveling in foreign lands, serving as a United States Consul in Asiatic Turkey, studying the Oriental religions, and working these fifty years and more in such reform-fields as Anti-slavery, Temperance, Medical Progress, Dress Reform, Arbitration and Peace, Woman's Suffrage, Hygienic Food, Psychology, and witnessing psychic phenomena through hundreds of sensitives, I trust that I am somewhat wiser now than half a century ago. Certainly, touching the future state of existence, I have followed the Apostolic injunction: "Add to your faith knowledge."

Conviction and Church Ordinances.

Deeply interested in phrenology, mesmerism, medieval occultism, and also Spiritualism, attending some of Judge Edmonds' seances in New York, and others earlier, I became thoroughly convinced of a conscious communion between the world visible and invisible. It was to me a fact—a momentous fact—and to show my outspoken sincerity, I exchanged Sunday services once with the eloquent R. P. Ambler, then a Spiritualist lecturer in this city, but afterwards a Unitarian preacher. Illness, outspoken Spiritualism and anti-slavery politics caused some dissatisfaction, and I resigned, the church upon my leaving, kindly passing cordial resolutions on my "intellectual capabilities" and "good Christian character." These documents I have retained intact.

But here was a crisis, a salaried bread-and-butter crisis. What should I do, conceal the mighty truth of immortality proven, and sail smoothly on, gently hinting occasionally at the possibility and biblical prophecy of a present-time ministry of spirits? Should I play the pulpit hypocrite? Should my gospel trumpet continue to give a hopeful, yet "uncertain sound"? Should I from policy or moral cowardice shrink from declaring the whole "counsel of God," which counsel embodied the precious present-day demonstrations of angelic ministries, coupled with beautiful messages of love from kindred souls gone before? Perish the thought of such cringing cowardice! I said in the silence of that long ago, "No shackles shall bind these hands, no padlock shall hold these lips, even though glittering blades gash, creaking dungeon doors close, the fires of persecution be kindled, and the cross again be built. No coward hand long waves the Pythian laurel, nor unworthy head wears the Olympic wreath. Such is destiny. The stars teach it. Prophets tell it, and inexorable justice demonstrates it.

And then adding to my Spiritualistic heresy, (in the estimation of the Whittemorean Trumpet, Boston,) I purchased and distributed John C. Fremont's pamphlets, and Horace Greeley Tribunes constituting a compound politico-religio heresy. Maryland at this time was as rigid a slave state as South Carolina, and a pronounced abolitionism was the synonym of political and social ostracism.

Some of my church members (very excellent people) believed in the symbol and the spiritual efficacy of water baptism, and to gratify their convictions, I immersed them. The first one that I led down into the water was Mrs. Ironmonger, whom I baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. This gave great dissatisfaction to a few, because I omitted the words "the Father" and the "Holy Ghost," but I did not, even then, believe in the Calvinistic Trinity, nor the vicarious atonement, nor in endless hell torments.

During this pastorate I was called out several times in midnight hours to christen children, supposed to be dying. One of these venerable gentlemen—L. R. Keech, 930 W. North avenue, now in his 85th year, has attended my meetings in the Spiritual Church. His little thought-to-be-dying child which I christened fifty years ago, he informs me, is now Mrs. Selby, in Pittsburg, Pa. Surely our deeds live long after us in memory.

A number of my Sunday-school scholars of the long ago past were at our church Sunday evenings, and a majority of them are now Spiritualists. It did my soul good to again meet them. And so Universalism here, as it has elsewhere, has in some cases budded and blossomed out into Spiritualism; but Spiritualism in its mere phenomenal aspects, remember, is no finality.

Again, do I vividly remember going out once, while a Baltimore pastor, thirty miles to preach in a Maryland village schoolhouse. There was but one Universalist in the place. Only seven, all men, attended my meeting. The orthodox ridiculing the gathering the next day, pronounced it a "he meeting." Universalism was almost infinitely more unpopular then in Maryland than Spiritualism is now. Rich and respectable people would not be seen at Universalists' meetings. The doctrine was considered immoral, and the stock argument was; "If I am right, you are lost; but if you are right, I am safe, because all men, you say, will be saved." I am still a Universalist, and also a Spiritualist, and I may add, a Believer, a Buddhist, and very much of a Vedantist. There is good in all. God alone is infallible.

We all remember the pious old lady who, when told of the progress of Universalism, and its belief in the repentance and final salvation of all men, exclaimed in horror, "I hope for better things."

The present liberal, cultured and eloquent pastor of the Baltimore Universalist Church and myself have interchanged the courtesies of mutually attending each other's Sunday services. This was not only open justice, but an exhibition of manliness, fraternity and non-sectarian good will. As aforesaid, I am still a Universalist in all that that far-reaching word means.

Seventy-Nine Years Ago.

Vivid are my memories of seventy-seven, seventy-eight, seventy-nine and eighty years ago. Distinctly do I remember the funeral of Aunt Sally Corkings in winter time, and of asking my mother when the coffin was lowered into the grave, if she would "sprout and come up in the spring as corn did."

In those old days of grim Calvinistic piety, we poor children were afraid of bogies, ghosts and preachers. When old Elder Jones used to come to my father's house, we used to hide under the bed, fearing to be catechised. His solemn tones chilled us. He never smiled, nor said God like other people, but in a deep, sort of a grunting groan, he would say, "Our G-a-w-d is a consuming fire." Being old physically, and rather-weak, he usually took a good swig of New England rum before entering the pulpit. This was not really against him, as it was a common custom at that period. Doubtless this preacher of my boyhood time was sincere and conscientious, and one whose little vices, like Goldsmith's parson, "leaned to virtue's side."

The Abominated Sunday.

In those grim old times, Sunday was childhood's day to be hated. Playing in the yard was pronounced sinful; whistling was strictly forbidden, and the violin and bass-viol were scornfully called "fiddling in church." Prayers, first praising and fulsomely flattering God; then giving him some hints of past biblical promises unfulfilled, tipped with a few practical suggestions, were usually longer than the sermons are of to-day.

Much of this old-style Sabbath-day dislike and superstition was doubtless inspired and deduced by such Old Testament teachings as these, recorded in the Book of Numbers, where a man was charged with picking up sticks on the Sabbath. Moses, referring the case to the Lord, the Lord said unto Moses, "The man shall be surely put to death; all the congregation shall stone him with stones without the camp. And all the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones, and he died; as the Lord commanded Moses."

That Mosaic Lord, the tutelary Jehovah of the Jews, is as dead now as the Grecian Zeus that thundered from Olympus; or as the old-throne-mounted Jupiter of the Romans. Those, and other gods, are dead—dead and buried. But the Infinite Presence, embodying consciousness, and life, purpose and will, is immutable and eternal. This God was, is, and ever will be, Uncaused Causation!

What Achievements Since I Was a Flaxen-Haired Schoolboy!

Compared with to-day, there were few newspapers and magazines then, and no railroads. Now we are flooded with literature—especially spongy, shilly-shally novels—bicycles and locomotives. Then farmers had the scythe, the sickle and the crude, old-style cradle. Now we have the mower, the reaper and the harvester. Then the teacher had the stone pencil and the goose-quill. Now we have the steel pen, the fountain pen and the typewriter. Then we had the stage coach, the clumsy chaise, and the rumbling lumber wagon. Now we have the railroad, the bicycle and the automobile. Then we had the crude oil and the tallow candle-dip. Now we have the gas light, the electric light, and the Roentgen rays. Then we had the old-fashioned, clumsy hand-printing press. Now we have the cylinder press, the linotype, lithography and colored photography. Then, in my academic days, 1838-9-40, our chemistry had about twenty-seven chemical elements, and atoms were indivisible entities; now we have over seventy elements, and atoms have been transformed into points of force, while within, around, above, everywhere—there is a measureless, ethereal realm of ether.

For the stairway, we have the elevator; for the fire hand-bucket, the fire-engine and hose; for the sailing-ship and the paddle-wheel propeller, we have the rushing, dashing, sea-palace steamer. For the Indian-invented signal fires on the mountain, we have the telegraph, the telephone, wireless telegraphy, and vibratory psychic action cognized at a distance. For our mothers' spinning-wheels, looms and shuttles, we have a vast number of woolen mills and cotton factories. For experimental butchery and autopsic examinations of the cadaver, we have the microscope, clairvoyance, auras and photographic rays emitted from the human body, which rays, or radiations, reveal quality of character. For calomel, drastic cathartics, cupping and bleeding, we have mild, magnetized medicines, homeopathic doses, alkaloids, hygiene, sunshine, suggestion and will-power. For that old-time hell of fire and brimstone, with its smoke ascending up forever and ever, we have a cooler and more comfortable conscience-hell—a wine-producing hell (Gehenna), just outside the walls of Jerusalem, where the "worm" has died, and where grapes redden and ripen in richest luxuriance. For a personal, semi-omnipotent devil, driven out of heaven after battle to roam about the universe like a roaring lion, raising the deuce everywhere, we have the mischief-making diakka, and hosts of obsessing demons, the majority of which are yet vestured in the flesh—as grafters, misers and murderers.

For salvation through "the atoning blood" of a martyred Jew, we have sanitarium plunge-baths, and salvation by and through conduct and character. Being "reconciled," wrote Paul, "we are saved by his life,"—that is, by the living of the true, beneficent, altruistic and Christ-like life. For the gibbet, the fire, the stake and the feet-manacling stocks of a bygone churchianic bigotry, we have the broad-minded principles of charity, toleration and brotherhood; for the superstition of the Puritan times, we have the religion of research and love; and for the lurid gloom of death, we have the garden-gate that opens into realms of ineffable beauty and blessedness.

Progress, Political and Religious.

One of the first things that I heard my old Scotch-enthused grandfather talk about was the "English reform bill," which in 1832 in England measurably equalized representation, permitting the people to select their members of Parliament; but sad to state, conservative England is, in some directions, still politically behind some of her colonies. In New Zealand women vote upon all matters pertaining to law, order and government, and in her parliament there sit several native-born Maoris.

Capital punishment in Christian countries, based upon the old Mosaic law of retaliation, is diametrically opposed not only to intuition, and to the innate love of life, but to the higher, inspired command, "Thou shalt not kill." It is gradually dying, and yet as late as 1837, for altering wills or forging notes in England, persons were hanged—legally murdered; an inherited relic of barbarism. It was as early as 1807, if historic memory serves me, that Fulton had run a rather uncouth steamer on the Hudson; and yet it was not until 1833 that regular lines of ocean steamboats were established for trans-Atlantic traffic. There was at this period much moral as well as mechanical progress. Human rights were ably discussed in the press, and in 1834 the British government fully and finally abolished human slavery. In this great reform movement England led America, and it also has bravely led us in abolishing her "compulsory vaccination law," thus giving her citizens the benefit of the "conscience clause." Vaccination under the British flag is optional. Children in those countries are allowed to attend school unpoisoned by any beastly virus compulsorily forced into their pure blood.

Progress is in the air. Referring back to the 16th century we remember its fine artists; to the 17th, we consider its able writers; to the 18th, we note its many occult investigators and some philosophers; and to the 19th, awake with discoveries, we observe the Hydesville sensitives, the great Poughkeepsie seer, several prophets and visionists who caught golden glimpses of this 20th century, during which wars for conquest will inevitably end, and international wars be known no more. Drunkenness will be abolished by right generation, early education and proper environment; woman's suffrage will be considered an inalienable right; land will become as free to the cultivators as the air they breathe; the selfish millionaire's "mine" will bud and bloom into the fraternal "ours." Christians will become sufficiently civilized to no longer encourage "boys' brigades"; no longer graft and gamble to pay off church debts; no longer build great threatening navies; no longer fight like the "pious savages of Russia, urged on by Greek church priests wearing cowl and cross. Neither will millionaires sound trumpets before their university gifts, nor will Christian grocerymen put chalk in their sugar, chicory in their coffee, and the biggest strawberries on the top of the basket; nor will they talk principle and practice the most slippery policy—talk "altruism and brotherhood" and practice robbery.

Persecuting Intolerance.

Nature is a mirror. It is well to look into it and consider. The body, though clothed in silks thick as mummy wrappings, does not hide the soul-body's scars from angel eyes. There are spiritists—not Spiritualists—so inflated with self, and so infilled with the gall of New England Puritanism, that they would "burn in effigy" Spiritualist writers, and their books, or "impale them on some grinning devil's red-hot pitchfork," and all for opinion's sake.

When Endicott was governor of Massachusetts in 1657, Quakers for their religious opinions were scourged, branded or banished, their books and pamphlets burned, and they were threatened by the governor in these words: "Take heed that ye break not our ecclesiastical laws, for then ye are sure to stretch by a halter."

Soon after the "psychological Congress" convened in Barcelona, Spain, 1860, the fiery-souled Jesuit priests ordered and made a public auto-da-fe of all spiritistic books and pamphlets in the city. This Roman Catholic Jesuitism, now sheltering in certain obsession-promoting circles under the name of "spiritism," will gradually be sifted out, and persecuting spiritists, will, we trust, make rapid strides towards the goal of liberalism, towards the mighty majesty of a true, tolerant, uplifting Spiritualism, the synonym of that harmonial philosophy inspirationally enunciated and booked by the illustrious seer, Andrew Jackson Davis.

The Animal Before the Man.

"O ye hypocrites! Ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" The signs in Orient and Occident are prophetic of good; yet through further and deeper tribulations. Pain is the prelude to progress. The acorn-shell aches before it bursts. The child in falling gets not only experience, but strength in the rising. Blood of Indians, Frenchmen and Englishmen flowed freely before the flag of national freedom waved over the inviting lakes and rivers, the grainless fields and massive forests of America. Arbitration should have been substituted, and those wars avoided. William Penn set the example in treating the Indian tribes. He met them as brothers.

And yet cruel wars must go on for a time, I fear. The animal is not yet all eliminated from the make-up of the man. The tares must be gathered and burned. Fire purifies. Emperors must ultimately lose their crowns; dynasties must fall; millionaires must unload; armies must disarm. Capital and labor, though blood-stained, must join hands, as the helping, cementing segments of a common circle; and theological fences must be demolished. Fenced and walled cities indicate untamed beasts and wild, unruly men, and heavily barred doors imply thieves abroad. The houses of feudal times were really forts, and their windows were made to shoot from. Now, saying nothing of walls, the best streets of our great cities have no fences, and elegant residences are fronted down to the very sidewalks with emerald grasses, evergreens, air-perfuming roses and beautiful flowering shrubbery.

A Symbol in Trinity.

We all remember the distinguished Greek geometer of Alexandria, a disciple of the Platonic philosophy, who when asked by the kingly Ptolemy of Egypt, if the "principles of geometry with its complex theorems could not be mastered by some quicker and easier method than the one usually employed," replied: "There is no royal road to knowledge." Truly, there is no "royal road" to knowledge. It is not a matter of mercenary manufacture. It cannot be injected or "pumped" into the brain by any academic professor. Its attainment implies thought, research, persistent study and strenuous struggle. It is the stepping-stone to wisdom. Knowing men are not always just and wise men. Briefly stated, it is work—hard, substantial and wisely-directed work, that wins all worthy prizes.

In Euclid's oft-mentioned 47th theorem, it is demonstrated that the sum of the squares of the base and the perpendicular of a triangle are equal to the square of the hypotenuse. This geometrical symbol, lucidly flashing before me and transferring itself into the realm of the spiritual, reminds me that besides Shakerism, the three greatest religious movements of the late past and present time are, Universalism, Unitarianism and Spiritualism.

The root-thoughts of Universalism are the Fatherhood of God, brotherhood of man, and the final restoration of all men to holiness and heaven. And so far as aforesaid I am a Universalist. It is a beautiful belief. This belief, raised to its highest tension, is faith, confidence in the righteous sovereignty of God, and the ultimate, encompassing and over-ruling of the good and the true and the holy. Some might object to the article in the Universalist "profession of belief," or creed, which reads: "We believe that the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments contain a revelation of the character of God, and of the duty, interest and final destiny of mankind." They certainly do; and so do the Vedas of the Hindus, the Avesta of the Parsees, the Koran of the Mohammedans and other Oriental bibles. All these bibles, revised and re-revised, fill their religious niche in the parthenon of history. But there is one bible that requires no priestly revision. It is emphatically God's Bible—Nature, and every bud and blossom, every rill and river, mountain and blazing star is an inspired chapter in God's Bible, containing a revelation of Divinity, manifest as life and love, purpose and power. No expression or system of "faith" as an end, can fully satisfy the conscious, unfolding spirit for knowledge—some distinct knowledge of the future; hence, the Apostolic exhortation as before referred to—"Add to your faith, knowledge." Faith is good. Faith is uplifting, but infinitely better with the corollary, knowledge—knowledge of the condition, employments and progress of those gone before.

Unitarianism.

Unitarianism is Mohammedanism, minus Mahomet's visions and theological dogmas and miracles. The Mohammedan's God is the one self-subsistent presence in the universe, and this is true. In its last analysis, Unitarianism is as clear as a crystal, grim as a grave-stone, and cold as an icicle. Its carefully-prepared and highly polished sermons, all about the grand optimistic and redemptive over-arching vastness, are often as attractive and bewitching as the old Grecian classics. Really, they are restfully and peacefully enjoyable, disturbing no sinner's sweetest sleep. Their creed, or doctrinal "declaration," runs thus: "The fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, the leadership of Jesus Christ, salvation by character, the progress of mankind onward and upward forever." * * "And in the love of the truth and the spirit of the Christ, we unite for the worship of God and the service of man." This creed, as an Englishman would say, is "deucedly clever." And so I am a Unitarian. If they do not fellowship me, I fellowship them. And be it said to their generous liberality, they have never, but once, refused me the use of their church edifices for lectures; neither have the Jews, even once, their synagogues on Sundays. The world of religious thought moves. Golden days with no cloudy noon-times, are at hand. Zion's "Believers" are rising from their ashes, and "Watchmen are seeing eye to eye."

Sectarian Churchianity.

This fashionable churchianity, called Christianity, Roman Catholic, Greek and Coptic, now in the world almost 2,000 years, and later Protestantism, with its 157 sects in this country including Christian Scientists, has not saved the world. A saved world would be one afire with justice, equality, peace, love and harmony. Christian nations are the commercial gold-clutching, fighting, blood-shedding nations of the earth. Their name is Babel, written in blood. In the present Manchurian war, in our own late Civil war, the chaplains would pray like saints, and the Christian soldiers would fight like demons. Something more is wanting.

Historians and archeologists may write of Genesis and of its relations to old Babylon, now giving up its dead—they may expatiate upon the religious ambition of Luther, the beneficence of Fenelon, the clairvoyance of Madam Guyon, the rapture-visions of Swedenborg, the ecstasy of Joan of Arc, the thrilling inspirations of Shakspeare, the calm wisdom of Goethe, and the sweet, fathomless seership of Emerson; still, the inmost spirit cries for something more than the Christianity of the centuries—cries for some solid and changeless foundation based upon Spirit—essential Spirit—a very immutable rock!

Where Can It Be Found?

Where can be found spiritual rest? Is there no place of quiet rest, of calm repose? Is there no gem that never ceases to glitter and charm? Is there no land where spring flowers never wither? Is the question further pressed?—where is that precious gem—that realm of fadeless flowers—that home of combined activity, life, love and rest?

Listen! It is not "off there"—it is not "up there." It is subjective. It is within. "The kingdom of heaven is within," said the Christ-illumined Nazarene. This kingdom, or rather, this republic of abiding rest, is the within spirit—the conscious spirit, an atomic germ of the Infinite Spirit, eternal as God, because allied to and a potential portion of the Divine Life, God manifest. Hallowed be the name.

This spirit, raised in thought to Infinity, constitutes the cornerstone and the keystone also, of Spiritualism, which Spiritualism, ignoring sect, creed, color or clique, is in its broadest and most catholic sense, the direct antithesis of materialism and a Bible-built sectarianism.

Listen, oh, seekers after truth! No surface-observer with the measuring rod of materialism can fathom the depths of Spiritualism. The one-half of its might and moral majesty has never yet been told. No poet has ever put its golden riches into rhyme or rhythm; no enthused orator has ever sounded the depths of its imperishable glories, nor has any artist ever transferred its tinted and delicately-blended beauties upon canvas. It is Immanuel—God with us and God within us, and to be ashamed of Spiritualism, (as are some feeble-minded, surface-souled persons) is to be ashamed of God—Almighty God, who, as Jesus Christ said, "is Spirit." And further, the words "spiritual" and "Spiritualism" just as legitimately originate in and flow derivatively from Spirit, as the word "intellectual" centers in and is derived from "intellect," or as "casualism" comes from "casual." Suffixes are potent, modifying influences; accordingly a spiritual-minded man is qualitatively more than a mere murderous spirit-man; and so Spiritualism is more than spiritism. This latter useful where needed, was in ancient Oriental lands termed necromancy, sorcery and magic. It abounds today in frauds.

It seems to have been the purpose of the Infinite to educate and help each mortal to become strong, self-poised and harmonial through such varied experiences as life-epics, tragedies, comedies, substances and shadows, pointed thorns and radiant rose-leaves. These are schools, all schools in the preface-book of eternal life. But the tale of mortality is soon told—the fleshly life-cycle soon ends.

What Then?

After the joys of earth, after its songs of mirth,
After its hours of light, after its dreams so bright?
What then?

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. There is no risk or experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. Below we print extracts from testimonials such as are received by us daily.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother, of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 78 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kan., writes: "My honest opinion of Actina is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It cured my eyes, and cured my wife of asthma."

Hundreds of other testimonials can be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept 342D, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

ENCYCLOPEDIA
...OF...
BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM
...OR...
A CONCORDANCE
To the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism;
Together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible.
BY MOSES HULL.
Much that is in this book appeared in an abridged form in a series of nine full pages of The Progressive Thinker. These articles were prepared at the call of hundreds of Spiritualists who felt the need of some kind of document for ready reference. They only seemed to whet the appetite for more; hence the publication of this work.
The author, Moses Hull, has written many volumes on Spiritualistic and other themes and each one is full of careful study on the subject chosen. Mr. Hull, in his introduction of this work says:
"Hoping that this book will serve to lead the people out of the wilderness of doubt and despair; and that when Spiritualism shall have wrested the Bible from its 'sanctified' enemies, it will not 'spike' it, but will use it to batter down the walls of Christian superstition and ignorance, I send it out on its errand of enlightenment with the humble prayer that it will prove a divine benediction to every reader."
The Encyclopedia of Biblical Spiritualism contains 335 pages, beautifully printed on good paper, contains a full-page portrait of the author and is handsomely bound in cloth. Every Spiritualist should have this work.

ORIGIN OF SPECIES,
By means of natural selection, or the preservation of a favored race in the struggle for life. By Charles Darwin. Gilt top, cloth bound. This book is the grandest achievement of modern scientific thought and research. It has passed through many editions in English, has been translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and has been the subject of more reviews, pamphlets and separate books than any other volume of the age. Most of the great scientists of the age fully support his position. The thought of this book has become a part of the common inheritance of the race. For sale at this office. Price 75 cts.

BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,
Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by this wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.
"Discovery of a Lost Trail"
is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

A NEW CATECHISM,
BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.
This is a new "Catechism" in the full sense of the word. There has as yet appeared in the world of liberal literature nothing like this most wonderful little book or reason. E. P. Powell, the well-known author, the reviewer and critic, says: "The remarkable thing about this 'Catechism' is that it tells the truth." It deals with the questions of God, Immortality, the Creeds, the Clergy, the Church, Prayer and Salvation, Jesus and his Teaching, the Growth of the Christian Scriptures, and many other philosophical, scientific and ethical questions with the utmost candor, courage and clearness. 182 pages. Cloth 75c; paper, 50c

Talleyrand's Letter to the Pope.
This work will be found especially interesting to all who would desire to make a study of Romanism and the Bible. The historic facts stated, and the keen, scathing review of Romish creeds and practices should be read by all. Price 25 cents.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

AS A GENERAL RULE, IN THIS OFFICE WE PAY NO ATTENTION TO ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS. THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE WRITER SHOULD ACCOMPANY ALL MATTER, OF WHATEVER KIND, SENT TO THIS OFFICE.

John W. Ring, National Superintendent of Lyceum work, has been visiting lyceums at Lily Dale and Buffalo, N. Y.; Conneaut, Ashtabula, O.; Titusville, Pa., and other points. He spent Oct. 1 in Chicago and will visit Milwaukee, Wis., and from there go to the N. S. A. convention at Minneapolis. The lyceum work is flourishing under Mr. Ring's ministrations, fourteen more lyceums fraternizing now than were enrolled last year.—Sunflower.

Mrs. E. J. Jaquet is open for engagements to lecture and give platform messages. She can be addressed at No. 622 South Water street, Wichita, Kansas.

Oscar A. Edgerly of Lynn, Mass., appeared before a small but appreciative audience at Shiloh hall Sunday morning in the initial lecture of a series to be delivered under the auspices of the Elkhart Spiritual Society. The speaker announced that his first effort would be in the nature of a preface to those following and started out by defining Spiritualism as meaning naturalism. Nothing is supernatural, but all phenomena is the result of the operation of natural law. He compared the seance room of the medium to the laboratory of the scientist, both being necessary for the demonstration of the truth of a previously held theory. The lecturer gave evidence of the highest culture and refinement, and his language and manner on the rostrum are above criticism. The society is to be congratulated for having secured so able an exponent of their cause.—Enkhart, Ind., Daily Truth.

Mrs. Alice Gehring Patterson and husband have just finished a tour through Ohio, and are located at 624 Sixty-third street, where they will be pleased to meet old friends before they return to their home in Denver.

Two of the city's valiant automobilists saw a ghost Saturday night. They claim that they are perfectly sober, too. The ghost took the form of a white horse and buggy. It was driven by a phantom man and kept in the road before the cars for a mile or so, refusing to get out of the way although the drivers sounded the loud blast and yelled loudly. Finally one of the drivers took a search light and went ahead after the unknown. To his astonishment he saw the rig drive through a tight board fence six feet high with no opening in it of any kind, and vanish.—Gazette, Waukegan, Ill.

J. M. and M. T. Allen, excellent workers in the field of reform, write from Springfield, Mo.: "Our work here is steadily progressing; public meetings every Sunday night in Odd Fellows' hall, on Boonville street, and a class in spiritual science and mediumship every Wednesday night at 651 South Grant street. The members of this class are doing nicely in their study of psychic and spiritual science and in the development of their respective phases of mediumship. We are also going forward with our Mediums' Home School work, and with the Silver Chain Developing Circle."

The Independent Church of Truth will hold meetings every Sunday evening at 730 sharp, in Grand Boulevard Hall, corner 47th and Grand Boulevard. Speaker and message bearer, Georgia Gladys Cooley. Hall can be reached by South Side Elevated, Indiana avenue electric and 47th street cross line cars. Speaker's residence, 567 East 62nd street, Chicago, Ill.

A. H. Dailey writes: "I want to congratulate you upon the matter which you publish in The Progressive Thinker and the general information which I glean from its pages. I was running over the volumes of The Religio, a few evenings since, and it brought vividly to my mind, the memory of many active and interested persons in the lines of spiritual thought, who were then living, but who have now gone hence. You were then connected with that paper, and by comparison with the Progressive Thinker, I can see that you had a great deal to do in its compilation and editorial work."

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Dr. Peebles is coming to Chicago to speak for the League, Saturday evening, Nov. 4, and he will speak for the Rising Sun Mission, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 5, and in the evening for the Aitken Society, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue.

GEORGIA GLADYS COOLEY opens her meetings at Grand Boulevard Hall, corner Grand Boulevard and Forty-seventh street, Sunday evening, Oct. 8, at 7:30 o'clock sharp. A fine program will be arranged for the evening, and a hearty invitation is extended to all seekers after truth. Messages will be given at all meetings by Mrs. Cooley and her guides. Don't forget the hour of opening the services—7:30 o'clock sharp. Give this lady a grand reception at her first meeting. She is well worthy of it.

Elizabeth Schauss writes: "I am now located at Liberty and S. Harbor street, Conneaut, Ohio, and will be pleased to hear from my friends at that address. Letters sent to my home in Toledo will be forwarded to me at Conneaut. As I am engaged here from Oct. 1 to April 1, I will be able to answer funeral calls in the vicinity."

Mrs. Susie R. Thompson has returned to the city. Circle each Wednesday evening, at No. 769 West Van Buren street, top floor.

The Muncie Morning Star says: "Frank T. Ripley, of Boston, Mass., a prominent Spiritualistic lecturer and test medium, will be the guest of Muncie Spiritualists during the month of October, and during his stay in the city will conduct a series of lectures and test services. Mr. Ripley's first services will be held next Sunday in the G. A. R. Hall in the Bishop building, following the Lyceum services at 9:30 o'clock. The lecture which will begin at 10:30 o'clock, will be on 'Is Spiritualism True.' In the evening Mr. Ripley will talk on the subject of 'After Death, What?' Each service will be followed with tests."

Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker writes: "The interest in the First Spiritual Union, of San Jose, Cal., continues. Mrs. Nettie P. Fox filled the rostrum the first three Sundays of September, and will speak for the society during October. Mrs. M. E. G. Howe, of San Francisco, was with us Sunday evening, September 24, giving many good readings and tests to a large and appreciative audience. Our society has organized a Children's Progressive Lyceum that meets every Sunday at 10 a. m. Miss Linda Zink, as musician, also a fine medium, with numerous gifts, adds much to our work. There are a number of young people becoming interested and at the evening meeting, September 24, we were favored with a song, "The Golden City," by Master Max Obitz, and a duet by Misses Merel Muntz and Linda Zink. Miss Merel Muntz also gave a short and interesting address on mediumship."

People have actually been killed by dreams. Most people have suffered from those terrible nightmare visions in which the victim is pursued by an assassin with upraised knife, or is trembling on the edge of a fearful precipice, or is in some other imminent danger of a sudden and terrible death. These dreams are common enough, and nearly always the sufferer awakes thankful and happy at his escape. But sometimes he doesn't awake. Sometimes the knife falls or the sleeper in his hallucinations plunges down the precipice. These are the dreams that kill.

Mrs. Kirchner writes: "The Rising Sun Mission had very large audiences Sunday afternoon and evening, Oct. 1, at their services. Brother John W. Ring of Galveston, Texas, spoke at each service. We were very glad to hear again our brother from the Lone Star State, as he in his discourses gives us such good thoughts. The audience was very appreciative and listened attentively to each word spoken. The message bearers, Mrs. H. Gill, Brother Thompson and Sisters Weaver and Kirchner gave beautiful demonstrations of spirit return which were comforting to those who received them. Our choir rendered some very fine selections which were commented on by our speaker and by others. Brother Ring also gave a telling discourse at the home of the president, on Wednesday evening, Oct. 4; everybody enjoyed it so much. A social was arranged at the close of the meeting for congratulations to our Texas brother. He and Doctor Geo. B. Warne served the refreshments. A better time could not have been had, as it was both entertaining and instructive. We have arranged for a number of prominent speakers every Sunday up to January 1, among whom will be Dr. J. M. Peebles of Battle Creek, Dr. Geo. B. Warne, Dr. J. MacFarland, Dr. C. Tisdale, Mr. H. M. French, Mrs. J. M. Fravel. Hon. Chas. Hughes, Dr. L. Rowell and others. We welcome all strangers and skeptics to our services every Sunday afternoon at 3 and evening at 8, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 South Western avenue. Our speaker for Sunday afternoon, October 15, will be Bro. John W. Ring of Texas, and in the evening, Dr. C. S. Tisdale, of California, an inspirational lecturer who is controlled by an ancient Greek. It will be worth your while to attend these services."

Mr. Hassman writes: "The North Star Spiritual Union (regular Sunday service at 1546 Milwaukee avenue, near Western avenue) has a good attendance at each meeting. Organ concert before the meeting starts; prayer and lecture by Rev. Dr. P. M. Esser. Good subjects on phenomena and philosophy are chosen by the guides of the speaker. Spirit communication as demonstrated by Mrs. Johanna Rennau, and others of note also. Healing at every meeting after the lecture. The Progressive Thinker is always on sale."

Mrs. Laura Kobberger, healing and developing medium, has moved to 3030 Vernon avenue, where she will be glad to meet her friends hereafter. Developing circle Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock.

G. H. Brooks opened his meetings in Lawrence Hall the first Sunday in the month with a fine attendance. He will continue them this month, if not longer. On the 9th he goes to Cairo, Ill., and speaks there twice; then to Villa Ridge to officiate at the wedding of one of Mr. Leidiga's daughters, and while there he will speak two evenings and then back to his work in Milwaukee, getting there in time for the Saturday evening social, which is held in different parts of the city. Lawrence Hall is on Milwaukee street, near Wisconsin street. The friends in Milwaukee and adjoining towns take note.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

That talented young speaker, Will J. Erwood, is now at work in Kansas. He has been lecturing in Lawrence, and will visit Burlington, Wichita, Spring Hill, Kansas City, Kansas, and Kansas City, Mo.

Rev. Alice Baker writes: "I am still in Kansas City, Mo.; health is very much improved. I am lecturing every Sunday night and holding mid-week meetings. Will answer calls to go to societies as lecturer and message medium and to officiate at funerals. Address all communications to 1012 Locust street, Kansas City, Mo."

The ex-priest P. A. Seguin, now living at 1500 Fifth avenue South, Minneapolis, Minn., has plenty of rooms left for Spiritualists who will come to Minneapolis for their convention, at $1.25 for one bed and three solid meals per day. Any interurban car, or Minnehaha, Emerson and Riverside street cars will bring the people near the Working Girls' Home which the ex-priest and his good wife superintend.

Pleasure lovers, attention! The Golden Rule Pleasure Club will give a series of dances opening on Saturday evening, Oct. 14, 1905, at O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street, between Washington and Park avenue. These dances will be held on the second and fourth Saturday evening of each month. Music by Vogel's orchestra. A pleasant and enjoyable time is promised in this pastime and we anticipate a large attendance. Come and be satisfied that we are respectfully yours for a good time. Tickets 25 cents a person.

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "A very pleasant time was had at the social given by Sister Kepner at her home Saturday night, Sept. 30, for the benefit of the Mission Temple Fund. Members and friends to the number of eighty enjoyed the entertainment which was opened by Sister Reesicker, the alto soloist of the Mission. Games were indulged in, and tests given by Sisters Caird, Weaver, Kirchner, Brother Thompson and others. A very fine luncheon was served, which was appreciated by all. A vote of thanks was given to Sister Kepner for her hospitality. An Indian dance wound up the evening's enjoyment."

H. E. Pomeroy writes: "I write to say that I think Alex. Caird, M. D., has got his answer good and straight. For clear-cut, straightforward, common-sense Spiritualism, I think Nora Batchelor Hensley strikes the keynote. Such clear intellects and positive kindness as Mrs. Hensley and Clara Watson manifest are refreshing. It makes the axe-to-grind-schemes of the reverends appear sinister, to say the least."

Mary Purcell writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "The Grand Rapids Spiritual Society enjoyed a feast of spiritual food on Sunday, Sept. 17, in the person of Mrs. Julia M. Walton, of Jackson, Mich., president of the State Spiritualist Association, serving the society on that day. An all day meeting was held and addresses were given by her, assisted by Dr. J. C. Batdorf. Messages were given by Mrs. Emiliss Blake, Mrs. Belle Fuller and Dr. W. O. Knowles, with special music arranged by Mrs. Effie Sackett. Lunch was served in the hall between services. The society was served on the other Sundays of the month by Dr. J. C. Batdorf and Prof. F. T. Ingoldsby, both of Grand Rapids. Large audiences attend the meetings and from present indications the prospects for the future growth of the society look bright. The Ladies' Aid continues its efforts, working to help the society in its payments on the lot for a temple which it expects to erect in the near future."

H. Smith writes: "The Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature, Van Buren Opera House, corner Madison street and California avenue, was attended by a large and intelligent audience, Mrs. M. Schumacher, the pastor, taking for her subject, 'Does the Bible Sustain the Phenomena of Spiritualism?' Dr. L. C. Koehler assisted by taking up the subject, 'Progression of Man, How to Become Wiser.' The pastor in behalf of the society, presented the Doctor with a certificate of recognition as a teacher and medium of Spiritualism. Sister N. Kusserow and Brother French gave many spiritual and convincing tests. We extend a hearty welcome to all mediums and truth seekers to attend this Sunday evening meeting."

Mrs. A. Sexsmith writes: "The meeting of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society on Sunday, Oct. 1, was well attended, both afternoon ad evening. The afternoon proved very interesting by short talks and messages given by Sister Kusserow, Bro. French and Bro. Coe. In the evening we were greeted by a fine audience, but sorry to state that our speaker for that evening, Mrs. Nora Hill, was not able to be present; but we were delighted to have with us instead that grand worker, Attorney Griffen, who spoke along the lines of spiritual unfoldment and as we had many strangers present, he conveyed to their minds that there is something uplifting in the life of a true Spiritualist. Messages were given by Mrs. Alice Sexsmith to many skeptics, which proved to them that there was something in spirit return, and all said they were coming again. The benefit circle which was given at the home of Mrs. Nora E. Hill, 705 Madison street, Thursday evening, Sept 28, was a success in every way. We had with us Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, Mrs. Isa Cleveland, Mrs. Ada Zazelle, Mrs. M. Weaver and Bro. French. All gave messages which proved interesting. Remember our dance on Saturday evening, Oct. 14. These will be continued the second and fourth Saturdays of each month. A good time is assured. Tickets 25 cents, now on sale. Don't fail to attend, as these are given to help the cause on our open door meetings. Everyone welcome, at O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street, between Washington Blvd. and Park avenue. Meetings at 3 and 8 p. m."

Mrs. Mary E. Van Horn writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "George H. Brooks opened meetings for the present month, Sunday evening, October 1. He had a large and appreciative audience, and if you could have seen the smiling faces and hearty hand clasps that greeted him, you would know that his coming to us just now was most welcome to one and all. I never heard him do as well, especially so in his readings. His genial presence was an inspiration and we hope he may succeed so well financially that he can remain with us during the winter."

Frank T. Ripley has the Sundays of January, February and March still open for engagement to lecture and give messages. Address all letters in care of General Delivery, Muncie, Ind.; thereafter to Tipton, Ind., P. O. Box 543.

E. B. Hughson writes from Fresno, Cal.: "Once more after a short absence of the best of papers, The Progressive Thinker finds a place in our home again, and it is a pleasure to peruse its columns; and the premium book, I can not thank you enough for it."

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, October 15, 1905: "We Stand Between the Past and the Future."

Gem of Thought:—

From the fathomless Past I gather
Much fruit and golden grain;
For there I have wept and labored
Through hours of joy and pain.

In the mystical Future I fancy
The things that are to be,
And the gleam of the hopes that glitter
Brings cheer and strength to me.

So here and now I must labor on,
With faded hopes that are gone,
Their somber hues with bright ideals,
Make life a joyous song. —J. W. R.

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

MRS. LAURA G. FIXEN, although prominent as a Spiritualist, and an excellent speaker, is held in high esteem by the W. C. T. U., and at its late convention in Bloomington, Ill., she was called upon to occupy the pulpit of the First Presbyterian church. Mrs. Fixen also opened the discussion on the first day of the convention on this subject, "Woman in the Realm of Prophecy." Mrs. Fixen is to be congratulated on her success at the convention as an influential factor, and we venture to say that the pulpit she occupied will feel for a long time the spiritualizing influence she imparted.

Mrs. DeLong-Moser holds meetings every Friday afternoon at 2:30. Fridays and Sundays at 8 o'clock. No. 962 Milwaukee avenue, opposite Paulina. Tests and messages by the pastor.

Secretary writes: "The Band of Harmony meets every first and third Thursday in each month on the fifth floor, Masonic Temple. October 5 we had a good attendance; were entertained by Mrs. Richmond with name poems, and answers to questions; also other exercises."

I. Powderly writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union has leased the new G. A. R. Hall at No. 6236 Princeton avenue, near 63rd street, and one block west of Wentworth avenue. We cordially welcome all who can be with us afternoon and evening of each Sunday, and Thursday afternoon, Ladies' Aid, which we hope to make interesting and instructive. We have engaged some of the best speakers and mediums for the near future. The talented Miss Webster will favor us with some fine selections of instrumental music. Recitation, one of Whitcomb Riley's poems, by the well-known Miss Edith Lewis. Our first meeting will be held Sunday, Oct. 15 at 2:30 and 7:30, at 6236 Princeton avenue."

Mrs. H. L. Lichtig writes: "The tea-party given by the Sunflower Club, on Sept. 26, in its hall, 70 East Adams street, proved a great success both financially and socially, and the many friends of the ladies are hoping that it will become a monthly affair. Lincoln Hall has been leased permanently by the club. The second Tuesday of each month they hold their regular business meeting. The fourth Tuesday of each month is reserved for social affairs. One can always depend on something of interest on this day: Tuesday, Oct. 10, at 2 p. m., occurs the next regular meeting. Let all members be present."

Mrs. H. L. Bigelow writes: "A very pleasant meeting was held in the new quarters of the First Spiritual Union of San Jose, Cal., having moved from Eagles' Hall, which we occupied for the past two years, to Hale's Hall, South second street. Children's lyceum at 10 a. m. Conference meeting at 11 a. m. We were much pleased to have our veteran medium, Mrs. Hendee Rogers, with us. She was brought to the hall in her wheeled chair, and carried up the stairs by careful hands. She cannot walk without crutches, and only a few steps at a time. She looks smart, and carries her eighty-seven years gracefully. She gave us a short talk, speaking words of good cheer and predicting successful meetings in our new hall. Sister Fox spoke for an hour on the subject, 'Footprints of Civilization.' These inspirational lectures are very interesting. The speaker is engaged for the present month, also November, excepting the last Sunday in each month, which is supplied by a test medium, giving readings from flowers, articles or independent tests. Sister M. E. G. Howe of San Francisco was with us the last two Sundays. The readings were good. I am glad to say that Mrs. Dobson-Barker is recovering from a severe illness."

Maggie Henry writes: "Sunday, Oct. 1, at Old 77, Spiritual Mission Chapel, our speaker, F. M. Stoller, read for the scripture lesson a portion of the 15th chapter of I. Corinthians. He then took up the questions on spiritual and philosophical topics. His answers were highly appreciated. He also answered about fifty personal questions. We had a visitor who gave some excellent messages, and our regular test medium, Madame Lucile DeLoux, gave some very fine demonstrations of mental telepathy; she turned her back to the audience and was but in touch with the person by her manager, who did not speak at all. She gave names and descriptions. All were recognized. All are welcome at our meetings at 8 p. m. every Sunday. Strangers and skeptics especially invited."

Mrs. M. A. Burland, pastor writes: "The Light of Truth church has held its meetings all summer. The lectures were of the highest order and the audiences have been well pleased by the teachings, and there has been a steady growth. Many mediums have given messages at each service. Come and help the good work on. The Ladies' Aid that meets on Thursday afternoon is well attended. Mrs. Caird will be with us on Thursday next, in the upper hall. Remember the place, Hopkins' Hall, 528 W. Sixty-third street."

Will C. Hodge, the well-known lecturer, writes from Seattle, Wash.: "Under the able leadership of Walter A. Hall, who is decidedly the right man in the right place, the fall and winter campaign has opened in Seattle under most favorable auspices. Our audiences are most excellent, both as regards quality and numbers, and my work for September has been very pleasant and ably seconded by the local mediums. I am happy to report an entire absence of any exhibitions of jealousy on the part of the local workers, who seem to be a happy family, all striving to do to the best of their ability the work assigned them, and that this society stands squarely by the proposition, INTEGRITY IN MEDIUMSHIP AND CHARACTER IN ALL WORKERS, WHETHER IN THE SEANCE ROOM OR ON THE PLATFORM. I am retained for the month of October, and my address remains, General Delivery, Seattle, Wash."

Dr. Beverly writes: "The S. S. S. of Arlington Hall, has opened a branch at South Chicago, to meet every Saturday evening, at Tinsley's Hall. I have a missionary spirit, and will respond to some of the many calls I receive for help, to feed the hungry this precious spiritual food. Come and bring your friends."

J. W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas, has been greatly interesting Chicago audiences. He is young, energetic and a forcible speaker, and is in demand here by the different societies. Last Saturday evening he lectured to the Chicago League, and Sunday evening to the Golden Rule society.

Emil T. Vaas writes: "We are now beginning our winter's work, and the Bund der Wahrheit No. 18, will hold its eighth anniversary on Sunday, Oct. 22, at Hack's Hall, 519 Larrabee street, (formerly Heinen's Hall), beginning at 3 p. m., with lectures tests, songs and music. Thereafter supper, and in the evening dance and amusements. Tickets 15 cents at the door. Come all and welcome to all."

Moses Hull, active as ever, with his intellectual faculties growing brighter as age advances, has been in the city several times lately. He and Mrs. Hull are efficient workers on the rostrum, and can interest any audience. They are contemplating a trip to the Pacific coast.

Mrs. G. C. Stephens writes from Kansas City, Mo.: "The Psychical Research Society opened its meetings of the year in the parlors of the Ladies' Atheneum, 9th and Locust streets, Oct. 1. We had a good attendance. Our Sunday night meeting is open to all. A collection during the services is taken. Our subscribers defray all expenses. We invite any medium working under by-laws of the state and N. S. A. on our rostrum who comes here, and I also welcome any or all to my home. I do not invite the so-called mediums who are not organized to take part in our meetings, as I feel, if they are, inharmony. They should unite with some society. I am responsible for that which comes to my people in our meetings. We hold our usual social and Wednesday night circles at my home, and class meets every other Friday. All are welcome."

DREAMS

Have Sometimes Brought Fortunes to Dreamers—One Winner Used Daughter's Death as a Hunch and Got Forty-five Thousand Dollars.

Has there ever been a lottery, we wonder, in which dreams of lucky numbers have not played a romantic part, as the case of M. Cousins, who won the second prize of 8,000 pounds in the recent French lottery? asks Tid Bits.

That, for instance, is a strange story that is told of Signor Bozzi, a merchant of Milan. Not long ago the signor dreamed of his daughter, who died several years since, and next morning with his dream still mournfully haunting his memory, something brought to his mind that it was one of the days on which the municipal lottery was open. To the lottery he went, being a man of sporting instincts, and his dream suggested the venture. His daughter having died at the age of 24 years, 13 days, 4 hours, he selected these three numbers to bet upon, and two of the three proved highly lucky. One, on which he had laid 6s 4d brought him 250 times his stake, or over 100 pounds, and the other 4,250 times his stand of 1 pound 12s 6d, or nearly 7,000 pounds.

It was a dream that brought fortune too late for an Italian peasant called Luca. The peasant dreamed one night that he had been present at the drawing of the great state lottery, and that the first prize of 8,000 pounds had fallen to ticket No. 24,016. When he awoke he was so strongly impressed by his dream that he scraped together all the money he possessed, and, after long searching, was able to buy a ticket, not of the number of his dream, but containing the same figures in a different order. Then he fell on evil days, his wife died of an illness brought on by hardship and starvation, and a few days later, he, too, succumbed. Within a week of this double tragedy the ticket he had purchased was awarded the great prize at the lottery drawing.

A similar pathetic story is told of a poor blind woman, once a familiar figure in Sackville street, Dublin, where for many years she earned a scanty livelihood by selling laces and other small articles. One night she dreamed of a number which was to win a great prize in a forthcoming lottery, and when she awoke she hurried to the lottery office to insure it. The number was not drawn; but her faith in it was unabated, and time after time she insured it, selling her clothes and even the basket that contained her goods, to raise the necessary money. At last her small resources were quite exhausted; one day she was unable to insure the number, and that very day it was drawn. This blow of fortune was too much for the poor old creature, and, groping her blind way to the Royal Canal, she ended her troubles in its waters.

In the early days of lotteries in England to dream a number was always looked upon as the luckiest of omens. In an old copy of the Post Boy we may still read this advertisement: "This is to give notice that 10 shillings over and above the market price will be given for the ticket in the 1,500,000 pounds lottery, No. 132, by Nath Cliff, at the Bible and Three Crowns in Cheapside." Light was thrown on this mysterious notice by a letter which the advertiser wrote to the Spectator, in which he says: "You must know I have but one ticket, for which reason, a certain dream I have lately had more than once. I resolved it should be the number I most approved. My visions are so frequent and strong upon this occasion that I have not only possessed the lot, but disposed of the money which in all probability it will sell for."

About the same time a footman, on the strength of a similar dream, spent the whole of 20 years' savings in purchasing two lottery tickets bearing his lucky dream numbers, and when the tickets proved blanks, we learn "after a few melancholy days he put an end to his life." In a box was found the following plan of the manner in which he should spend the 5,000 pounds prize, which his mistress preserved as a curiosity."

"As soon as I have received the money I will marry Grace Towers; but as she has been cross and coy I will use her as a servant. Every morning she shall get me a mug of strong beer, with toast, nutmeg and sugar in it; then I will sleep until 10, after which I will have a large sack posset. My dinner shall be on the table by 1, and never without a good pudding. I will have a stock of wine and brandy laid in. About 5 in the afternoon I will have tarts and jellies and a gallon bowl of punch; at 10 a hot supper of two dishes. If I am in a good humor and Grace behaves herself she shall sit down with me."

EDICT AGAINST THE ALMIGHTY.

In Which He Is Supposed to Have Passions Common to Humanity.

The conviction has long prevailed that boldness and resolution are innate in the Anglo-Saxon races, but a recent example of unheard-of courage is offered by the mayor of one of the cities in Spain, who has openly challenged no less than the Almighty by publicly denouncing his behavior toward the mayor's province in the following decree, translated from a Spanish journal:

"The mayor of the department of Carthanas, to the inhabitants thereof, know ye:

"Whereas the Almighty has not behaved himself properly with regard to this province and city, inasmuch as only one rainstorm visited the country during the last year, and not a single time has it rained during this winter, in spite of prayers and processions, in detriment to the chestnut crops, on which the prosperity and progress of our province depends:

"Now, therefore, be it resolved:

"Art. I. If within the peremptory term of a week from the date of this decree it should fail to rain abundantly, no one shall attend mass nor say prayers of any kind.

"Art. II. Should the drought continue for a term of eight days longer, all churches and chapels shall be burned and all objects of devotion and prayer destroyed.

Art. III. Finally, if within a third term of a week it should fail to rain abundantly, all clergymen, monks, and friars shall be massacred and beheaded.

"And permission is hereby granted to all to commit all sorts and species of sin, that the Supreme Being may know and understand with whom he is dealing."—Mexican Herald.

GOOD THERE IS IN THE WORLD.

And Each Spiritualist Should Contribute a Certain Amount to It.

"There are lots of good folks in the world—millions of them. Do you want proof. Keep your eyes and ears open.

"The other day Henry Kuhn and his aged wife started from St. Louis for Wheeling, W. Va., their pitiful all in a wagon. In Cincinnati the emaciated horse fell dead and a man and woman old enough to be your grandparents, sobbed helplessly.

"A crowd gathered. A crowd always gathers in a city.

"In ten minutes that crowd had raised money enough to pay for another horse, and soon the old wagon was creaking its way to Wheeling and smiles chased away the tears on wrinkled faces.

"Just a trivial incident!

"But it makes your confidence in humanity stronger to hear about such doings. Makes you glad to feel that there is quick sympathy and ready practical help to be had for the need of it.

"Takes away from the theory of chill individuality, puts us on the plane of brothers, 'loving one another,' gives the world something to admire and approve, to help drown out the clamors of the chronically sad.

"Well, let's go ahead and admire. Let's allow the sweetness and beauty of a kind action to permeate our souls, and give us the inspiration to go do likewise when the chance comes our way."

Every Spiritualist should contribute something towards the general good. That is the only way to advance spiritually. REFLECTION.

ECHOES FROM CALIFORNIA.

San Francisco Spiritualists to the Front.

Miss Mae Hunt, after four months' vacation, renewed her lectures last Sunday evening, October 1, in Remembrance Hall, Odd Fellows' Building, Seventh and Market streets, to a large audience which filled the auditorium to the outer hallway. Miss Hunt was at her best, in good voice, and invigorated and fresh from a vacation and much-needed rest, and her speaking was sublime. Many fragrant flowers of all shades decorated her stand, donated by kind and grateful friends to greet her on her return to the lecture field.

President Bracken opened the meeting in a short speech and very appropriately greeted the audience in words of welcome, then turned and in like manner, greeted the speaker, with a welcome from a united audience—wishing her a "God-speed in her good work," etc.

Miss Hunt spoke nearly an hour with her usual force and eloquence—or rather, her control did—for she always speaks when totally entranced and like all entranced speakers, cannot recall a word of the address when in her normal state. Last season she delivered fifty lectures and all those who were fortunate enough to have heard them, claim they were the most edifying and sublime ever heard.

Each attendant can recall that some of the world's foremost statesmen, poets, philosophers and scientists controlled and announced their names and gave beautiful addresses, each one given was very characteristic of his own special line of thought. The scientists Louis Agazziz and Sir John Herschell, each using technical terms, which would excel the president of any university. It was unfortunate the lectures were not taken down and printed. It was a lost opportunity, the loss and magnitude thereof can only be realized by those who heard them. Her style of speaking is much like Cora L. V. Richmond, but as she is young and strong, that enables her to stand the strain without any serious fatigue. She has abandoned trance readings, as that disharmonizes her lecture work. She will continue to speak in this hall every Sunday evening. COR.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to the higher life on Saturday, Sept. 30, Miss Gertrude Stevens, 516 Van Buren street, Chicago; a member of the Rising Sun Mission. Services were held on Sunday, Oct. 1, and were conducted by President C. Kirchner. The Mission choir sang "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," and "Are the Angels Waiting and Watching for Me?" The services were very impressive. Interment at Forest Home.

MRS. C. KIRCHNER.

Passed to spirit life, Sept. 13, 1905, Mark Roberts of Baraboo, Wis., at the age of 32 years. The writer was informed that this young man was very brilliant and promising, but a long strain of ill health undermined his mental health so it became necessary to conduct him to the Mendota Hospital where he passed away, leaving a great host of friends to mourn his departure. Funeral services were conducted by the writer.

CATHARINE McFARLIN.

Dr. B. F. Gardner of Atlanta, Ill., was an early convert through the mediumship of the Fox sisters, in 1848, to Spiritualism. The Doctor rounded out his terrestial life July 21, and passed to the next sphere of action. He was born June 22, 1818, in Green county, Ohio, of Christian parents. For fifty years he was an undaunted advocate of the truths underlying the spiritual philosophy.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Britian, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

STANDARD BOOKS, Cloth Binding, 50c. Each.

The following books by well known and popular writers, we have selected with the thought that they will be of interest to our readers. They are printed on fine paper; perfectly clear, readable type; cloth bin

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

John L. Howe: Q. When was the time called the Dark Ages? What was the cause?

A. The Dark, or Middle Ages, either in beginning or end, are not well defined. There is wide difference between writers on the subject, but perhaps the commencement may be stated as the last half of the fifth century, when the Vandals, Goth and Northern peoples gave the final blow to the Roman empire, and the termination at the discovery of printing and of America, or the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The cause was the weakness of the old regime, by the introduction of the new religion of Christianity, which enforced by imperial edict, took the place of the ancient faith. The northern hordes took advantage of the wrangling of religionists, the blight of the new faith prostrating manly courage and self-reliance making passive martyrdom of greater merit than heroic self-defense, and became the rulers.

In their barbarous minds Christianity assumed new form. In the surging tide of affairs, learning ceased to attract. The philosophers died and none came in their places. The great writers were not read. When it was discovered that their writings did not agree with the ideas of the priests, the precious volumes were destroyed, or the words effaced, that the parchment might be used again to write prayers and invocations to the saints.

The priests became all in all. At one time there was danger of their owning the whole of Europe. It was a tremendous plunge from the apex of the Golden Age of Rome, her grand historians, artists, poets and sages, into the turbulent ocean of the Dark Ages. The polished historian of world-events, became the garrulous and unreliable chroniclers; the sculptors who made the marble speak in exquisite outlines, carved grotesque images of Madonnas and saints; the artists produced wretched daubs; the gospel of dirt and poverty was taught the masses by the sleek priests; the splendid public baths, a necessity of the old faith, crumbled in decay, and the blight of a lie cursed the world. It was taught by leaders of the Christian church that any falsehood to further that religion, "for Christ's sake," was meritorious.

Every manuscript opposing was destroyed or the writing erased and the works of historians and poets of priceless value were written over with the forgeries or incoherent ranting of hypothecated saints.

The Saracens had preserved the learning of the ancient world. It did not conflict with Moslemism, and while Europe was in the nightmare of theology, learning flourished under the minarets of mosque and college. From them, the awakened thinkers of Europe received the lighted torch which was to illuminate the night of ignorance and superstition and bring the day of knowledge.

The discovery of printing may well be taken as the dividing line between the time when the church ruled the state and had everything its own way, and the present.

Mrs. Nettie R. Wood: Q. For four years I have had rappings and whisperings. Is there any way in which I can have the latter more distinct? Will the trumpet be of use?

A. The only method is to set apart a time and place when you can retire, and by concentration of thought on those you desire to communicate, become more and more sensitive. You can by this means receive more and more distinctly. Any external means, as the trumpet, will lead you away from the conditions you should cultivate. The whispered voice is an impression of a spirit to your spirit, and is not a sound in the atmosphere. Hence the means to improve receptibility must be purely spiritual.

Artemus Reed: Q. There has been so much said about the discovery that mosquitoes caused yellow fever, that I would like the opinion of the Question editor on the subject.

A. It will appear as decidedly "unscientific" and out of date to doubt the claims that a certain species of mosquito, by its bite inoculates with yellow fever. The theory has been demonstrated, it is asserted, and there was more attention given to the destruction of the mosquitoes during the late visitation of New Orleans than to any other sanitary measure. There seems to be a division of opinion among the doctors, or at least as reported the theory diverges. It is stated that when the insect bites a fever stricken subject, it gets some of the microbes attached to its bill, and when it bites another person the germs are conveyed. It is like the poison-tipped arrows of savages.

Another reporter gives a different explanation from an eminent specialist: The mosquito takes in the blood of a fever patient, and gets a bad attack of fever as it deserves. The imbibed blood is a seed bed for breeding germs. Unfortunately the insect does not die. Apparently it is more active, and has a fiire impulse to thrust its poisonous bill into a healthy person. If it gets a chance, it is certain to be heard from, for in a few days the disease will appear.

I should hate to believe God planned such a horrible contrivance to cause suffering and death. If it just planned itself, by evolution, if there is a good and just God, according to human reason he ought to stop it.

It is a strange thing that these physicians who are loudest in demanding the extermination of the mosquito, are the most zealous for the establishment of quarantine. This shows that they do not believe their own theory. What is the use of quarantine or cleanliness, if the disease is not contagious, and no one can have it without being bitten by a mosquito?

Why separate the sick from the well, if the disease cannot be taken by contact, by the air, or water? A person might sleep or stay in the most infectious place, if covered by a netting. Granting that the mosquito is the only means of infection, how came the first case for the mosquito to bite? Or the old question which was first, the mosquito or the patient? If there was a case first without a mosquito, then there might be another. Or is it to be believed that the mosquito had the attack first and communicated it to man?

It is possible that a mosquito having bitten a fever patient might communicate the disease by biting, but of the countless millions of mosquitoes not one in millions ever has an opportunity to bite man, and infinitely less number to bite one stricken with fever. It is well known that a mosquito never fills itself with blood but once in its brief life. If once gorged it has no disposition to bite again. If filled on the blood of one having fever, it might breed a fine case of the disease for itself, or it might be the blood would go into the development of a fine brood of thousands of eggs.

Many of the leading physicians have no faith in the theory which a few have exploitered, gaining cheap newspaper notoriety. We predict that in a few short years this theory will be laughed at as one of the many absurdities put forward in the name of science.

A SPIRITUALISTIC ANALYSIS

What Are You Going to Do About It?—A Question Asked in the Interest Spiritualism.

We are constantly meeting people who will in a quiet way speak favorably of Spiritualism and express an admiration for, and a belief in, its philosophy and phenomena, but ask them to attend our meetings or in any way identify themselves with the Spiritualistic movement, and they invariably decline.

Ask them why? and they answer, "Oh, well, you know it isn't considered quite respectable. The fraud, you know! The crudity! We will stay in the church a while longer until it becomes respectable."

Well, that beats all. But what are we going to do about it?

Undoubtedly Spiritualism has become a mighty, if not always recognized, power in the world.

During the more than fifty years wonderful progress has been made. But the question arises, have we as Spiritualists done, and are we doing, under all circumstances, that which would forward our cause and make us respected in the world?

We are sorry to be obliged to answer, No!

We believe the time has come when this matter must be looked fairly and squarely in the face.

We are seeking to promulgate a new science, a new philosophy, a new religion, if you will, that transcends all which has preceded it. It is supposed to spiritualize men and women! Its beautiful truths are expected to make all who embrace them better and nobler; to bring peace and good will to men; to gradually root out envy and scandal; to help put away jealousy and disparagement. Are we living up to our philosophy, and trying to get others to do the same?

I few have a better religion than the Christians, the best way to let them know it, IS TO LIVE IT OURSELVES, and exemplify it in our own lives. And would it not be well for those who call themselves Spiritualists to make a distinction between pure spiritual mediumship and fortune-telling before they expect the world to do it?

Let Spiritualists refuse to employ as teachers and demonstrators those who are guilty of fraud in this work, and the first step will be taken toward gaining the recognition and respect we so earnestly desire. Then we can ask for laws to protect the use of mediumship, and laws to punish the abuse of it. OUR TRUE AND HONEST SPIRITUAL MEDIUMS HAVE ALREADY TOO LONG BEEN ASSOCIATED WITH FRAUDS, FAKIRS AND MOUNTEBANKS, WHO ARE FILLING THEIR COFFERS WITH THE MEANS THAT SHOULD GO TO SUPPORT THE SPIRITUAL MOVEMENT AND HONEST MEDIUMSHIP. The actions of a few who should have held the cause of Spiritualism as sacred as their own souls, bring vividly to mind the Judas of long ago, who betrayed his Master and his cause for thirty pieces of silver—the only difference being that Judas was man enough to go out and hang himself; and we have not heard of any of our betrayers doing likewise.

Spiritualism was not given us to get rich by, but to bring to humanity the glorious truth of immortal life and eternal progression.

And, oh! too, what a pity that sometimes those who come among us seeking for hope and consolation are obliged to listen to the voice of petty gossip and slander.

Yes, we are ashamed to say it, but nevertheless the thoughtless gossiper may be heard in our midst spinning her yarns until you almost imagine yourself in the midst of one of those good old church sewing circles where they make flnanel garments for the poor make flannel garments for the poor

Friends, let us register a vow within our inmost souls that we will refrain from all gossip and slander. Let us live for that which is good and elevating. We have not only this world in which to pursue our investigations, but we have the glorious privilege of lifting the curtain that hangs between time and eternity, and gathering up some of the gems of truth that lie scattered along the shores of the hereafter. We don't see how Spiritualists can find time for useless and oftentimes harmful gossip.

We have got the best philosophy that has ever been given to the world, and if we would absorb it into our very lives and make it a part of them, then, indeed, heaven would seem nearer home.

Let us who feel that we have a mission to perform, not wait for the spirit world to fill us, as though we were empty vessels; but seek the wisdom and knowledge that comes from association with the great minds of the past and the present. Let us seek the culture and refinement that music, art and literature can bestow. No effort, no labor, should be too great to attain to that which will make us more fitting instruments on which the Spiritual master minds are expected to produce their divine harmonies, and by the very law that underlies the spiritual philosophy we will attract to us from the higher sphere of life minds that are capable of imparting wisdom to those who are still dwellers upon the earth.

We have been in primary Spiritualism long enough.

The times demand something more than being mere instruments for spirit communion.

And is it not time that some effort be made to have suitable and respectable public places of gathering? Many meetings are held in inconvenient and ill-ventilated halls that reflect either a condition of extreme poverty or a spirit of "don't care."

Friends, let us be proud of our Spiritualism! Let us cherish our phenomena as something sacred! Let us show the world that we can be true men and women without crosses, creeds or bibles!

We should live our Spiritualism every day.

It is not like a garment to be worn on Sunday and hung in the closet on Monday morning; it must be an everyday religion crowned with loving thoughts and acts of kindness.

Then scatter your seeds as you go along
O'er the path of love or duty,
They will bring you a harvest, by and by,
Of flowers of rarest beauty.

It does not matter which way you go,
By crowded street or by-way,
Whate'er you do will come back to you,
And meet you on the highway.

So live in the light and work with a will,
While the sun of life is shining,
Ere the night comes on and age makes blind,
And we sit in the dark repining.

For now is the hour and now is the day
To scatter your seeds of kindness,
Or do the deeds or say the words
That will lift a soul from blindness.

It is said that a pebble cast into the sea
Is felt to the farthest strand,
And that every atom that forms the globe
Can be moved by a grain of sand.

So the words that your lips may utter to-day,
Be they freighted with love or a curse,
Go on and on, and forever on,
To the heart of the universe.

LADY ANGELS WILL NOT DO.

Sculptor Forced to Change Forty o' 'Em Into Men Cherubs—Rural Divine Saw Error — Graceful Curves In Church Statuary Give Way to Stern Attributes.

According to a statement in a special dispatch to the Chicago Tribune, they are changing the faces of some thirty or forty angels at the Belmont Memorial chapel and the cathedral of St. John the Divine on Morningside Heights, N. Y. The sculptor made them all lady angels. And the building committee, stirred up by the observant delegates of the diocesan convention of the Protestant Episcopal church, recently in session here, firmly but solemnly had ordered that lady angels won't do.

The cathedral was visited during the convention proceedings by many out-of-town clergymen, as well as by many divines of this city, who went sightseeing with their rural brethren.

The manner of discovery of the lady angels scandal, according to stories told in clerical circles, is that one of the visiting rectors walked up to a man, apparently a layman by his dress, who was fussing around the statuary with some appearance of authority.

And He Called the Sculptor.

"Pardon me," said the clergyman, "pardon me, my good friend, but can you tell me who is responsible for modeling these figures—these angels?"

"I can," said the layman, "and I will. I am responsible for them. I either modeled them or they were modeled under my direction. Permit me to introduce myself. My name is Borglum."

The clergyman was just the least bit embarrassed, so he told his friends afterward, by the warlike attitude of Borglum. He is J. Guntzen Mothe-Borglum, a well-known sculptor. But the clergyman stood to his convictions and pursued his inquiry.

"My dear sir," he said, "can you tell me, then, what scriptural authority you have for the conception of these angels as females? I myself am fairly diligent as a searcher of the scriptures, but, bless me, I do not know any except secular writings in which angels are spoken of as women.

"These figures are beautiful, my dear sir, most beautiful, but they are not angels. Beauty of countenance, chastity, pose, and wings do not necessarily, my dear sir, make an angel."

The sculptor quoted a number of medieval precedents in which angels figure as feminine, and parted with the man of God, according to the latter, chastened, but hardly convinced.

The clergyman got busy. He circulated among his brethren and angels were studied and discussed until the matter began to rise to the proportions of a scandal.

Agitation Bears Fruit.

It came to the ears of the Rev. Dr. John P. Peters who is secretary of the building committee, who was much exercised. Dr. Peters wrote to the sculptor expressing his sense that these criticisms were not without foundation, calling attention to the fact that all angels mentioned in the bible had masculine names.

Dr. Peters gently intimated that the New Testament specifically stated that the angel of the Incarnation was the archangel Gabriel, and any lady who assumed that honor was an impostor. He also brought to Borglums' notice, so it is understood, that Azrael, Michael, and Raphael were not ladies.

Borglum replied with becoming meekness. He acknowledged that though he seemed to have strayed from the ecclesiastically technical conception of the heavenly messengers, he felt artistically that by traditions and practice through the best periods of ecclesiastical art he was justified.

But the word has gone out that the angels were to be changed at once. The soft feminine faces will be made more stern and the rounded feminine cheeks and other contours will be made rigid and muscular.

LIFE'S COLORS.

"All flesh is grass," the good book says,
Perhaps that's why we've seen
Within this human world of men
So many people green!
But things do move, the sun revolves,
And colors change their hue,
For in the time when worry comes,
I feel a deep, dark blue!

And then, anon, when pain doth rack
The frame of optimist,
The blue evolves into the black
And makes one pessimist.
Thus green doth change into the blue,
The blue into the black,
And each one leaves on life its hue,
And each one leaves its track.

But when from green we go to white,
We climb the hills of bliss;
Life's day is then to us most bright,
A joy we would not miss!
And when in bliss one does unfold
And streaks the white with yellow,
Gathering in the good rich gold,
He is a fine young fellow!

THE NEW POET.

Some Critical and Philosophical Remarks.

True to her Emersonian philosophy, Ella Wheeler Wilcox sings for one time more the song of cheer, hoping thereby to solace a great unknown who, on the 25th of August, in City Hall Park, New York, wove sundry depressing stanzas which the Boston American presented to its readers along with her condolence and the sweet accompaniment of womanly advice, in its issue of September 25. Sings the unknown in question:

"Here in the mute despair of tearless eyes
Lies the most pitiful of things—dead grief
Mourned in unvoiced groans, in unbreathed sighs—
Death hoped, yet feared; Life measured long, tho' brief.

Such is the lot under the canopy
That arches o'er this cirque of battered ghouls;
The ghosts of midnight leer where sunbeams play—
Woe is the only season in our souls."

Had he but thought of it, the motto over the gates of Dante's hell might have been utilized in strengthening the climax! Be that as it may, Ella excited by the dolor, comes to the rescue eagerly enough, saying in that dear kind way of hers, "It may be drink, it may be drugs, it may be mere shiftlessness and extravagance which has brought him to the parks." (Might it not be that he had an appointment with his sweetheart?) Inferring that he is lazy and out at the elbows and too familiar with the primrose path, she bids him redeem the past (which would be too big a contract for the most of us,) and not be a bad boy any more. Promising him success, so only he will do right and keep at work.

This is surely good. Let us hope that the arrow sped straight to the mark, as it deserved to do.

Meantime, is it not Charles Lamb who warns us against the deceitfulness of poets? Who believes Wordsworth when he tells us that from the flower the glory fled away when he was young? We all know better! For such as he nature retains her magic to the last. Never in vain for him gleams dew and star.

Coleridge acknowledged that Kubla Khan was merely a fabrication, that it never happened; that it wasn't so. Silence, Sire! That Abyssinian maid, swinging her dulcimer, remains a sweet reality for the mind. No light of fact shall dematerialize her Eastern loveliness.

Says Longfellow, "Things are not what they seem." Says Tom Moore:

"The smiles of joy, the tears of woe,
Deceitful shine, deceitful flow."

Says Emerson, "Men bemoan themselves, but 'tis not so bad with them as they say." We sympathize with the hero of Locksley Hall, but to pity Tennyson would evoke a smile.

Let us, therefore, approach with due decorum, bearing our poor alms of advice and pity, this tuneful lounger of City Hall Park, New York, lest he prove to be a well-garbed diner-out, who, being depressed by too much duck and speech-making, beguiled an interval by masquerading in poesy and sackcloth; and who, smiling in his sleeve, will drawl indulgently, "Well done, my children." Carting coals to Newcastle remains inviolate the ridiculous philanthropy.

Says Arthur John Lockhart, "The man may need your pity and crave it; but the poet?—never! A desert is not destitute to him." Olympus is his home and his comrades are the immortals. Think, then, of the absurdity of predicting for Apollo good luck and ducats!

As for the New York poet, having made a hit he naturally will try his hand again. Let nothing him dismay in shape of sins. Byron was as drunk as any of them, and DeQuincey beat us all despite the opium. What mattered the jail to Bunyan? To each came in divinest measure supreme success. "Man is superior to circumstances."

AN APPALLING CRY OF WARNING.

Presaging the Death of a Much Beloved Grandmother.

I lived from childhood in my grandmother's house, which was situated in an isolated place some distance from the street, the nearest house being at least thirty rods away. It was in March, the ground was covered with snow, and the stillness of a semi-country neighborhood at that season prevailed. My mother and grand grandmother had gone to spend the afternoon with a relative, and an old friend of the family, Miss K,—and myself, were let alone to take tea in an informal fashion in the sitting room which overlooked the entire surroundings of the house.

Miss K— was standing by the window, tea cup in hand; I near the stove, when suddenly through the stillness there fell from the upper air a prolonged, agonizing, and most appalling scream, as if from a human in intense agony. For several seconds it lasted, while we stood in frozen horror, the tea cup falling from Miss K—'s hand. It seemed an age before those unearthly sounds, for we both knew instinctively that no earthly power could have caused them, finally died away. I recognized instantly the voice of my grandmother, who was especially beloved by me, in that terrible cry, though at that moment she was more than a mile away.

As soon as I could recover speech, I asked Miss K— if she thought it sounded like any one's voice whom we knew. "Yes," she replied unhesitatingly, "It sounded like your grandmother's voice."

It was no use to search outside for the cause, though we made a pretense of doing so. No person, animal, or bird was to be seen, and the landscape for a long distance was fully open to sight. We were both utterly unable to do any thing after that until the welcome sound of returning sleighbells was heard coming up the avenue, for we supposed some dreadful thing had happened to my grandmother. I rushed out to greet her, but she seemed as usual, and did not understand why I threw my arms around her in an agony of relief and joy.

Four months later, however, Miss K— and myself were the attendants at her dying bed, where her struggles for breath brought back the memory of the cry we had heard in the stillness of the spring twilight, and it was at exactly the same hour in the day that we closed her eyes in death. This was forty-two years ago, but I can still hear that cry, and still feel the shiver of terror that it inspired. Neither Miss K— nor myself ever doubted that it was a "warning" from the other world.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS

Considered as Related to Courtship and Marriage.

The principal argument on this topic was made in a former article, but instead of it having been criticised by the press and especially by the lady readers, I had some very complimentary commendations, and requests to write more on the same subject. But without some counter-irritant, or some fault found with my former article, I do not have much more to add; but would like to make a few more additional suggestions.

Assuming that a fortunately mated couple in matrimony is a desirable consummation—devoutly to be looked and wished for by every adult member of the race, the question is, whether the present modus operandi to attain this end, in which only one side can make affirmative choices and advances, is commensurate with the best results. I assume that there are a good many ladies involuntarily unmarried, and also that there are too many other people who are unequally and unhappily yoked together as husband and wife; and I had assumed that some women would knowingly accept unworthy marriage proposals rather than run the risk of not getting another or better one, and that this is oft a cause or source of unhappiness in after married life.

And is it not a rather violent assumption that when only one side can exercise the choice of a partner, that the very gentleman that the woman would have selected will make a marriage proposal to her, and thus give to the woman the very chance to have her choice in the selection of a husband that she would have exercised if she had been permitted to make a choice of her own? Is it probable that when the woman cannot make an affirmative choice, generally the very man that she would have chosen will come along and offer himself to her? This would give rather too great a premium on fate, haphazard and accident, to be a safe rule for happy marriages. The model mating of husband and wife is the Mecca of the home, that also marks and models the child life, that re-peoples our country with an essentially new population about every twenty-five years; and this child-life and new population gets its moral tone and character largely from the family hearthstone. Can it be assumed that a virtually unilateral, or one-sided marriage contract can bring the best results in the after family life? Will it prepare the way for a happy hit?

It is a matter of common knowledge that there is too much infelicity in the family life that results mostly from impolite and coarse conduct between the members, that does not take place between the same persons as they meet on the streets and in business life, when the very opposite, if there is to to be any difference, should be the case. And the question is whether the present uni-lateral mode of mating in marriage does not contribute to this state of things? Anyway, if there is a more excellent way it should have universal sympathy in its consideration by the public. For the mistakes in matrimonial match-making are almost irremediable also in relation to the best citizenship.

Religion is a great and good thing; but cannot work impossibilities, nor undo the mistakes in marriage. Child life in its general trend receives its tendency from the twig of the family tree. Nothing can so touch life as the love of the home. And the home, in its inception, should as far as possible be removed from the accidental, the makeshift marriage, or that which gathers a consent thereto by the constraint of anything but complete freedom.

TELLS OF A RECENT TRAGEDY.

The Medium Claims to Know Murderer of Miss Vogel—Interesting Stories Which Are Related by a Police Officer of His Experience with a Medium.

For several days past a trance medium has been closely examined with reference to the tragic death of Miss Vogel of Galveston at the Oaks Hotel several years ago. The experiments have been carefully carried out with every appearance of sincerity, and a certain officer who has been working on the case for some time has been plying the medium with questions during his periods of excitement.

For those who reject as worthless and incredible these peculiar psychic phenomena brought out during the state of hypnosis, the conclusions arrived at, whatever they might be, will be considered worthless. For those who believe in such things, however, the experiments will not be without interest.

It is stated that the medium has already described minutely the circumstances attending the terrible death of Miss Vogel; that it has been communicated to him from the spirit world who committed the alleged murder, and that he has supplied the officer with the name and whereabouts of the guilty party.

It is stated that from the spirit world it has been revealed that the murderer of Miss Vogel was a negro, and not a white man. It is further stated that some of the revelations made by the trance medium corroborate certain evidence already attained as a result of independent investigation and that the officer is convinced that he has found a valuable clue.

The full facts touching the peculiar experiments are in the hands of the writer, but for obvious reasons it is not desired that a fuller statement should be made public at this time.

It is further stated that the officer in question at first was led to make the experiments through accident and was thoroughly skeptical with respect to these occult phenomena, but the revelations made to him are of such startling character that he has become convinced, as it were, against his will that the spirit of Miss Vogel has communicated with him through the medium of the other world and revealed the name of her alleged assassin.

The experiments, it is understood, are to be continued with a view of securing additional evidence and of revealing the whereabouts of the papers in the Vogel case which were mysteriously stolen from the records and whose disappearance created somewhat of a sensation some time ago.—Journal, Beaumont, Texas.

The March of Fifty Years.

Death! And yet death is but the angel of deliverance, smiling through the veil of flesh.

1. What then? The resurrection of the subjective soul-body up out of the perishing physical body.

2. What then? Its entrance into that ever-present yet more conscious ether-sphere of spirit, with all its mental, moral and spiritual belongings.

3. What then? After due self-examination, self-judgment, and a primary adjustment to the new condition of life comes the immutable law of ascent or descent of this new-born being (now dual—spirit and particled soul-body), to the lower Tartarean Zone adjoining the earth; or to the higher encircling spheres of blissful delight.

4. What then? As consciousness and memory persist beyond the tomb, and as death does not touch nor mar the inmost individuality, friend at once seeks friend, renewing the tenderest, purest fellowships of earth. Thoughts over there are realizations, and grand beyond the telling are the recognitions of the loved and loving.

5. What then? Teachers, physicians, sages and kind, clear-seeing seers selected by the mighty hierarchies of heaven, descend from their lofty homes to enlighten and lift up those poor, despairing, earth-born dwellers in the moral darkness of the Tartarean realms. God's love spans all worlds, and his mercy endureth forever.

6. What then? The light of heavenly faces, the opening up of better opportunities, the pointing to grander ideals to be attained, and with these the more intense march of progress begins—an onward, upward march of evolutionary unfoldment, towards a never-ending immortality of joy transcending joy, and ecstasy transcending ecstasy unspeakable.

The Concept of Spiritualism, Deep and All-Embracing.

Consider the vast depths of this word "Spirit." It reaches high as the heavens, descends deep as the lowest hells, and is as wide as the planetary immensities. It is Almighty, because God is Spirit. And the corner-stone, the very foundation of Spiritualism, is Spirit. All true self-sacrificing Spiritualists are spiritually-minded persons. They walk in the spirit. They have more or less of the Christ-promised gifts, inspirations, healings, visions, or trances. Their homes are hallowed Bethels of charity, rest and peace.

Spiritualism, I repeat, is all-embracing. Its concept includes the whole. It implies the will of God manifest as energy. It is the foundation of sciences, the philosophy of philosophies, striking at the root-foundation of creative preparation, purposed conception, guarded gestation, wise pre-natal environment, careful child-training, rigid youth-guiding, and the kindest home, heart and spirit-inspired suggesting, day by day. These are among the ideals to be considered and strenuously practiced now on the Adamic plane, looking up to the higher Christ plane of the resurrection, and co-operative communism.

The spirit quickeneth. It is the spirit that giveth life. Take the spirit out of Universalism, out of Unitarianism, out of Quakerism, out of Christian Science, Mental Science, Metaphysical Science, Divine Healing, the New Thought, or any form of liberalism, and they are simply shells, and worse—they are dry, dead ashes. Every demonstrated truth in Theosophy is included in the all-inclusive curriculum and concept of Spiritualism, and the Christian churches of the world must ultimately accept these divine inspirations—these heaven-projected phenomena, with the sublime philosophy of Spiritualism or die. There is no alternative. Many of them are now living, by confession, at a poor dying rate. They, the preachers, have our sympathy so far as they are conscientious, and are living the beautiful life. Late revivals based on biblical texts and confessions of faith have proved stupendous failures. And yet, "Feed my sheep," is still the Master's cry. Millions are hungering for the bread of life, thirsting for the spiritual waters of redemption, and crying, "Show us the Father! Show us the Mother! Show us the highway to truth!"

Personally these octogenarian years are my happiest years. The sun never shone so brightly, and the falling, whirling autumn leaves were never so musical. Unwise enemies never looked so diminutive, acquaintances so noble and friends so loyal. By nature I am an optimist. The principle is imbedded in the very depths of my inmost being. This is God's world. Up through mire and compost grasses spring. Demons physically bodied or disembodied are moving up in divers ways to the temples of the beautiful. Progress—Divine uses, abound everywhere.

The ideal is ever being attained, yet never attained. Imperfections are the stepping stones up to the higher hillside fountains. Penitential tears are ever crystallizing into diamonds. Our mistakes are often masked messengers inviting, pointing the way to sublimer attainments, and to those loftier altitudes of love and wisdom which make radiant the homes of the gods.

Daily does my soul sing hallelujah anthems to the All-Father, to the Christs and seers of the ages, to ministering angels, and to the loving discarnate spirits whose white feet press the evergreen shores of immortality. Indeed, these octogenarian years, I repeat, are my happiest, because spiritually, the most youthful, confiding and hopeful. God is good.

Let us, O, Universalists, Unitarians, Swedenborgians, Quakers, Shakers, Spiritualists, reformers, liberalists of all religious shades, drop our non-essentials, forget or make secondary our crotchety isms, and marshalling our battalions, and fusing our principles in the spirit of fraternity into the crucible of love—pure love—divine love, form one grand army, one serried host, one mighty crusade, not to rescue Jerusalem from Islam, but to go forth under the peaceful banner, Love, Wisdom and Work, a soul-consecrated crusade of earnest, inspired men and women, marching, and singing as we march,

"Go to the pillow of disease, where night gives no repose,
And on the cheek where pallor lies, bid health to plant a rose.

Go where the friendless stranger lies to perish in his doom;
Snatch from the grave his closing eyes, and bring his blessings home."

Let us go into the prisoner's cell, into the deepest dens of vice, the darkest, lowest walks of life, kindly saying, "Brother, come up higher; sister there is a better way—beloved all, take our friendly hands, break your shackles of fear, break the binding withes as did Samson, and rise up into that moral heroism, that royal manhood, that regal womanhood, which is your rightful inheritance. Forgive all wrongs. Banish, so far as possible, the past. Look trustingly upward. Speak only of the good; think only of the beautiful, and you will find—positively find—a waiting white-robed angel within yourself."

Trim then, and support the tender, tremulous vine; mildly mold the wild olive; stoop to lift up the lowest; encourage in lute-like tones the disconsolate, care for the orphan; dry the mourner's tears, and stand firmly, with all soul-illumined reformers, regardless of name, creed, or sect—stand shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, with the seers of the past and the saints of to-day, clad in the panoply of love and peace. And angels' eyes beholding your work, your devoted, self-sacrificing lives, of living, laboring and suffering for others' good, will re-shout the grand old anthem, the sweet, seraphic song of peace,

"Peace on earth, and good will among men!"

Battle Creek, Mich.

THE LAND OF THE LITTLE FACES.

I wonder, Oh, I wonder, where the little faces go,
That come, and smile, and stay awhile, and pass like flakes of snow—
The dear, wee baby faces that the world has never known,
But mothers hide, so tender eyed, deep in their hearts alone.

I love to think that somewhere, in the country we call heaven,
The land most fair of anywhere will unto them be given,
A land of little faces—very little, very fair—
And every one shall know her own and cleave unto it there.

O grant it, loving Father, to the broken hearts that plead!
Thy way is best—yet oh, to rest in perfect faith indeed!
To know that we shall find them, even them, the wee, white dead,
At thy right hand, in thy bright land, by living waters led!

—James Buckham in the Wayside Altar.

The true Christian not only feels no need of culture, because this is a worldly principle and opposed to feeling, he has also no need of (natural) love. God supplies him the want of love, of a wife, of a family.—Feuerbach.

Tolerance is a most impious system and contrary to the views of the clergy. It can only be practiced by those Christians whose lack of zeal leads them to betray the interests of the church, by allowing everyone to think in his own way on certain questions; and especially on such questions as one can understand.—Voltaire.

Gladly will every truth seeker change his conduct when convinced of sin, for he injures himself who abides in his error.—Marcus Aurelius Antoninus.

IMPORTANT WORK.

"Official Register of the National, State and Local Spiritualist Associations of the United States and Canada, With Lyceums, Camp-Meetings and Mediums."

The above is the title of a highly important illustrated work, gotten up with painstaking care, by Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, the efficient vice-president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, 1047 Carmen Avenue, Chicago. It contains 100 pages, and will prove of great value to those who wish to get information in regard to the different societies located in various parts of the country. It is gotten up in a most beautifully artistic style, and reflects great credit on its compiler. This long needed work will impress the casual observer with the extensive following we have, and the dignity due to the grandest and most important philosophy now before the whole civilized world. It leads off with a magnificent photo-engraving of Mrs. Abby Louise Pettengill, president of the "City of Light" Assembly, Lily Dale, N. Y., who is a prominent factor in the education process now going on in our ranks. This Official Register can be obtained by addressing this office. Price $1.

A NEW DEPARTURE.
Magnetized Photographic Plates, for use by all desiring to develop their mediumship in spirit photography. These will be of great assistance to you if your powers tend in this direction, in fact you CAN NOT develop in this line unless your plates ARE magnetized. Few persons have the proper magnetism to do this. I have had twenty years' experience. I also give instructions by mail.

MATERIALIZATION "What I Know of Materialization," by Mme. E. d'Esperance, and "Materialization a Fact in Nature," by B. F. Austin. A most excellent work. Price 10c.

The Wonders of Life.
By ERNEST HAECKEL, Author of "The Riddle of the Universe." This book is confined to the realm of organic science, and treats of "The Knowledge, Nature, Functions and History of Life." Price, cloth, $1.50.

The Riddle of the Universe.
By Prof. Ernest Haeckel,
Of the University of Jena.
This is an English translation of Professor Haeckel's magnificent work "Die Weltrathsel." The main strength of the book lies in a terse and telling summary of scientific achievements of the nineteenth century in their relation to "The Riddle of the Universe." Dr. Haeckel has a world-wide reputation, and this is his supreme effort. Price, cloth, $1.50.

THE SOUL: ITS NATURE, RELATIONS AND EXPRESSIONS IN HUMAN EMBODIMENTS. Third edition now on sale. Price $1.00. This is one of the best books given by the guides of Mrs Cora L. V. Richmond. They are really lessons, published primarily, as a book of reference for those who have been members of the classes receiving them. This volume is a careful compilation from reports of lessons, containing the bases of the teachings.

HARMONIES OF EVOLUTION.
The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science
As taught by modern masters of law. By Florence Huntley. An exceedingly interesting and distinctly valuable contribution to the literature of evolution, unfolding its laws from the deeper and clearer spiritual aspect, and indicating the defects of the Darwinian theory. Spiritualists and Materialists alike can gain much from its perusal. Price, finely bound in cloth, $1.

Texas State National Spiritualists Assoc'n.

TEXAS ANNUAL CONVENTION.

Report of the President on the Status of the Cause.

The Texas State National Association of Spiritualists held its ninth annual meeting in Dallas, Tex., Sept. 29, 30, and Oct. 1.

The meeting was opened with music, Mrs. M. Maline presiding at the piano, and an invocation was worded by Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale of Fort Worth, after which a very cordial address of welcome was extended by Mayor Barry, to the officers, delegates and visitors, having the effect of making one and all feel at home.

Laura B. Payne, president of the association, followed the address of welcome by a short address, in her usual scholarly and eloquent way.

Spirit messages were given by Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner of Chicago.

The business session was called to order the following morning by President Laura B. Payne. The usual routine of business was disposed of, the interesting points in discussion were that of placing missionaries in the state, and the organization of a camp-meeting association. Much interest was shown, and it was decided to leave it to the board of trustees for consideration, to meet some time during the present month.

The societies sending reports were as follows: Galveston, Beaumont, Flatonia, Marshall, Austin, Dallas and Smithville.

The officers elected for the ensuing year were:

Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale, president, Fort Worth; Mrs. Wm. Akin, vice-president, Beaumont; Mrs. Minnie Malone, secretary, Smithville; Capt. J. C. Watkins, treasurer, Dallas. The board of trustees elected were: Mr. E. Fries of Galveston; Mr. A. Eidelbach, Flatonia, Mrs. L. Gardner, Beaumont, Mr. H. C. Brehop, Austin, Dr. J. H. McCarty, Marshall.

Mr. John W. Ring was elected as delegate to the National convention, to be held in Minneapolis, Minn., the present month.

Beaumont was selected as the place of holding the next annual convention of the state association.

During the convention the evening meetings consisted of songs, music and lectures, and the leading feature of the convention was the spirit messages and the fire test given by the renowned and wonderful medium, Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner of Chicago.

The meetings were largely attended, and the speakers and workers seemed to be at their best, having the effect of arousing considerable interest.

The state association closed its meeting feeling truly this has been the best meeing during the state organization.

SECRETARY.

Annual Report of the President of the Texas State Spiritualist Association.

It is not with a feeling of exultation over great things achieved in our work in Texas the past year that I begin this report, yet I believe that while there has been but little said in our papers about the progress of our cause in this state, that work has been going on just the same.

The effort heretofore seems to have been to send missionaries about the state to organize new societies, which after the missionary left, in a majority of cases, fell into a state of apathy and become to all intents and purposes defunct; while our effort has been to keep alive those in existence at present, we have no cause to think the status of organization is below what it has been during the past few years, which is not saying much for organization in Texas, either.

During the past summer I have traveled some in this, and a good deal in other states, and by comparison find this will average up with the best of those I visited, and that is not saying much for this state, either.

I don't know what my co-workers in the field think, but to me it looks as if Spiritualism as an organization is on the wing.

The reasons for this I think are very obvious. Spiritualists are hard to organize, and it is difficult to maintain the movement for the following reasons:

1. Spiritualists are as a rule free-thinkers, having no Gods or Goddesses, and the majority not having advanced to the point where they will unselfishly co-operate for truth's sake, they are like sheep gone astray without a leader, or atoms without a common center around which to evolve.

They remind me of the children of Israel wandering in the wilderness, they have not yet reached Canaan land. They have left the Egypt of traditional theology and are now wandering in the wilderness of selfishness and indifference. They are no longer frightened by the orthodox hell, neither are they energized by the hope of a glittering crown, a golden harp and a gold-streeted heaven. This is all right, I suppose, a step in their evolution, but it is bad for organizations for they either sit supinely down in the "stool of doing nothing, or spend their money patronizing fake phenomena; instead of seeing the beauty in philosophy and the good they might do, by spreading the knowledge of it throughout the world it appeals to them only as a means of material gain. Thus in every city, town and hamlet they may be found sitting at the feet, a devout worshiper of some Madam Zolga, or Sir Somebody who has advertised in flaming headlines to tell the past, present and future, reunite sundered lovers, bring about divorces, etc. (This last they do not advertise to do, but do it just the same.) Never have I felt more mortified than on one occasion last year while living and lecturing in San Antonio, Texas, one of these "wolves in sheep's clothing" had left the city with thousands of dollars in money and jewelry taken in confidence from women, who, when they found he had gone, raised a terrible cry as to how they had been robbed by that "medium," and while the officers of the law were searching for a clue as to his whereabouts, they came to interview me, asking questions seemingly to find out if I, being a Spiritualist, might not be in league with him.

Thus all who bear the name of Spiritualist are bearing the burden imposed by such as he, and blushing with shame at the stigma they have placed upon the name.

The above are the main reasons I think, why Spiritualism as a movement does not grow.

You may call yourself a Christian scientist, mental scientist, new thoughtist, or what you will, and its all well enough, but just say you are a Spiritualist, the name given those who embraced that blessed truth that so blazed forth in the 19th century as to light the whole world, and that has permeated all creeds, cults and isms making their adherents more tolerant, hopeful and happy, and you are laughed to scorn oftimes. Who are to blame mainly? Those human vultures who hang like dark clouds above our ranks and feed on the very vitals of the cause.

I wish to say in this connection that there are a few honest mediums whom I have met this last summer and of former occasions, who are sacrificing noble lives in the cause of humanity, doing much good. To them I reach the glad hand and shall ever hold them in kind remembrance, and I wish all such to know that when I speak as I have regarding would-be mediums and those who prostitute their mediumship to bad purposes, I have not reference to honest mediumship.

During the last year we have had as lecturers in our state, Harrison D. Barrett, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Isa Wilson Kayner, and several others from abroad, while John W. Ring has held his post at Galveston, and he has built up a good society, and other speakers here and there doing the best they can under the circumstances.

There is a movement on foot at the present to organize a camp-meeting association and hold a camp-meeting next year somewhere near Dallas and Fort Worth. This will be a good thing and will help arouse the interest in the state work.

I would advise that the state association try to locate speakers at the larger places and keep at least one missionary in the field. That the missionaries visit unorganized territory and build up new societies, occasionally making en route to these points the larger towns, and holding a sort of revival in co-operation with the local speaker if there be one. Where a small society is organized, and a speaker cannot be maintained, a reading circle might be held once a week and a free reading room kept open, also home circles might be encouraged.

Texas is a good field for one who is looking for lots to do, and is willing to make sacrifices for the good of the cause.

There is a vast territory over which to travel, but it is dotted over with as kind-hearted, genial, truth-loving people as will be found in the United States. I have done missionary work here for the past three years, have lectured often in small towns and schoolhouses on Spiritualism, Socialism, and any other "isms" chosen and I chose, and always have I had willing, tolerant hearers, and never in one instance have I had ill treatment because of the philosophy I taught, no word against Spiritualism (when rightly understood).

And now at the close of this convention I wish to withdraw from services as an official. I do not intend to cease my labors nor shrink from duty, but believe I can do better work when free and undisturbed by office.

In conclusion let me thank the good people of the Lone Star State who have rendered me aid in my efforts since coming into the state three years ago, also the president of the N. S. A., Harrison D. Barrett, and Mrs. M. T. Longley, the secretary, who have nobly come to my assistance in the time of need. May success crown all their efforts and the dove of peace and prosperity perch on their banner.

And let me not forget to mention in gratitude Mr. John W. Ring, who, always anxious for the good cause, here has aided me much with advice and encouraging words. And last but not least, let me thank our noble state secretary, Mrs. Minnie Malone of Smithville, Texas, to whose untiring efforts with tongue and pen throughout the year, is due whatever of success our association has achieved; may she live long to work for the enlightenment of humanity.

Thanking one and all here and elsewhere for their kind co-operation, and with a heart full of gratitude to the unseen helpers, I am,

Yours for progress,
LAURA B. PAYNE,
President T. S. N. S. A.
Fort Worth, Texas.

CLEVELAND TO THE FRONT.

Dedication of the First Spiritualists Temple.

Sunday, October 1, the writer had the pleasure of taking part in the dedication of the First Spiritualists' Temple of Cleveland, Ohio, which was indeed a grand success, owing greatly to the efforts of the Temple Fund Society whose members are mostly ladies of Cleveland.

Upon my arrival in Cleveland and later at the temple, which is located on Fullerton avenue, I was delighted to find such a commodious building, nicely located and away from the noise of street cars and locomotive whistling, and which was later in the day dedicated and given the above name. In addition to the temple proper, in which spiritual food and enlightenment for years to come will be partaken of, the temple contains a nice kitchen and commodious dining-room in which the inner man will from time to time be properly satisfied, and if the meal served today by the ladies is a fair sample the most fastidious who partake of their hospitality can but be well pleased. In addition to an elaborate dinner, potted plants were greatly in evidence for decorative purposes, and everything was done to make the occasion a grand success.

The morning session was mostly taken up in speech making, and vocal and instrumental music, with Dr. C. W. Haines of Bedford, as chairman. At the afternoon session the dedicatory services proper were held, and to-day the first and only Spiritualist temple, owned and controlled by the Spiritualists of Cleveland, became a fixture, in which for years to come, the philosophy and phenomena will be exemplified and promulgated. After the dedicatory services were over Brother F. D. Dunakin delivered an exceptionally fine and appropriate lecture, and had not finished when the time arrived for the writer to take his train for Canton. Brother D. A. Herrick was booked for a lecture in the evening, which no doubt, judging from his lectures in the past, will be exceptionally good. E. R. KIDD.

THE FUTURE DOES NOT WORRY ME

I think perhaps there is a place
Where disembodied souls abide,
And then again I think perhaps
Man ceased to live the day he died.

One hundred thousand human souls
Pass over the divide each day;
Over they go like fish in shoals
To meet an unknown destiny.

We look out on the universe,
See countless worlds in ether roll;
And then we hear the preacher man
Say he knows God who made the whole (?).

The preacher's business is to talk,
He has ambition that is sure,
But preaching hell is out of date,
If one soul lives all must endure.

The future does not worry me,
Can meet that like a little man;
For I believe the Father has Made no mistake in Nature's plan.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32. CHICAGO, ILL., OCT. 21, 1905. NO. 830

C. Bailey, the Renowned Australian Medium.

We give, this week, the latest details in regard to C. Bailey, the Australian Medium, one of the most remarkable of the present age. His wonderful achievements as a medium read like a fairy tale, though no doubt true in all respects. The articles brought to his six seances are in possession of the Stanford University, of California, for inspection.

In Nos. 821 and 822 of The Progressive Thinker we published marvelous accounts of a medium known as the Blacksmith Mahatma. The name of the blacksmith medium, sensitive or mahatma, as he is variously known, and about whom all this discussion is really centered, is C. Bailey, and these manifestations occurred in Australia. His work as a communer with the inhabitants of the astral world, his undoubted ability to perform seeming miracles and his record of accomplished phenomena are common knowledge among scholars of the highest thought everywhere. Lombroso believes in him and the Spiritualistic theory that he represents. So does Alfred Russell Wallace, collaborator of Darwin and the foremost living European naturalist. So does Professor William Crookes, inventor of the radiometer and the otheoscope, fellow of the Royal Society in England and gold medalist of the French Academy of Sciences. So do Professor James of Harvard, Professor Hyslop of Columbia, Camille Flammarion, first among astronomers; Prof. W. F. Barrett, F. R. S. E., professor of experimental physics and dean of the faculty of the Royal College of Sciences in Ireland. So do a hundred others of like eminence.

For instance, one of the investigators would ask that an astral body, or control of the medium, should fetch into the circle something from a great distance. In less than a minute this was invariably done. Jungle sparrows from India, sitting in their nests and chirruping excitedly, were sometimes plumped down upon the circle. Coins of great antiquity and rarity were instantly produced, when asked for. Burmese rubies, a sacred turtle of Benares, contemporary coin from Cairo, a sea crab—still living—rings covered with verdigris and set with diamonds, sapphires, turquoises, all bearing the unmistakable evidences of having had their origin in past centuries—these offerings were common.

At one sitting, Stanford asked that a live ibis should be brought from Egypt. It was on the table in ten seconds. Some other members of the circle then requested that the astral body controlled by Bailey should bring a fish from the sea. Instantly, or as soon as the lights could be turned on, those present saw on the table a shovel-nosed shark, a foot and a half long and entangled in sea weed from which salt water still dripped. Nothing was too difficult for these forces of the supernatural. A skeptic once requested Bailey to produce a kind of bread called "chaputi," which is made in India and spoils when it is has been baked twenty-four hours. The bread came on the heels of the demand for it still hot from the oven.

Articles Produced.

To show how prolific was the ability of the ghostly messengers who sped on Bailey's errands, the following list is given of things produced at six successive sittings, a list which is submitted by those who were present at these sittings as being a true one, under oath:

Eight live birds from various countries.
One bird's egg from Ceylon.
Four nests from Egypt and India.
One Indian cap.
Eighty-seven antique coins, sixteen of which were produced in full daylight.
One newspaper in Arabic.
One leopard skin.
Four shrubs.
One pair of antique slipper shapes.
One blood garnet.
Two spinifex rubies.
Two green sapphires.
Two chrisobels.
Two cinnamon stones.
Six moon stones.
Three turquoises in full daylight.
Seven clay tablets, with inscriptions in hieroglyphics which were afterward translated, two of these tablets being produced in full daylight.
One Egyptian scarabeus.
One Bedouin woman's head-dress with sequins.
One witch doctor's belt.
Two live sacred turtles from Benares in full daylight.

Astonished Europe.

Naturally, the news of these astonishing performances was received in Europe, where men of the finest type of scholarship are not afraid to proclaim their interest in such matters, with much enthusiasm and curiosity. A movement was soon set on foot, as a result of this feeling, to induce Mr. Stanford to permit Bailey to journey to Italy and repeat his demonstrations before a specially selected circle of investigators. These investigators, headed by Lombroso and Schiapparelli, included such famous names as those of Count Baudi de Vesme, Professor Falcomer, Signora Virginia Paganini, the Florentine philanthropist, Professor Rossi de Guistiniani, and a score of others. Bailey went to Italy, repeated the phenomena of the Melbourne seances and convinced every one of these new witnesses of the genuineness of his psychic power.

THE VERY LATEST ACCOUNT.

The San Francisco Examiner of September 25, says:

After all there is a chance for the strange tablets, beasts, birds and bits of jewelry torn from the tombs of ancient Egyptian and Assyrian monarchs by the astral body of Bailey, the Australia mahatma, at the request of Thomas Welton Stanford, brother of the late Senator Stanford, to find a resting place on the shelves and in the cabinets of the museum of the Leland Stanford Jr. University.

Dr. David Starr Jordan a few days ago requested Professor Rolfe, the Greek archaeologist, to thoroughly investigate the authenticity of the Bailey findings. However, Professor Rolfe does not quite feel equal to the task of finally passing upon the merits of the case. So he will ask Professor Margolis of the University of California and Dr. John Peters, a clergyman who has assisted in Mesopotamian excavations, to help him solve the mystery.

Already Mr. Stanford, who is a very wealthy man, has had a number of continental experts pass upon the legitimacy of the tablets, etc., but before they are accorded spaceroom at Palo Aito it is deemed advisable to have others examine them.

If the local experts brand these curios as genuine they will take rank as one of the new world's wonders. Incidentally the scientific world will await with bated breath the action of Dr. Jordan, who is listed as a pronounced materialist.

It is a well-known fact that the late Mrs. Stanford firmly believed that the entire collection gathered for her brother by Bailey was actually taken from ancient tombs by the astral body of Mahatma Bailey.

Dr Jordan Is Holding for Trial Collection Offered by Thomas W. Stanford.

The Assyrian and Egyptian remains, the cuneiform inscriptions or hieroglyphics carved on metal cylinders, the sacred beetles and ancient coins said to have been "unearthed" or at least materialized by Bailey the Australian "mahatma," and donated by Thomas Welton Stanford to the museum of Stanford university, have not been rejected for lack of authenticity or other cause by that institution. They are simply on trial. They may prove to be the real thing, or on the other hand may turn out to be nothing better than a vulgar fraud of a sort not uncommon in the obscure region of archaeology. It is even possible that neither one of these things may be proved, and the antiquities real or supposed may hold companionship with the Calaveras skull and other relics about which learned doctors differ and sometimes call names.

Wordy and abusive battles may yet be fought by baldheaded and excited antiquarians over the coins of Ptolemy, Philopater, the prayers to the great gods Ashar & Bel, the noted Assyrian divinity firm, and the sacred scarabeus of Rameses the Great. They may take rank with the Man in the Iron Mask among historical mysteries, and peradventure even some future humorist like Bret Harte may endow them with an immortality equal to that of the Calaveras skull and superior to that conferred by the musty fussy recesses of a museum.

Dr. Jordan's Opinion.

President David Starr Jordan was seen yesterday at Stanford University and was asked what disposition of the remains had been made.

"Why," said Dr. Jordan, "they are under investigation as to their authenticity. Personally I know nothing about them save that they were accepted for the museum in accordance with the usual form. If I had been asked at the time of the first publication concerning them when I was in Europe during August I should have said I knew nothing at all about them, but on going through my correspondence I find that there was some formal correspondence about the gifts. I find that Mr. Stanford did write a letter asking me to submit them to some person skilled in such matters so that their authenticity or otherwise might be ascertained, but in the letter Mr. Stanford made no claims of occult origin for them. I then wrote to Professor Rolfe, who is a student of Greek archeology, to ascertain for me what they were. We have no Assyriologist in the faculty, and Professor Rolfe was the nearest substitute we had. If he cannot pronounce on them himself he will know whom to ask. I don't know what has been done about them or whether Professor Rolfe has yet taken up the matter.

Freaks Are Acceptable.

"Yes, it is our practice to accept everything that is donated to the museum. Our curators are competent to deal with them. I presume they have their own boneyards in case of necessity. But objects are not necessarily rejected because they have a freak or unusual history. They have a value as such to the student of psychological phenomena. They are evidence exhibits if you like. I have made a large collection of freak literature with this object. It is not because the stuff tells us anything of value, but because of the thing itself, the phenomenon, the manifestation of the working of the human mind. With regard to occult knowledge, so called, I have said that if any one would endow a chair for the study of such obscure phenomena the university would welcome the endowment, not at all as a means of teaching, but as a department of research.

"With regard to these particular objects said to have been procured by the astral body of Bailey, the whole thing proves nothing to my broad-mindedness or narrow-mindedness because, in fact, I had no part in it, and do not yet know what has been done."

Professor Rolfe who was selected as an almost Assyriologist to pass on the authenticity of the relics or specimens captured by Bailey's astral body, was asked what had been done in the matter.

"Why," said Professor Rolfe, "the matter so far as I know was only brought to my attention a few days ago. Dr. Jordan may have referred the matter to me earlier, but if so I had forgotten it. As soon as I examined the objects I saw that it was beyond me. I am not competent to pass upon them. I shall probably ask the opinion of Professor Margolis of the University of California, who really knows about such things, and of Dr. John Peters, a clergyman, who has assisted in Mesopotamian excavations, and who is at present in Europe. Dr. Peters is a clergyman, and has been engaged in excavation work in Mesopotamia for the University of Pennsylvania. No, nothing has been done yet, but I suppose it is up to me to ascertain the facts."

An Object Lesson.

For Spiritualists to Carefully Consider.

LEGERDEMAIN IN SPIRITUALISM.

It Is Becoming Too Frequent to be Tolerated—It Has to Some Extent, Invaded the Rostrum with Bogus Tests; Taken Possession of the Materializing Cabinet, and Was a Prominent Factor at the Chesterfield Camp. Read the Following and See How It Is Possible for Legerdemain to Deceive Spiritualists—"Oregon Boot" Taken Off Quicker Than Put On—"How Did I Do It? Keep on Guessing"—Local Theatrical Man Removes Handcuffs Faster Than the Officials Can Snap Locks.

The Los Angeles Herald has the following:

The "Oregon boot," a heavy manacle used by officials in transporting dangerous prisoners, and hitherto thought to be of such a nature as to make it impossible to remove it, has been safely locked on one man's ankle and despite the fact that he was securely handcuffed, three pairs being used, he removed the "boot" and all three pairs of the handcuffs in just three minutes and forty seconds, and did it without the aid of a key or an instrument of any kind.

Maurice F. Raymond, Secured With All the Ingenuity the Police Could Command.

The young man performing this wonderful feat was at the assembly room at police headquarters yesterday afternoon and gave a demonstration of his wonderful powers. He is Maurice F. Raymond, of New York, who is appearing at the Broadway theatre at present.

Removes "Oregon Boot."

Raymond not only removed the "Oregon boot" and the three pairs of handcuffs, but he also locked all of the manacles together and handed them back to the astonished officials who had placed them on him but a short time previous.

The "Oregon boot" is considered by police officials all over the country as the safest precaution against prisoners escaping in use. It is an immense boot made of leather, clamped with steel and at the top is a collar of steel four inches thick and weighing sixteen pounds.

This boot cannot be lifted from the ground but has to be dragged by the person wearing it. To chip away the lock is impossible, as the steel is of a width of four inches and it would take an expert mechanic at least an hour to cut it in two with a cold chisel.

Mr. Raymond After Removing the Shackles.

Raymond, when asked how he managed to get the cuffs off, said: "I'll have to keep you guessing."

"Do you ever take them off in public view?" was asked.

"I do sometimes, but even then it is so quick that no one sees how it is done."

Raymond is a native of New York and has been in the theatrical business all of his life. He appeared on the stage at the age of six months, being carried on in a part that required the presence of a baby. As soon as he became old enough he took up the profession. He has been working his handcuff and other tricks for the past seventeen years.

Had Mr. Raymond posed as a materializing medium, hundreds would have testified under oath that they recognized their spirit friends emerging from the cabinet. Few realize the part which legerdemain plays in our ranks. But thanks to the angels, a brighter day dawning on our cause.

There is food for reflection in the above. If Mr. Raymond had posed as a materializing medium, he could have coined money off the gullibles that can be found in nearly every large city, and they would have testified to the genuineness of the wonderful "spirit" manifestations given through him. The rope tying or materializing mediums amounts to nothing as a test; they can loosen themselves from the same without the least difficulty, and then materialize from 30 to 60 "spirits" during one evening. Is it not about time that legerdemain ceased being a factor in Spiritualism? Every "spirit" so far grabbed when standing outside of the cabinet has proved to be the medium dressed in artificial foggery of various kinds. No exception to this. Shall such disgraceful affairs cease, or must they be regarded as factors in Spiritualism?

Read carefully the wonderful exploits of Mr. Raymond; they afford a splendid object lesson for Spiritualists everywhere.

In the consideration of the fake and fraud question, the discussion of which very naturally excites much interest and develops strongly worded sentiments pro and con, it should not be lost to sight that an important principle is at stake, INVOLVING THE WHOLE CHARACTER, THE STATUS, AND THE FUTURE WELFARE OF SPIRITUALISM AS AN ORGANIC BODY.

The question involved amounts to this: Shall any fractional part of Spiritualism be delivered over into the hands of unprincipled tricksters in the guise of mediums, and the Cause take on the features, in its status and character before the world, of an unmitigated fraudulent conglomeration of fraud, chicanery, charlatanism, deception; OR SHALL SPIRITUALISM STAND WHOLLY AS A SYNONYM AND EXPONENT OF A PURE PHILOSOPHY, NOBLEST AND PUREST ETHICS, COMBINED WITH GENUINE TRUE MEDIUMSHIP AND REAL—NOT FICTITIOUS—PROOFS OF SPIRIT CONTINUITY, SPIRIT RETURN AND MANIFESTATION?

When two masters disagree, we can not serve both. When two principles are opposite, we can not hold fast to both.

What congenial union can exist between light and darkness? What unity between truth and falsehood? What harmonial concord can exist between honest mediumship and lying deception in the name of mediumship?

The question is up to Spiritualists: What shall Spiritualism be? Shall it, as an organism, be in part, or in any particular the embodiment of fraud, trickery, deception, falsehood?—Or shall it stand befort THE WORLD AS THE SOLE EMBODIMENT OF PURE AND NOBLE PRINCIPLES, THE ACME OF MORAL ETHICS, THE EXPONENT OF A PURE PHILOSOPHY, THE EXEMPLAR AND ADVOCATE OF GENUINE MEDIUMSHIP, BRINGING REAL PROOFS OF CONTINUED LIFE BEYOND DEATH, AND SPIRIT slipping handcuffs but no one had ever been found who could remove an "Oregon boot" in the length of time taken by Raymond.

Detective Smith, who aided in locking Raymond in, said it was the most wonderful exhibition of its kind he had ever witnessed.

"I've seen some pretty slick individuals," said Detective Smith, "but this fellow has them all beat. I don't see how he gets rid of the handcuffs in the first place, but to tackle the 'Oregon boot,' and get that off takes my breath away. This boot has always been supposed to be of such a kind as to be impossible to get it off of the foot. It beats me how he does it."

Officers Jones and Flammer, who aided in the locking process, were equally as mystified and said they did not understand how Raymond managed to get the handcuffs off.

After the "Oregon boot" had been When Raymond appeared at police station yesterday and said he could get away from any handcuffs that were placed on him the officials winked at each other and asked if he was willing to try on an "Oregon boot" and get rid of it. Raymond replied he could get out of anything and the boot was placed on his foot and locked.

It took the officers about five minutes to adjust the shoe to Raymond's foot and they placed his hands behind his back and locked three pairs of handcuffs upon them.

Raymond asked to be led into a room and the door locked. This was done, and in exactly three minutes and forty seconds he had removed all three pairs of the handcuffs and the "Oregon boot," unlocked the door of the room in which he had been placed and brought the cuffs out to the officers, all of them locked together.

Keeps Them Guessing.

The officials at headquarters were astounded. They had known of persons removed Raymond asked that his hands be placed beneath his knees and the handcuffs placed on his wrists, across each other and then locked together. This was done and he went into the room alone again. In just one minute and a half he had the handcuffs off of his wrists and, all locked together, forming a string of handcuffs.

Merits of Case.

Raymond, when asked how he managed to get the cuffs off, said: "I'll have to keep you guessing."

"Do you ever take them off in public view?" was asked.

"I do sometimes, but even then it is so quick that no one sees how it is done."

Raymond is a native of New York and has been in the theatrical business all of his life. He appeared on the stage at the age of six months, being carried on in a part that required the presence of a baby. As soon as he became old enough he took up the profession. He has been working his handcuff and other tricks for the past seventeen years.

Had Mr. Raymond posed as a materializing medium, hundreds would have testified under oath that they recognized their spirit friends emerging from the cabinet. Few realize the part which legerdemain plays in our ranks. But thanks to the angels, a brighter day dawning on our cause.

There is food for reflection in the above. If Mr. Raymond had posed as a materializing medium, he could have coined money off the gullibles that can be found in nearly every large city, and they would have testified to the genuineness of the wonderful "spirit" manifestations given through him. The rope tying or materializing mediums amounts to nothing as a test; they can loosen themselves from the same without the least difficulty, and then materialize from 30 to 60 "spirits" during one evening. Is it not about time that legerdemain ceased being a factor in Spiritualism? Every "spirit" so far grabbed when standing outside of the cabinet has proved to be the medium dressed in artificial foggery of various kinds. No exception to this. Shall such disgraceful affairs cease, or must they be regarded as factors in Spiritualism?

Read carefully the wonderful exploits of Mr. Raymond; they afford a splendid object lesson for Spiritualists everywhere.

In the consideration of the fake and fraud question, the discussion of which very naturally excites much interest and develops strongly worded sentiments pro and con, it should not be lost to sight that an important principle is at stake, INVOLVING THE WHOLE CHARACTER, THE STATUS, AND THE FUTURE WELFARE OF SPIRITUALISM AS AN ORGANIC BODY.

The question involved amounts to this: Shall any fractional part of Spiritualism be delivered over into the hands of unprincipled tricksters in the guise of mediums, and the Cause take on the features, in its status and character before the world, of an unmitigated fraudulent conglomeration of fraud, chicanery, charlatanism, deception; OR SHALL SPIRITUALISM STAND WHOLLY AS A SYNONYM AND EXPONENT OF A PURE PHILOSOPHY, NOBLEST AND PUREST ETHICS, COMBINED WITH GENUINE TRUE MEDIUMSHIP AND REAL—NOT FICTITIOUS—PROOFS OF SPIRIT CONTINUITY, SPIRIT RETURN AND MANIFESTATION?

When two masters disagree, we can not serve both. When two principles are opposite, we can not hold fast to both.

What congenial union can exist between light and darkness? What unity between truth and falsehood? What harmonial concord can exist between honest mediumship and lying deception in the name of mediumship?

The question is up to Spiritualists: What shall Spiritualism be? Shall it, as an organism, be in part, or in any particular the embodiment of fraud, trickery, deception, falsehood?—Or shall it stand befort THE WORLD AS THE SOLE EMBODIMENT OF PURE AND NOBLE PRINCIPLES, THE ACME OF MORAL ETHICS, THE EXPONENT OF A PURE PHILOSOPHY, THE EXEMPLAR AND ADVOCATE OF GENUINE MEDIUMSHIP, BRINGING REAL PROOFS OF CONTINUED LIFE BEYOND DEATH, AND SPIRIT RETURN TO COMMUNE WITH MORTALS?

Upon the moral status which Spiritualism assumes depends its future prosperity or adversity, its progress or its failure. NO ORGANIC SYSTEM CAN ALLY ITSELF WITH, OR BE DOMINATED IN PART BY FRAUD, AND NOT MEET DISASTER IN ULTIMATE CONSEQUENCE THEREOF.

An honest mediumship is the potent factor in the upbuilding of Spiritualism; fraud and deception are always sources of weakness and destruction, creating distrust, unbelief and antagonism on the part of honest investigators, who would have been convinced by genuine work, unmixed with fraud.

SPIRITUALISM AND THE OLD PYRAMIDS.

Dr. Peebles Tells Interesting Experiences in the land of the Pharaohs, in a Lecture Delivered Before the First Spiritual Church of Baltimore, Md.

Dr. J. M. Peebles lectured last night at the First Spiritual Church upon the Pyramids, Palestine and Spiritualism.

He said in part;

It has long been a question as to which was the oldest and first peopled country, Asia or America. No scholar believes nowadays that the world is only 6,000 years old and was originally made out of nothing. It is certain that the oldest range of rocks—the Laurentian—is found in the northlands of this continent, and while the oldest rocks, there would naturally be the oldest soils, grains and fruits, and hence the oldest or first inhabitants. At that remote period the Northern Arctic regions were tropical.

"The largest pyramid, now a mound made of sun-dried brick in Southern Mexico, the discovery of a negro obsidian skull 16 feet under the ground; Palenque and other ancient cities in Yucatan, with phallic symbols; the Uxmal pyramid, with the reported sinking of the Atlantis Isle some 11,000 years ago, all suggest that Egypt's pyramids may have been patterned after those upon this continent.

"The largest pyramid of Egypt, nearly 500 feet high, was not built alone for a king's tomb, but rather upon mathematical and astronomical principles; in a word, science. When down at the bottom of the shaft leading into the king's chamber I could look up and see stars at noontime, but not the pole star, which was visible when the pyramid was built, some 5,000 years ago. In the king's chamber, on the fiftieth tier of stone, is one solid granite block, estimated to weigh 900 tons; and yet there is no granite quarry within 70 miles. How this block was brought and there placed is a profound puzzle. In the center of the chamber is the mysterious cornerstone supposed to be Egypt's standard of national measurement, which measurement was transferred to the Jews, the Greeks, the Romans, to England, and ultimately to this country. There are lost arts. The ancient Egyptians could transfer color through glass—could harden copper as hard as steel and chemically mix a mummy solution defying time—these are all arts lost to us.

"Having with me on the summit of this great pyramid a remarkable psychic he was entranced by one of the old pyramid builders and the address was grand and uplifting beyond description.

"Egypt was called in the Old Testament Mizraim. Steaming down the Nile from Cairo to Alexandria, where was burned that massive ancient library of 600,000 volumes, we shipped for Joppa, finding here a very poor harbor. Palestine, like California, has but two seasons—the dry and the rainy. Securing an outfit of Arab horses and guides we chose to ride from Joppa to Turk-governed Jerusalem. The roadway was rough and mountainous, and seemingly very barren. Spending a few weeks in Jerusalem and its suburbs we passed over to the Dead Sea; up the River-Jordan to Snowy Hermon; down by Jacob's Well to Bethlehem, over which where shepherds were watching their flocks the angel appeared and sung of peace on earth and good will among men.

"Angels were the spirits of human beings. Angels and spirits are often used in the Bible synonymously, and they have appeared to mortals in all ages—to Socrates, to Dante, to Joan of Arc, to the Fox sisters, at Hydesville, N. Y. The Scriptures abound in spiritual manifestations. Paul, referring to them, mentions 'the discerning spirits'—that is clairvoyants. Neither God nor his laws have changed. Ancient and modern Spiritualism are in perfect accord. Many of the most eminent men today, after critical investigations, have become Spiritualists, such as Sir William Crookes; Alfred Russell Wallace, pensioned by Queen Victoria on his great scientific attainments; W. T. Stead, of the London Review of Reviews; Professor Hyslop, of the Columbia University.

"I once had the pleasure of sitting in a spiritual seance in Paris with the illustrious Victor Hugo. The distinguished late T. J. Hudson, in his 'Law of Psychic Phenomena,' page 206, says: 'The man who denies the phenomena of Spiritualism today is not entitled to be called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant, and it would be a hopeless task to attempt to enlighten him.'

"Spiritualism gives us a present and positive demonstration of a future conscious existence, assuring us that this life determines the beginning or condition of the next stage of existence. The purer and more Christ-like in this life are the happier in the next. And pure Christianity and true Spiritualism must stand or fall together."

LOOKING AHEAD.

The thrush has flown from the woodland,
And I do not hear her sing,
But I comfort myself with the knowing
That she will return next spring.

The rose has gone from the garden,
She withered and died too soon,
But I comfort myself with the knowing
That she will return next June.

The daisy has fled from the meadows
And the uplands are brown and sere,
But I comfort myself with the knowing
The daisy will come next year.

Moses and the Prophets.

Theological Germany is greatly agitated at present by the claim that Moses and the Prophets got their inspiration from Egyptian and Indian Mythology. So says a writer in the Chicago Tribune.

Where did Moses and the prophets get their holy scriptures? Did they crib from Egyptian mythology? Is a large part of the "Old Testament" a rehash of ancient Egyptian sagas?

All theological Germany is astir over a book, "Egypt and the Bible," which Herr Voelter, a German professor, has just published, wherein he draws striking parallels between what he terms, "the alleged history of the forefathers of the Jews" and the most ancient legends current in the land of the Pharaohs. In these latter, he declares, are seen the counterparts of Adam, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, of Esau, Joseph, and other "Old Testament" characters.

Moses, it is declared, found the basis and inspiration for his writings in the traditions and sacred books which he had studied in Egypt, which were in their turn, largely revivals of Hindoo legends on God and creation; instituted priests, prescribed sacrifices and their manner, and in a few civil and religious laws laid the foundation of a new society, "a Hindoo emanation passing through Egypt." Egypt, from its geographical position, was necessarily one of the first countries to be colonized by Indian emigration, and one of the first to receive the influence of that antique civilization which has radiated even to us; in her castes, language, laws, and literature Egypt was one vast emanation from India, mother of the human race, cradle of all our traditions.

Moses Traced Back to India.

Moses himself is traced in name to India. The philosopher who gave to India her political and religious institutions was named Manu. The Egyptian legislator who learned of him received the name of Manes. A Cretan who visited Egypt to study the institutions, with which he wishes to endow his country and history, preserves his memory as Mines. Lastly, the liberator in Egypt of the servile of Jew founds a new society and is named Moses.

Manu, Manes, Mines, Moses; their similarity betrays unity of derivation from Sanscrit with the slight variations of different periods and of the different languages in which they were written.

To begin with the beginning of Moses' story, he announced that "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth"; then "The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep; and the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters."

The vedas, the four oldest books of the Hindoo religion, say "The supreme being alone existed; afterwards there was a universal darkness; now the watery ocean was produced; then did the creator, lord of the universe, rise out of the ocean, and successively framed the sun and moon which govern the day and night, whence proceed the revolutions of years." It is thus seen that chaos, darkness, water, and light follow precisely in the order of the Mosaic narrative.

Ancient Picture of Adam's Fall.

In the temple of Osiris, at Philae, Egypt, which is computed to belong to an age anterior to the era of Abraham, and long before the publication of the Pentateuch or books of Moses, is a tablet representing the whole scene of the temptation and fall. The tree is exhibited, the man and woman stand by with the fruit in their hands, the serpent erect and winged. Above the tree is the unmistakable word, "The Pomegranate." This rounded, handsome fruit, as big as an orange, as sweet to the taste as it is pleasant to the eye, fitly represents the Genesis description of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil—"good for food and pleasant to the eyes."

In Sanscrit Adam becomes Adima, "The first man," while Eve is "Heva," "What completes life."

Hindoo Version of the Expulsion.

"Adima," as the Hindoo story goes, "threw himself weeping upon the naked sands, but Heva came to him and threw herself into his arms, saying: 'Do not despair; let us rather pray to the author of all things to pardon us.'

"And as she thus spoke there came a voice from the clouds, saying: 'Woman, thou hast only sinned from love to thy husband, whom I commanded thee to love, and thou hast hoped in me. I pardon thee, and him also, for thy sake! But you may no more return to the abode of delight which I had created for your happiness. Through your disobedience to my commands the spirit of evil has obtained possession of the earth. Your children, reduced to labor and to suffer by your fault, will become corrupt and forget me. But I will send Vishnu, who shall incarnate himself in the womb of a woman, and shall bring to all the hope and the means of recompense in another life, in praying to me to soften their ills.' They arose consoled, but ever after subjected by painful labor to obtain their subsistence from the earth.

Egyptians Chronicled the Flood.

The Egyptian recognition of the fact of the deluge is to be found not only in ancient story, but in names, sites, and temples. The temple of Osiris was at Theba, or Thebes, in Egypt. Theba is a Hebrew name for ark. In the religious ceremonials of this deity a ship formed the prominent object, and was carried about in religious processions. Osiris, the chief god of ancient Egypt, was so named as "the many-eyed." His symbol was an eye and a scepter, emblems of omniscience and omnipotence. Typhon was represented as having formed an ark of beautiful workmanship. He invited Osiris to enter. Typhon shut him in and threw the ark upon the sea, but it was cast ashore by the waves.

Noah also finds a prototype in the Egyptian Saturn, who was born on the ocean. A ship has ever been his symbol, and he is represented as the common parent of mankind. He had three sons, Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto, amongst whom was divided the earth. To Jupiter was assigned the land, to Neptune the sea, and to Pluto the region of the lost. The Egyptians styled one of his sons Ammon, who, it was said, made his old father drunk with honey mead and in that state bound and mutilated him. Thus the reference to the mysterious deed of the father of Canaan.

Vedic Version of the Deluge Like Ours.

An abridged Vedic version of the deluge reads that "according to the Lord's prediction the earth became peopled and the sons of Adima and Heva grew so numerous and so wicked that they could no longer agree among themselves. They forgot God and his promises and ended by wearying him with the clamor of their bloody quarrels. The Lord then resolved to inflict upon his creatures a terrible chastisement, which should serve as a warning to survivors and to their decendants."

Vaiwasvata, a virtuous man, was then warned of the disaster by a fish. "The globe is about to be submerged, and all that inhabit it shall perish, for behold the wrath of the Lord shall breathe upon the clouds and the seas, to charge them with the chastisement of this corrupt and wicked race, who forget their origin and the law of their God. Your fellow creatures can no longer contain their pride, and even dare to defy their creator, but their offenses have reached the foot of Brahma's throne and Brahma is about to make known his power.

"Hasten then to construct a vessel in which you shall embark with all your family.

"You will take also the seeds of every plant and a couple of each species of animals, leaving all such as are begotten of vapors and rottenness—for their principle of life does not emanate from the great soul.

"And you will wait with confidence."

Vaiwasvata's Voyage Like Noah's.

Vaiwasvata hastened to obey his instructions and shut himself with his family in the ship, together with the seeds of plants and pairs of all animals. When the rain began to fall and the seas to overflow a monstrous fish, armed with a gigantic horn, came and placed itself at the head of the ship, and Viawasvata, having attached a cable to the horn, the fish darted forth to conduct and guide the ship in the midst of all the unchained elements.

And after days and months and years, when the work of destruction was completed, and the elements were calmed, the navigators, always guided by their mysterious leader, landed on the summit of the Himalayas.

"It is Vishnu that has saved you from death," said the fish, on leaving them. "It is at his prayer that Brahma has pardoned humanity—go, now, repeople the earth and accomplish the work of God."

Was Adjigarta Hindoo Abraham?

According to the Hindoo chronology the deluge occurred at the end of the Twapara-Yuga, that is, the third age of the world's existence, and in the following age lived Adjigarta, the grandson of Vaiwasvata, who is credited with suggesting to Moses the story of Abraham. His wife was the beautiful Parvady. Their herds were the largest and best tended; their harvests of rice, of small grains, and of saffron, were always the finest.

"But one thing was wanting to their happiness. Parady had given him no child. Vain her pilgrimage to the sacred waters of the Ganges, vain her numberless vows and prayers.

"When one day Adjigarta took a young red goat, the finest of the herd, and went to a desert mountain to sacrifice it to God, as with flowing tears he prayed. As he lay with his face to the earth, groaning and imploring God; a voice which sounded from the clouds made him tremble, and he distinctly heard these words: 'Return to thy house, Adjigarta, the Lord has heard thy prayer, and has had pity on thee.'

"The child received the name Viashagana. Parvady had afterwards many daughters who were the ornaments of the house for their beauty, but God gave her not another son. As the child approached its twelfth year his father resolved to proceed with him to offer commemorative sacrifice on the mountain where the Lord had before granted his prayer.

Starts to Sacrifice His Son.

"Having reached the mountain they set about gathering wood for the sacrificial pile; but while so occupied the goat, which they had tied to a tree, broke its rope and fled. Then said Adjigarta: 'Behold here is wood for a pile, but we have no longer a victim; and he knew not what to do, for they were far from any habitation, and yet he would not return without accomplishing his vow.

"The voice of Brahma was heard as it said: 'Thou shalt immolate the son that I have given thee on this pile—such is my will.'

"On hearing these words Adjigarta was seized with profound anguish; he sat himself down upon the sands, and tears flowed abundantly from his eyes.

"'O, Parvady,' he exclaimed, 'what wilt thou say when thou shalt see me return alone to the house and what can I answer when thou shalt demand of me what has become of thy first born?' And then he bemoaned himself until the evening, unable to resolve on accomplishing the grievous sacrifice. Nevertheless he dreamed not of disobeying the Lord. Having gathered the wood and constructed the pile, with a trembling hand he bound his son, and, raising his arm with the knife of sacrifice, was about to cut his throat when Vishnu, in the form of a dove, came and sat upon the head of the child.

"'O, Adjigarta,' said he, 'cut the victim's bonds and scatter the pile; God is satisfied with thy obedience, and thy son by his courage hath found grace before him. Let the days of his life be long, for it is from him that shall be born the virgin who shall conceive by divine germ!'

"Adjigarta and his son offered long thanksgiving to the Lord; then, the night having come, they retraced their homeward way, discoursing of these wonderful things, and full of confidence in the goodnes of the Lord."

When proofs in detail, such as these, accord with the aggregate, they are taken as evidence of the conclusion that all ancient traditions had a common origin, of which the substructure should be sought in the myths of the extreme East. To study India, according to Voelter, is to trace humanity to its sources.

Peace is the virtue of civilization; war is its crime.—Victor Hugo.

THE ONLY WAY TO SUCCESS.

An Exceptionally Interesting Lecture by Spirit John Pierpont, Through the Mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley, Delivered Before the First Association of Washington, D. C.

"There is but one way from ignorance to knowledge, but one way from error to truth, one way from discord to harmony, from hate to love. There is only one way over the highways, through the fields, or over the mountain heights toward that which is supreme.

"We may ask, What is the way? Is it high and broad and grand and straight? or, is it narrow and hedged about by such restrictions and conditions that only a few can find it?"

There is but one way from ignorance to knowledge, but one way from error to truth, one way from discord to harmony, from hate to love. There is only one way over the highways, through the fields, or over the mountain heights toward that which is supreme.

WHAT IS THE WAY?

We may ask, What is the way? Is it high and broad and grand and straight; or is it narrow and hedged about by such restrictions and conditions that only the few can find it?

In olden times it was said, "Broad is the way that leads to death," but while this was interpreted as meaning the death of happiness, of goodness, of all that belongs to eternal existence, and we were told that the road to everlasting life and happiness was narrow and hedged in, yet in the present day we learn and realize that the road to death is only the road to eternal life—death of things physical—death of things carnal—the dissolution of that which belongs merely to the material state dissolving into the elements of nature; realizing that which is eternal, abiding, spiritual; giving it freedom to rise onward to other states, to higher fields of exploration, to grander spheres of unfoldment, to beautiful conditions of advancement and mental and spiritual growth.

Broad is the way that leads to such death as that, the death or dissolution of all that binds and cramps. But such a road must be found through self-effort and self culture, and the growth of that which is of the spirit, else the entity will not find the highest and the purest of all things in life. The one way or one road to that which is highest and best must be found by every individual for himself. Others may assist in the work, others may give a little guidance and advice and information how one may grow and how the true pathway may be found, but the journey must be made by every individual for himself; no one can take him over that pathway; no one can bear you as a burden along the road; each must so unfold in his perceptions and his consciousness of that which is fitting and good and true as to make himself strong to perceive the road and powerful enough to pursue it for his own advantage and in order that he may find the goal.

ATTRACTIONS OF THE WAY.

Sweet and beautiful are the flowers that grow along the way; bright is the light that streameth downward upon that path. It is the path of right. it is the path of study, the path of self-improvement; that which with all that it has to show and to give to the eager sudent, to each who desires to do right, will bring to the unfolding spirit such pleasures and treasures of the soul, such treasures for heart and brain, as will compensate him for every step which he may take.

Perhaps the way may prove devious and winding to your feet; it may at times be beset with thorns and briars, with sharp stones, and it may lead over rugged places, but as you go on and on making new efforts to overcome the obstacles, to reach onward through the tangles and the briars, you will find more of sweetness in the path, more of satisfaction, that which will appeal to your mind and to your soul life.

As you go forward you perceive new truths gleaming upon your mentality; you behold new pleasures of heart life coming with enduring affections to strengthen and brighten the way. You find that it is after all a beautiful road, this road of right doing, this road of right living.

Traveling that pathway, you ask for truth. You do not wish to be deceived upon any subject, upon any point that appeals to your natures, so you seriously and earnestly ask for truth; you seek for it; you desire that the error shall flee from your mind and that only the true things shall be revealed to you. As you go forward in the path, more and more of truth is perceived. You ask that error may be banished, that folly may flee from you, and, as you press onward in the path of right, folly does flee, it is left behind you, and ignorance is banished, its shadows are removed, for you are walking in the light.

WALKING IN SPIRITUAL LIGHT.

By walking in the light of this right living and right doing, receiving the rays of illumination from spiritual sources on high; you are indeed gaining in knowledge; you are acquiring wisdom, and it is becoming a part of your natures. The true way, the only way through which one may profit by his experiences and gain the best of unfoldment for himself and by which he may help his fellow men, is by walking in the light, the spiritual light which "never was on land or sea" as a demonstration of physical power; the spiritual light not revealed through external senses and by material methods but borne in upon the spirit from the great sea of light and splendor in this universe.

WALKING IN THE SPIRITUAL LIGHT YOU ARE ABLE TO INTERPRET MANY MESSAGES WHICH COME TO YOU THROUGH THE AVENUES OF LIFE THAT CANNOT BE EXPLAINED IN ANY OTHER WAY.

Sorrows and trials come to the soul and press heavily like burdens upon the human heart in its passage through this material world. Tribulations and anxieties, cares and responsibilities, various states of suffering come to mind and body while traversing this plane of mortal life and unless one can learn to walk in the path of right—right thought, right deed, right perception and aspiration—he will not be able to understand why these experiences so press upon him; but when he enters the pathway and perceives mentally and spiritually with the inner sight, with the natural intuitions, that great light and the magnificence of spiritual power which is pressing upon him and illuminating his way, he will then be able to ponder more clearly, to perceive more distinctly and to understand these messages of life which have come to him through his varying experiences here upon the mortal plane. He will be able to turn backward in thought and dwell upon some particular experience of discipline which at the time pressed heavily upon him. It was severe to him, it was painful to him, he drew back from it and tried to put it aside, not to face it, not to think upon it, but he was obliged to meet it, and it gave him misery, he has passed it, perhaps, but possibly it has left its shadow and its stain.

ILLUMINATED WITH THE SPIRITUAL LIGHT.

Now that he has come out of the byways and bogs of error and ignorance and superstition, or various conditions of wrong doing and wrong thinking into the pathway of right, and is illuminated by the spiritual light which never was on land or sea, he is enabled to read the message that the discipline brought to him—the lesson it was meant to convey; and having acquired wisdom along with his experience, he is enabled to see just where that experience gave him such information, such thought and such surroundings as to produce a lesson for his future guidance, therefore he learns the lesson, and he will not again be called on to pass through such a stage of bitterness and of distress because the lesson is learned and he has no need of it; ignorance is banished, at least on that particular point; error is of the past; he has found the truth. He is in the pathway that leads to greater light, the way that leads to higher thought, that which reaches out from the heights and highways of existence toward the grand, beautiful plains of Harmony and Peace, such as those who are in spiritual accord with themselves and their fellow-men alone can reach.

THE LESSON OF SUFFERING.

You, dear friends, may shrink from suffering; you may shrink from toil and from the conditions of discipline which lay burdens upon you. None of you like to suffer; none of you wish to bear pain; none of you desire to be pressed down and bruised and made to bleed by conditions that are hard and severe, and you cry out in the midst of your pain asking why these things should be placed upon you, and yet we find that while pleasure may be beautiful for a time, and prosperity brings to you perhaps all these material things of splendor which may be desired and which not only add to your comfort or health but supply the luxuries of life—while all these may seem to be very desirable and you enjoy them and crave them, and while many of them are beautiful and are a comfort to you, yet we find that true happiness, the sweetest, most beautiful comforts of life, the grandest exaltations, the purest and divinest upliftments, come to the human consciousness and into human experience through the discipline of pain, of sorrow and of tribulation.

SYMPATHY AND PAIN.

Sympathy itself is developed because of pain. There are those going through the world who boast that they have never known a day of sickness, and never suffered pain. As they have never known want they have never known what it is to desire and need something of the necessities of life, and they are not the truest-hearted, they are not the most tender in soul and earth life. While they may desire to be kind, and while they may give with what perhaps you may call the lavish hand, yet it is done mechanically; it is done with the outside but not with the spirit because the spirit has not known through mortal expression what all these things really mean to the human individual or to the human family.

But one who has suffered with pain, one who knows what it is to walk through the fires of tribulation, coming in contact with another individual who is now passing through deep waters or bearing the cross of pain and suffering, will have tenderness, the true sympathy; will give the sweetness of fellow-feeling; will because he must. It is surging from within him, given out in largeness and blessing that influence and that help which is almost, yea quite, divine.

He will, because he has walked over fiery plow-shares and knows what it is to have blistered and bleeding feet; he will, because he has suffered the need of the very necessities of life and knows what it is to want bread, drink, clothing and shelter, and so he will pour out a sympathetic influence and the thoughtfulness and fellowship which that sympathy brings will give to the sufferer a new impetus and fresh strength which will enable him also to pass over the fiery places and perhaps by and by reach the better way.

Not only is sympathy and kindly love developed best and sweetest through the processes of suffering, but so also are the elements of harmony, that sweet harmony belonging to the spiritual life This is unfolded through those conditions which of necessity must call for the exercise of sweet patience and of long suffering, and then, when these are developed and the elements illuminate the individual life, harmony plays like a musical cadence throughout the entire being, and the soul is lifted upon waves of melody to the higher spheres of thought and consciousness which bring it in contact with sweet spiritual influences and intelligences that are radiating through the atmosphere like gleams of light.

TEMPERED BY PAIN AND SORROW.

Thus are those who have passed through life's discipline tempered as by the processes and power of pain and sorrow; thus are they uplifted, provided they profit by their experiences through mental and spiritual discernment and growth.

There are very few in life who have suffered long and continuously, who have known the pains and the griefs of mortal or human existence, but what do in some measure profit by these experiences. We are told that "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin," and when you hear of some disaster or some suffering your sympathetic natures go out in fellow feeling to those who are distressed; but, had you never known anything of pain mental or physical, had you only passed through flowery beds of ease and lived lives of careless pleasure seeking for your own enjoyment and emolument, you would not feel that wave of compassion, that influence and element of sympathy and pity for your fellow beings, but you know and shrink from pain and when you feel that a fellow being is passing through suffering that you shrink from, you know what it is he suffers and you suffer mentally with him.

THE TRUE WAY.

The true way, as we have said at many times and in many directions, is that which leads onward IN THE PATH OF RIGHT, ALWAYS SEEKING HERE AND THERE ALONG THE ROAD FOR MORE KNOWLEDGE, MORE TRUTH, MORE ENLIGHTENMENT AND MORE WISDOM. Seeking for truth you shall find it. You can not expect that all of truth shall be revealed to you, because you are not ready to perceive or to understand it. You may not expect that all of knowledge is to be acquired in this little passage through the mortal life, because you are not unfolded sufficiently to comprehend it; nor need you expect to find or to attain all of wisdom, because only the omnipotent and omniscient can do that, and we are finite beings.

CONSTANT GAIN IN TRUTH AND KNOWLEDGE.

But passing along the way of life and seeking for truth, for knowledge, for wisdom, we shall constantly gain more and more of these, because we will grow more and more receptive to them. The man who passes along the same pathway seeking for gold will not go carelessly along and neglect many places and objects by the way, but he will search carefully, he will scrutinize every particle, he will look with discernment—he is seeking for some special thing and if it is to be found he intends to find it; so he who is really conscientiously, steadfastly seeking for truth and knowledge and wisdom will go about it in a careful manner. He will not carelessly neglect all or much of that which is by the way, but he will examine closely that which he perceives. He will scrutinize it with clear eye and observation in order to ascertain if what he seeks is to be found, therefore will truth and knowledge and wisdom be attained in some degree, because by seeking for it you place yourselves in position to attain these things. Therefore he who presses on in the path of right looking for that which is of the spirit, belonging to the higher conditions of existence, is finding the best way, the purest and the highest way toward the unfoldment of his own powers, toward the achievement of all that he undertakes to do.

THE WAY OF HIGHEST SUCCESS.

To attain success in life—the best success right here in this existence upon the mortal plane—there is only one way. The only way by which the highest and best success of any human life can be made is that straightforward way which knows no deviation from the path of rectitude, of honor and duty; that is the only way to success whatever you may undertake to do. If an individual desires to succeed in some business operation, or along some line of thought and effort which he knows will inevitably degrade himself because it will crowd and persecute, oppress or in some way injure his fellow-men, he is not in the straight and onward path. He has roamed into byways and into crooked places. He has come into a condition that will stultify his own nature and debase him in every respect. He may not show his intentions or his desires upon his countenance; his form may be erect and symmetrical; his face may shine; his eyes may glow with the light of physical health and with mental endowment; his fellow-men may perhaps think he is a prosperous man, a good man; that he is one to be honored and respected, and he may be able to conceal from their observation those interior thoughts and purposes which make for destruction or for unhappiness to his fellow-men, but nevertheless their mark is within, the scar will be made upon his spiritual selfhood. There will be that which will degrade and debase him. He is in crooked places. He is outside of the only way that leads to true success.

Though for a time he may seem to succeed; though he may gather lands and coin into his posession; though he may attain high worldly position and, perchance, fame, before the eyes of his fellow-men, yet that IS NOT SUCCESS; it is only the passing show which gives to him for a little while the glitter and the tinsel; enrolls him in garments which are perishable and which cannot be maintained, so that the seeming success is soon to fade away. He knows himself as he is.

His own intelligence tells him when he has done wrong; where he has overreached his neighbor; where he has crowded a fellow-being to the wall; how he has trampled over the rights and wants and means of human beings in his effort to reach his goal—wealth! He knows all this, and wherever he may be there must be some condition of dissatisfaction with self, some unrest within his interior life. He knows that he is not in the broad and open way that leads to happiness and peace; in that beautiful pathway where we may gather the blossoms of beauty, of sweetness and of light for the enrichment of our soul natures; those natures that will not be satisfied with tinsel and show, that cannot be pleased with things that concern only the carnal life. Those natures will demand recognition; they will ask that they may be given the things which they need, and as we walk along the broad highway of integrity and of honor seeking for truth, knowledge and wisdom, we shall gather up the blossoms that give peace and sweetness and light to the spiritual man.

DUTIES TOWARDS OUR FELLOW MEN.
